Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will answer the gentleman's question. The average duties that are levied in this bill amount to 22.40 per cent. The average cost of labor in the entire iron and steel industry is 19 per cent of its cost. Nobody will contend that the price paid for labor in this country is more than double the price paid for labor in Germany and England, our two real competitors. There is no use going into other countries, because they are not competitors. If that be the case, then one-half of the labor cost equals the difference between labor here and abroad. Ten per cent would equal the difference in labor cost at home and abroad. This bill gives on an average a tariff rate of 22 per cent.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama was asked a question as to whether the rates in this bill would equal the difference in the cost of labor here and abroad and he said he would answer the question. What did he say? That the average rates in the bill are 22 per cent, and that the average labor cost is 19 per cent, and that half of that would be less than 22 per cent. He does not say that it is a protective measure. He will not say that. It is made simply for revenue. The average cost of labor in making a ton of pig iron may be 9 per cent. The average cost of labor in making machine tools may be 40 per cent. Nine per cent may equal the difference between the cost of conversion in making pig iron, but an average of that kind would not do a man any good who was engaged as a skilled laborer in making machine tools.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; I will yield for a question now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. When the machine-tool trade sell a large portion of their product in the country of their principal competitor, does not that of itself demonstrate that there is no difference in the cost?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knows that machine tools sold abroad are sold because of their peculiar adaptability to certain lines of work, and because we make better machine tools in that line. In other lines we meet their competition, and we have to have the difference in the cost of production here and abroad to maintain our own factories. Right there I desire to say that I was surprised at the insinuation of the gentleman from Alabama that because some of these machine tools were made in Ohio that therefore the President might be inclined to look after them and to veto the bill. He knows that they are made all over the United States as well as in Ohio. Even my genial friend from Brooklyn [Mr. REDFIELD] tells about machine tools that he makes down in our State; and at the same time he tells about being over at the Pyramids and talking about the price of sewing machines in the Orient, when he meets a man over there and asks him what they sell sewing machines there for and is told so much. Of course he did not give us a history of the man or his name or anything like that, as he failed to do in similar illustrations, but nevertheless that enabled the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to come in here and say that they are selling sewing machines abroad for a third of what they are selling them here.

The gentleman says that the laborers get higher wages because of the labor organizations. The gentleman talks about labor organizations securing good wages. Why, gentlemen seem to think all they have to do is to organize and then, no matter whether the manufacturer gets his money back or not, that wages are bound to go up. A man can not pay higher wages here than his competitor pays unless he can get more out of his goods, unless that labor is protected. He has to have the money to pay the wages with; if he does not, his business will go down and he will fail and he will stop his factory. Well, that is a simple matter of economics that never seems to have entered the brain of my friend from Alabama. Suppose his people strike down there for higher wages and they are selling his staple made abroad for less than he can produce it. What will he say to the people who strike? He will say, "Well, I can not get the money to pay higher wages with." We do not pretend these things work automatically, but that you make up the difference in cost, and that is bound of itself and without any action it insures, on the part of the workman, an increase of his wages. A man has got to demand good wages, and not only that but often to have an organization behind him to get the higher wages. I believe in labor organizations, but they can not get the higher wages unless the man who employs him gets the money with which to pay the higher wages. The gentleman talks about the immense amount of information he got from the Stanley committee. Well, it might help him to make a tariff-for-revenue-only bill; it might help him.

What difference does it make about "the average per cent of duty"? The average per cent of duty in the present law is much less than that under the Wilson law, and yet the Wilson law was not constructed on the line of protection, on the line of making up the difference in cost on the article, except as it was amended in the Senate, and on many articles the duty was too low and factories were closed. It is a matter of history. The average rate of duty in the present law is lower than that of any law in the history of the country, except for a period of five years only; lower than any average duty in the last 50 years—18.83 per cent for the year 1912—and yet it has not resulted in closing a factory, or injured any farmer, or prevented any man from working in a factory or on the farm. Why? Because we went to work to make up the difference in cost here and abroad in making up the duty and we worked out that according to the information we had then, which we studied and which seems to be all the information the gentleman has accumulated since, except that from the Stanley committee. According to the members of that committee, they did not go into this question as to the difference in wages and cost of goods. He speaks about the census work. Well, the census work was more in the line of social conditions.

It was not the getting of piece prices or piece cost of labor with any of these people, but the weekly wage and what they had to pay out in order to live—the social conditions. It did not relate at all to the cost of goods; simply the daily wage, and you can not tell anything about the difference in the cost of labor until you get the cost per piece as we got it as far as we were able in the Ways and Means Committee in the limited time we had. We made a revision of the metal schedule that was according to the evidence and the difference of cost of wages. The Senate mutilated it in some particulars, some of which we had to accede to, but when the bill came from the committee to the House the metal schedule was as low as it could be made according to the information we had, simply making up the difference in the cost of wage.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman yesterday, as an illustration of his fairness, called up an old table on my wool bill, which I presented as a substitute here, and said that an expert had figured it out and the percentage was way up in the 60's or 70 per cent. The gentleman has not told the whole truth. The table he published in his former speech, and the expert said he could not get at a percentage of the duty on these women's and children's goods. Why? Because he did not know the amount of wool or the proportion of wool in those goods. That schedule was carefully drawn, and it allowed compensation equal to the value of the wool in those goods. Some of them had 50 per cent of wool, some of them less than that, and the gentleman had an expert figure it up as the average per cent of duty, figuring the duty on wool equal to the whole weight of the article, cotton and all, and comes in here and talks about fairness! When you take out the cotton and assess the compensatory only on the weight of wool, it is lower than his schedule on that very item of cheaper goods, as I demonstrated when the bill was before the House. And that was his alleged reason for not accepting that bill. The gentleman is mistaken. It was lower on other items than his bill, and the reason he could not accept it was because when the expert figured it out he figured all the cotton in the goods as wool and allowed a compensatory duty of 25 cents a pound on the wool and on the cotton, both contrary to the provisions of the bill and contrary to the practice under the bill if it became a law.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THAYER). The gentleman has consumed 12 minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] a little while ago in referring to the motives of the President in vetoing this bill did not, I think, make as fair a statement as he almost invariably does. The gentleman in so many words said that one of the principal reasons that led the President to veto this bill was because by it machine tools are placed on the free list and because machine tools are principally made in Cincinnati. Now, this statement is entirely unfair or else it illustrates the absolute lack of information which the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has upon that subject.

As a matter of fact, there is scarcely a more diversified industry in this country than the machine-tool industry. They are made—I would not like to say positively for fear of exaggerating, not having looked up the question for some time—but I think in nearly half of the States in this country. I know that they are largely made in New York, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Illinois, and Pennsylvania. A full hearing was given to gentlemen engaged in manufacturing machine tools before the Finance Committee of the Senate, they having been unable to secure a hearing before a committee of this House, and anyone who will take the pains to read those hearings will become convinced that there has been no more unjust, unreasonable, and absolutely foolish thing done in any of the tariff bills that have passed this House than the placing of machine tools upon the free list. Now, in the first place, why was it done? What theory is involved in placing this, one of the most highly finished products of American industry, upon the free list and leaving a considerable duty upon every single article that goes into their manufacture? It is not free trade, because a free trader would take the duties off of the raw material. It is not a tariff for revenue, because by putting the article on the free list you have destroyed the revenue. It is not protection, because the result would be to utterly destroy the industry in this country. It can not be justified by any known theory of tariff making. It is neither flesh, fowl, nor good red herring.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. With pleasure.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It was anticipated in writing the present law. We put gun barrels on the free list and left quite a duty on pig iron.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Gun barrels is a good argument to use in this instance. It is about as good an argument as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] awhile ago used, when he said that the tool steel was now in a combination. The gentleman would never have made that remark if he had known that tool steel and machine tools are as absolutely different one from the other as any two things can be.

Mr. STANLEY. The gentleman did not say tool steel. He said the Crucible Steel Co., a large maker of tool steel.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman said tool steel.

Mr. STANLEY. Can not the gentleman distinguish between the statement that a large maker of tool steel is in a combination and that steel tools are in it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman know what machine tools are?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What are machine tools?

Mr. STANLEY. A tool used in a machine, of course.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Absolutely not. It is nothing like it. Machine tools, I will say to the gentleman, because if he has not got the information it is time that he had it——

Mr. STANLEY. A tool used in making a machine is also a machine tool.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will tell the gentleman, so that he may have no further misapprehension about the subject. The gentleman says it is a machine that is used in making tools. Of course, it is no such thing, but it is not altogether remarkable that the gentleman from Kentucky should be wrong, considering the fact that the majority of the Ways and Means Committee have but a vague and hazy idea of what machine tools really are. I do not blame the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] for not being able to get an accurate definition.

I blame him for being able to give no definition at all. Even the Treasury Department officials have not yet fully decided what machine tools are. Generally speaking, they are ordinarily considered to be machinery for working metals, but they have also been held to include machines for woodworking, and machines for polishing stone, and for other purposes. Under these definitions it may be that you are going a good deal further by this proposition than you intended. If future decisions are going to hold that woodworking machinery is to come in free, for instance, you are going to damage other great industries that you have perhaps not contemplated.

There is no theory in the world under which this proposition can be justified. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has enunciated two theories under which it is proper to put a highly manufactured article on the free list and leave a duty on all the intermediate products. One is where it is a monopoly or protected by patents. How is it with the machine-tool industry, Mr. Speaker? There is no industry in this country in which there is sharper competition—competition in a very large number of the States in the Union. There has never been a suggestion of any combination. Out of the many millions invested in machine-tool concerns, I do not believe that there is one which has a capitalization of over a million dollars, and they run down to a very modest capitalization amounting in a very large number of concerns to not more than $25,000. It is perhaps the furthest away from a monopoly or a possible monopoly of any important industry in this country.

The other is where the article is largely exported, and the gentleman from Alabama says that machine tools have been and are now being exported in large quantities. Now, that is true to an extent, Mr. Speaker, but it is not true when you insinuate, as the gentleman from Alabama does, that its export is a very large proportion of its annual product. At the most, and under any figures, it is not much over 10 per cent, and the majority can not prove it to be otherwise.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the gentleman that I have the figures here since I started to make my speech showing the export of the machine-tool business. Last year there was sold to the domestic trade $40,000,000 worth. They exported $12,000,000 worth of machine tools, or an average of $1,000,000 worth a month, and their total importations were less than $200,000. That is the report of the Treasury Department.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I dislike very much to disagree with the gentleman, but the annual domestic production is very far in excess of $40,000,000. I disagree absolutely with the gentleman, but I do not want to dispute with him here. But leaving out that phase of the question, the fact is that machine tools were originally a purely American industry, and it is true that up to recent years the simpler kinds of machine tools, like shapers and drills and things of that sort, were largely exported. But it is also true that to-day not a single one of these simple machine tools is exported from this country, and, on the contrary, a very large number come in annually from Germany and other countries. The only exports to-day of the machine-tool industry are products of the very highest quality, the most difficult of machine tools to manufacture; and anyone who will take the trouble to examine closely into the matter in the hearings will find——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] give me two minutes more?

Mr. PAYNE. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. PAYNE. I will give the gentleman two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Anyone who will take the trouble to examine the hearings before the Finance Committee of the Senate will see by actual demonstration that to-day the Germans are in actual competition with us even in the very high qualities of machine tools. They are importing into this country, and with a duty of 30 per cent, precisely the same machine that is made in this country. What would happen if that duty were removed entirely?

It all comes down, gentlemen, to this proposition, that you are, by putting machine tools on the free list, absolutely coming down to the question of the wages of labor. You need not consider here the question of a reasonable profit to the manufacturer. You are getting down now to the difference between the wages here and abroad, and the result, and the only result, of free machine tools must be to utterly destroy the machine-tool industry of this country, or, at the very best, to reduce by 50 per cent the wages of the men employed in making them by those concerns which may perchance survive.

If it is to be the policy of the Democracy to penalize great American industries because, by American energy and enterprise, they have been able in the past, before other nations could find out their methods of manufacture, to export a reasonable amount of their annual product; if it is to be Democratic policy that those people, those Americans, are to be penalized for being successful, we must look forward with dismay to the time when this House shall have with it a sympathetic Senate and a sympathetic President, and shall be able to enact into law such measures as this, for then inevitably will our factories be transferred abroad and our workingmen relieved from further employment in this country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] if he has more than one speech?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD].

Mr. REDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, about two weeks ago my office received an inquiry from the city of Ghent, in Belgium, for certain machinery, upon which a price was asked. Belgium has its own supplies of coal and iron, and the cheapest-paid labor in Europe.

It did not occur to me that that was a serious obstacle against selling there. A price was quoted, and on last Monday the order was received and is now in process of execution. Since the order was received, I asked my officers if they had given to that man their lowest figure? They said no, because upon the first transaction it was not thought best to go to the extreme. Consequently, we have to-day quoted him 10 per cent lower than the price at which we sold him, and the present reduced price is as high or higher than the price in the American market. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] consume the balance of his time?

Mr. PAYNE. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. How much time is there remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Six minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I had 10 minutes and yielded 2 minutes. That left 8 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yielded two minutes more. He has six minutes remaining.

[Mr. CANNON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Alabama has three minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen on that side of the House are not willing to take our statement in reference to the condition of American labor. I wish to call attention to a statement in reference to the condition of American labor in the iron and steel industry, published in the minority report on the investigation of the United States Steel Corporation, signed by Hon. AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER and Hon. HENRY G. DANFORTH. (H. Rpt. 1127, pt. 2, 62d Cong., 2d sess.)

The labor situation in certain manufacturing departments of the steel industry has always been bad, and to-day is bad. As a rule in the plants of the corporation conditions are better than in the plants of the independents. In rolling mills and the blast furnaces men are often required to work or at all events remain on more or less exacting duty for 12 hours a day for 7 days in the week. Incredible as this may seem, the fact is indisputable.

This is the statement published in the records of this House within the last month from the gentlemen on that side of the House, and yet your President and you gentlemen who stand by the old time, standpat Republican principles are insisting that you must maintain this tariff, not for protection to the American manufacturer, but that you must uphold labor conditions in the iron and steel business; labor conditions that you have been protecting by a Republican tariff since the Civil War, and gentlemen on your own side of the House state that these conditions are indefensible. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Illinois has stated on this floor to-day that I am not in favor of passing this bill. The gentleman from Illinois is not sincere in that statement. He makes it in the heat of debate. He would not challenge the fact that I am not fairly representing my constituency when I vote to reduce the duties in the iron and steel schedule. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have only two minutes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Alabama took up half of the time of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. While the gentleman desires the passage of this bill, if he will be honest with himself he must confess that he never expected that it would be vitalized into law, and never would have introduced it if he supposed that it would be vitalized into law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it was my duty as chairman of this committee to endeavor to get honest legislation for the American people written on the statute books of this country. Until yesterday I admit that I had a doubt as to whether we could pass through the Senate of the United States bills overriding the veto messages, but a new light has broken on Congress, a light that has been reflected from the sentiment of the great masses of the American people, and yesterday we saw it exemplified and voiced by gentlemen on that side of the House through the passage over the President's veto of the bill revising the duties on wool and wool manufactures. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I wish to call attention to another feature of the high protective policy and to the demand of consumers for consideration in connection therewith. Under the cover of high duties combinations in the industries covered by the metal schedule of the tariff act have grown up and taken control of our home markets. Exorbitant prices are being exacted of domestic consumers. Many American goods are sold cheaper abroad than at home. Thus, our citizens who have generously taxed themselves for the benefit of these industries are by them seriously oppressed. Many domestic industries because of prevailing conditions are weakened and discouraged. Unprotected exporters, whether manufacturers or farmers, are compelled to pay higher prices for materials, machinery, and supplies than are paid by their foreign competitors. Hence, instead of encouraging our home industries, the protective policy is encouraging foreign industries. Largely for this reason many important manufacturing establishments founded and carried on by American capital have in recent years been located abroad instead of in the United States. In a recent English publication entitled "Sixty Years of Progress and Fiscal Policy," by Brassey, I find the following suggestive statement:

> The Singer Sewing Machine Co. has established itself at Kilbowie, near Glasgow, the Babcock & Wilcox Co. at Renfrew. The Westinghouse Co. has erected enormous works in the Manchester district. The Chicago Tool Co. has built a plant at Fraserburgh, near Aberdeen. The Western Electric Co., of Chicago, is interested in extensive factories in London, Paris, Antwerp, and Berlin. The General Electric Co. has recently constructed a large new factory at Rugby, in England. The Hoe Co. is making printing presses in London, where also the American Linotype Co. is making machinery. The Draper Co. has built a textile-machinery works in Lancashire.

It is the conviction of those who have carefully investigated this matter that not less than $50,000,000 of American money is now invested in European plants devoted to the manufacture of American goods, including sewing machines, machine tools, boilers, engines, mining machinery, and so forth. Says a high Republican authority in commenting upon this condition:

> This will necessarily result in a large diminution of an export trade in American manufactures. Instead of making American electrical apparatus, cotton looms, all kinds of machine tools, etc., to ship abroad for sale, our manufacturers will increasingly produce these wares abroad for their foreign trade, and the statistics of our exports will be correspondingly reduced.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, as I was cut off for want of time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who have spoken on the bill may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all those who have spoken on the bill may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, as there seems to be other gentlemen here who want to express themselves on the bill, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen in the House may have five legislative days in which to extend remarks on the subject of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days to extend remarks on the subject of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is not the gentleman included in the blanket permission?

Mr. MANN. Yes; but that is limited to five days, and I do not know whether I can do it within that time or not.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD for the same reason.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MANN, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON, ask unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD without being confined to the five legislative days. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask if this includes the discussion of the rule for Calendar Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it does. Is there objection to the request of the gentlemen from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration agree to pass this bill the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 174, nays 83, answered "present" 2, not voting 132, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Mr. Clerk, call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he answered "Yea."

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have my vote recorded.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman vote when his name was called?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I voted on the first roll call, but they did not get my name.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's name has been recorded.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in his seat and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I was in my seat and listening.

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. HAUGEN, and he answered "Yea."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know how I am recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to cast my vote in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. FOWLER. I had just stepped out on a call, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Maryland rise?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with my colleague, Mr. PARRAN. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker is not certain whether he should ask unanimous consent to read a carefully prepared opinion on a parliamentary question, on a day subsequent to rendering a brief opinion on that question, but to be on the safe side he will do so. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has a precedent for that. Mr. Speaker CANNON did it once.

The Chair thinks that the question which was decided yesterday is of such far-reaching importance that he owes it to himself, as well as to the House and to future Speakers, to restate his opinion after an examination of the authorities. The parliamentary question in issue was this: On a roll call on passing a bill over the President's veto, in determining whether two-thirds have voted for it, should those answering "present" be taken into consideration or excluded therefrom?

The Chair has accepted the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], for whose knowledge of parliamentary law the Chair has very great respect, and that is to give a more elaborate opinion than just simply announcing a decision one way or the other. The importance of the question demanded and has received closest examination. The situation about it is this: Touching the passage of a bill over the President's veto, or the attempt to pass it, the constitutional provision is as follows:

> Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approves, he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated—> who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that House it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively.

The Chair could very well adopt the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as his opinion. The Chair takes it that no Speaker is ever going to render an opinion for partisan political effect which he can not stand by whenever the same kind of a question arises again, whether it goes against his political friends or foes.

The first point in the excerpt from the Constitution which attracts attention in this case is "if after reconsideration two-thirds of that House," and so forth. There have been all sorts of contentions about what constitutes "the House." Some gentlemen of eminent ability have contended it means all the Members elect and qualified; others have contended it means simply a quorum, and several decisions, not on this particular question of passing bills over the President's vetoes, but on questions practically involving the same question as to the count, have been rendered, but finally it has come to be accepted that "the House" does not mean all the Members elected and qualified, but only a quorum. The full membership of the present House is 394, a quorum of which is 198; but there are four vacancies, reducing the membership to 390, of which 196 constitute a quorum. That is proposition No. 1.

The second constitutional proposition is stated in these words:

> But in all such cases the votes of both Houses shall be determined by the yeas and nays—

That is, in veto cases—

> And the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall to be entered on the Journal of each House respectively.

The Chair answered the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] inadvisedly, that the names of those present ought to be in the Journal. The Constitution does not require any such thing. The Chair has investigated that matter since, and it is entirely immaterial whether the names of the 10 gentlemen who answered "present" go in the Journal or not. The Constitution does not provide for a Member voting "present," but the rules of the House, in order to eke out a quorum, have provided that they can vote "present." They have to answer "aye" or "nay" on the roll call in order to be counted on passing a bill over the President's veto. That is the requirement of the Constitution, and if the contention were on a proposition which required only a majority it would be the same way. In fact, that is one unvarying rule of procedure whenever the roll is called on any proposition. The Chair announces: "So many 'ayes,' so many 'nays,' so many 'present'; the 'ayes'—or 'nays,' as the case may be—have it." Those voting "present" are disregarded, except for the sole purpose of making a quorum.

In this case 174 Members voted "aye," 80 voted "no," and 10 answered "present"; 174 plus 80 equal 254, a quorum, without counting the 10 who answered "present." One hundred and seventy-four is more than two-thirds of 254.

These 10 gentlemen were here simply for the purpose of making a quorum. It is clear that to count them on this vote would be to count them in the negative, and the Chair does not believe that any such contention as that is tenable. The Chair holds that, if there is a quorum present on a roll call to determine whether the House will agree to pass a bill over the President's veto, and two-thirds of those voting vote "yea," that is sufficient and is a compliance with the constitutional requirement.

To show that the view expressed by the Chair is correct, there is a fact dehors the record which tends to clarify the situation. Of the 10 Members who answered "present," 7 were Democrats and 3 Republicans. Of course every one of the 7 Democrats, if not paired, would have voted "aye"; so that to have counted in the 7 Democrats who answered "present" in determining the two-thirds would have put them down as voting "no," precisely opposite to the way they would have voted, which amounts to a reductio ad absurdum.

The Chair has hunted up the authorities. There are several of them, but there is no use in citing but one. I take it that political friend and foe alike will admit that when the Hon. Thomas B. Reed expressed an opinion he expressed it so one could understand what it meant, and therefore I will read section 7027, volume 5, Hinds' Precedents, and this is the headline or syllabus:

The vote required on a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution is two-thirds of those voting, a quorum being present, and not two-thirds of the entire membership. On May 11, 1898, Mr. John B. Corliss, of Michigan, called up the joint resolution (H. Res. 5) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators of the United States.

The question being taken on the passage of the resolution, there were—yeas 184, nays 11, and the Speaker announced that the joint resolution was passed, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof.

Mr. EBENEZER J. HILL, of Connecticut, called attention to this clause of the Constitution:

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States shall call a convention for proposing amendments"; and made the point of order that the vote required was two-thirds of the entire membership, not two-thirds of a quorum.

Mr. Speaker Reed said:

"The question is one that has been so often decided that it seems hardly necessary to dwell upon it. The provision of the Constitution says 'two-thirds of both Houses.' What constitutes a House? A quorum of the membership, a majority, one-half and one more. That is all that is necessary to constitute a House to do all the business that comes before the House. Among the business that comes before the House is the reconsideration of a bill which has been vetoed by the President; another is a proposed amendment to the Constitution; and the practice is uniform in both cases that, if a quorum of the House is present, the House is constituted, and two-thirds of those voting are sufficient in order to accomplish the object. It has nothing to do with the question of what States are present and represented, or what States are present and vote for it. It is the House of Representatives in this instance that votes and performs its part of the function. If the Senate does the same thing, then the matter is submitted to the States directly, and they pass upon it.

"The First Congress, I think, had about 65 Members, and the first amendment that was proposed to the Constitution was voted for by 37 Members, obviously not two-thirds of the entire House. So the question seems to have been met right on the very threshold of our Government and disposed of in that way."

It turned out in the evolution of things that when Mr. Speaker Reed made his ruling that he had the right to count the Members who were present and who would not vote, it created a great deal of bitterness, the question finally got into the Supreme Court of the United States, and in the case of the United States v. Ballin, in One hundred and forty-fourth United States Supreme Court Reports, this question is gone into, Mr. Justice Brewer rendering the opinion of the Supreme Court. He gives a statement of the matters in controversy:

That the Journal of the House of Representatives shows the facts attending the passage of the act of May 9, 1890, thus:

"The Speaker laid before the House the bill of the House (H. R. 9548) providing for the classification of worsted cloths as woolens, coming over from last night as unfinished business, with the previous question, and the yeas and nays ordered.

"The House having proceeded to the consideration and the question being put,

"Shall the bill pass?

"There appeared: Yeas 138, nays 0, not voting 189.

"The said roll call having been recapitulated, the Speaker announced, from a list noted and furnished by the Clerk, at the suggestion of the Speaker, the following-named Members as present in the Hall when their names were called and not voting, viz:

(Here follows an aphabetical list of the names of 74 Members.)

"The Speaker thereupon stated that the said Members present and refusing to vote—74 in number—together with those recorded as voting—138 in number—showed a total of 212 Members present, constituting a quorum present to do business; and, that the yeas being 138 and the nays none, the said bill was passed."

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court. He said inter alia:

Two questions only are presented: First, was the act of May 9, 1890, legally passed; and, second, what is its meaning? The first is the important question. The enrolled bill is found in the proper office, that of the Secretary of State, authenticated and approved in the customary and legal form. There is nothing on the face of it to suggest any invalidity. Is there anything in the facts disclosed by the Journal of the House, as found by the general appraisers, which vitiates it? We are not unmindful of the general observations found in Gardner v. The Collector (6 Wall., pp. 499, 511), "that whenever a question arises in a court of law of the existence of a statute, or of the time when a statute took effect, or of the precise terms of a statute, the judges who are called upon to decide it have a right to resort to any source of information which in its nature is capable of conveying to the judicial mind a clear and satisfactory answer to such question; always seeking first for that which in its nature is most appropriate, unless the positive law has enacted a different rule." And we have at the present term, in the case of Field v. Clark (143 U. S., p. 649), had occasion to consider the subject of an appeal to the Journal in a disputed matter of this nature. It is unnecessary to add anything here to that general discussion. The Constitution (Art. I, sec. 5) provides that "each House shall keep a Journal of its proceedings"; and that "the yeas and nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the Journal." Assuming that by reason of this latter clause reference may be had to the Journal, to see whether the yeas and nays were ordered; and if so, what was the vote disclosed thereby; and assuming, though without deciding, that the facts which the Constitution requires to be placed on the Journal may be appealed to on the question whether a law has been legally enacted; yet, if reference may be had to such Journal, it must be assumed to speak the truth. It can not be that we can refer to the Journal for the purpose of impeaching a statute properly authenticated and approved, and then supplement and strengthen that impeachment by parol evidence that the facts stated on the Journal are not true, or that other facts existed which, if stated on the Journal, would give force to the impeachment. If it be suggested that the Speaker might have made a mistake as to some one or more of these 74 Members, or that the Clerk may have falsified the Journal in entering therein a record of their presence, it is equally possible that in reference to a roll call and the yeas and nays there should be a like mistake or falsification. The possibility of such inaccuracy or falsehood only suggests the unreliability of the evidence and the danger of appealing to it to overthrow that furnished by the bill enrolled and authenticated by the signatures of the presiding officers of the two Houses and the President of the United States. The facts, then, as appearing from this Journal, are that at the time of the roll call there were present 212 Members of the House, more than a quorum; and that 138 voted in favor of the bill, which was a majority of those present. The Constitution, in the same section, provides that "each House may determine the rules of its proceedings." It appears that in pursuance of this authority the House had, prior to that day, passed this as one of its rules:

"RULE XV.

"3. On the demand of any Member, or at the suggestion of the Speaker, the names of Members sufficient to make a quorum in the Hall of the House who do not vote shall be noted by the Clerk and recorded in the Journal, and reported to the Speaker with the names of the Members voting, and be counted and announced in determining the presence of a quorum to do business." (H. Jour., p. 230, Feb. 14, 1890.)

The action taken was in direct compliance with this rule. The question, therefore, is as to the validity of this rule, and not what methods the Speaker may of his own motion resort to for determining the presence of a quorum, nor what matters the Speaker or Clerk may of their own volition place upon the Journal. Neither do the advantages or disadvantages, the wisdom or folly, of such a rule present any matters for judicial consideration. With the courts the question is only one of power. The Constitution empowers each House to determine its rules of proceedings. It may not by its rules ignore constitutional restraints or violate fundamental rights, and there should be a reasonable relation between the mode or method of proceeding established by the rule and the result which is sought to be atttained. But within these limitations all matters of method are open to the determination of the House, and it is no impeachment of the rule to say that some other way would be better, more accurate, or even more just. It is no objection to the validity of a rule that a different one has been prescribed and in force for a length of time. The power to make rules is not one which once exercised is exhausted. It is a continuous power, always subject to be exercised by the House, and within the limitations suggested, absolute and beyond the challenge of any other body or tribunal.

The Constitution provides that "a majority of each (House) shall constitute a quorum to do business." In other words, when a majority are present the House is in a position to do business. Its capacity to transact business is then established, created by the mere presence of a majority, and does not depend upon the disposition or assent or action of any single Member or fraction of the majority present. All that the Constitution requires is the presence of a majority, and when that majority are present the power of the House arises.

But how shall the presence of a majority be determined? The Constitution has prescribed no method of making this determination, and it is therefore within the competency of the House to prescribe any method which shall be reasonably certain to ascertain the fact. It may prescribe answer to roll call as the only method of determination, or require the passage of Members between tellers and their count as the sole test, or the count of the Speaker or the Clerk and an announcement from the desk of the names of those who are present. Any one of these methods, it must be conceded, is reasonably certain of ascertaining the fact, and as there is no constitutional method prescribed and no constitutional inhibition of any of those and no violation of fundamental rights in any, it follows that the House may adopt either or all, or it may provide for a combination of any two of the methods. That was done by the rule in question, and all that rule attempts to do is to prescribe a method for ascertaining the presence of a majority and thus establishing the fact that the House is in a condition to transact business.

As appears from the Journal, at the time this bill passed the House there was present a majority, a quorum, and the House was authorized to transact any and all business. It was in a position to act on the bill if it desired. The other branch of the question is whether, a quorum being present, the bill received a sufficient number of votes; and here the general rule of all parliamentary bodies is that when a quorum is present the act of a majority of the quorum is the act of the body. This has been the rule for all time, except so far as in any given case the terms of the organic act under which the body is assembled have prescribed specific limitations, as, for instance, in those States where the constitution provides that a majority of all the members elected to either house shall be necessary for the passage of any bill. No such limitation is found in the Federal Constitution, and therefore the general law of such bodies obtains.

Summing up this matter, this law is found in the Secretary of State's office, properly authenticated. If we appeal to the Journal of the House, we find that a majority of its Members were present when the bill passed, a majority creating by the Constitution a quorum, with authority to act upon any measure; that the presence of that quorum was determined in accordance with a valid rule theretofore adopted by the House; and that of that quorum a majority voted in favor of the bill. It therefore legally passed the House, and the law as found in the office of the Secretary of State is beyond challenge.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the speech of Gov. Woodrow Wilson delivered at the meeting of the Federation of the Democratic Clubs, at Harrisburg, June 15, 1911, together with the introductory remarks made by the Hon. A. MITCHELL PALMER, a Member of this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREGG] asks unanimous consent to have the speech made by the Hon. Woodrow Wilson on June 15, 1911, at Harrisburg, Pa., with prefatory remarks by the Hon. A. MITCHELL PALMER, printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know if that speech was omitted from the book printed in the RECORD yesterday by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] including a whole lot of speeches?

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. I am not familiar with that fact.

Mr. MANN. It contained a half dozen or more speeches.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. If it is already printed I will not ask to have it reprinted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege, and ask that the Clerk read the article which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. How long is it liable to take?

Mr. LEVY. Only a few minutes.

Mr. MANN. What is it, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] rises to a question of personal privilege, and says it will take only a minute or two to read the clipping which he has sent to the Clerk's desk. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"COME OUTSIDE," SAYS LONGWORTH TO LEVY—BITTER DISPUTE ON FLOOR OF HOUSE OVER WOOL BILL LEADS TO CHALLENGE BEING HURLED AT NEW YORKER.

WASHINGTON, August 13.

NICHOLAS LONGWORTH and Representative JEFFERSON LEVY, of New York, had an altercation on the floor of the House to-day, during which Mr. LONGWORTH invited Mr. LEVY "to come outside with him," where they would settle their differences.

The trouble arose during the vote on the wool bill overriding the President's veto.

LEVY came into the Chamber late and, insisting on his right to have his vote for the bill recorded, told Speaker CLARK that he had been in the Chamber when his name was called but had not heard it.

"Why," exclaimed LONGWORTH, "I saw you coming in here just a minute ago, and it was after the roll call had been completed!"

"You are mistaken," said LEVY hotly. "I was in the Chamber as I have stated."

Walking toward LEVY, the Ohio Congressman, with flushed face, retorted, "I saw you coming into this Chamber just as I have said. Let us go outside and we can settle this question."

LEVY declined the challenge.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, that statement is untrue and unjust to my colleague from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] as well as myself. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, while I somewhat regret that the gentleman has seen fit to dignify such an utterly absurd story by rising to a question of privilege, I want to say his statement is absolutely accurate. Whatever the gentleman and I may have conversed about yesterday, it was a conversation absolutely private. The gentleman made a statement to me which I was not aware of before, and, of course, his word is not to be doubted. If I had issued an invitation for the gentleman from New York to "come outside" yesterday, it would have been for an entirely different purpose. [Laughter and applause.]

PRINTING OF REMARKS.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address delivered by my colleague, Mr. BRANTLEY, at Marietta, Ga., on the 12th day of August, 1912, at the unveiling of a monument to the late Senator Clay.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have a request of the same kind and will not object——

The SPEAKER. What is the request?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My request is to print in the RECORD the official statement as to the contest for seats in the Republican national convention of 1912, showing the disposition of them by the national committee, by the committee on credentials, and by the convention itself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLAYTON. Will this settle the title of President Taft to the nomination? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. No. We will settle that at the polls. [Applause on the Republican side.]

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference of Senate bill 3132, granting a pension to Deborah B. Roman, from the Committee on Pensions to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MANN. Is that a private bill?

Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. It is a Senate bill, but it is a private bill also. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE COMMERCE COURT.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter printed in the Philadelphia Ledger from the pen of Henry S. Drinker, jr., a brilliant young member of the Philadelphia bar, on the value of the Commerce Court. Mr. Drinker has already achieved an enviable reputation, both as a practitioner and publicist, and whatever he writes is well worthy of serious consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an article in a newspaper by a Philadelphia lawyer on the Commerce Court. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

[From the Philadelphia Public Ledger, Tuesday, Aug. 13, 1912.]

COMMERCE COURT OF GREAT VALUE—PHILADELPHIA LAWYER SHOWS PREJUDICE AGAINST IT TO BE UNWARRANTED, AND HOPES FOR SALVATORY ACTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

To the Editor of the Public Ledger:

SIR: During the past few years it has been the fashion to criticize the courts; the yellow newspapers, the muckraking magazines, and the office-seeking demagogues have vied with one another in denouncing judges and decisions. The public clamors for more.

The many haphazard laws that are continually being thrown into our statute books, filled with emasculating amendments and with ambiguous compromise provisions, are all blamed, not on the legislators who frame them and whose duty it is to put them in unassailable form, but on the judges whose duty it is to interpret them as they are written and not as the court thinks they should have been written.

The most popular outcry of all those directed against certain of the courts is that they favor the special interests against the common people.

No court has come in for more of this adverse criticism than the Commerce Court. Entirely aside from the proceedings against Judge Archbald—which every fair-minded person must admit form no argument against the existence of the court in which he happens to be a member—the public seems to regard the Commerce Court as having consistently opposed and hampered the Interstate Commerce Commission in its effort to secure justice for the public from the railroads. The general impression seems to be that the public would now be better off if the Commerce Court were abolished and we were to go back to the old system under which appeals—or proceedings in the nature thereof, which for convenience I will call appeals—were taken from the commission's decisions to the various district and circuit judges all over the country.

Influenced by public opinion, and with a desire to humiliate the present administration, Congress has practically agreed to abolish the Commerce Court. This it proposes to do not directly by repealing the act creating it, but indirectly by withdrawing from the general appropriation bill the funds with which to keep the court going. As the Constitution requires the continuance of all Federal judges in office during good behavior, the Commerce Court judges are to be retained as circuit judges. It is only the expense of the clerks, offices, etc.—less than $40,000 a year—that is to be done away with.

One way to judge whether the decisions of the Commerce Court have unduly favored the railroads is to read them and to compare them with the decisions in similar cases rendered by the circuit courts before the Commerce Court was created.

From 1887 until 1910 58 orders of the commission came before the circuit courts for review. Twenty-five of the 58 cases ended in the lower courts. In these the commission's order was sustained in 6 and reversed in 19. The other 33 were appealed to the Supreme Court, the lower court having decided 12 of them in favor of the commission and 21 against it. The Supreme Court decided the 33 cases appealed to it, 9 in favor of the commission and 24 against it. In the lower courts the decisions against the commission prior to 1910 were therefore 39 out of 58, or 67 per cent. Those of the Supreme Court 24 out of 33, or 73 per cent, and the ultimate decisions by both courts 43 out of 58, or 74 per cent.

The act provided expressly no appeal by a shipper who had been denied relief by the commission, and all the above decisions against the commission were therefore decisions in favor of the railroads and against the shippers.

Twenty-four final decisions by the Commerce Court have so far been officially reported. Of these 2 concerned merely the jurisdiction of the court, the validity of the commission's order not being passed on. Of the 22 remaining the commission's order was sustained in 12 and reversed in 9, the order in the other cases being sustained in part and reversed in part.

These 9 reversals by the Commerce Court, however, were by no means all cases in which the order of the commission had been in favor of a shipper and against a railroad. In 3 of the 9 the commission had decided in favor of the railroad, and it was the shipper who appealed to the Commerce Court to set the order aside. The latter court for the first time construed the act as providing for appeals by shippers as well as by railroads and annulled the 3 orders of the commission as unduly favoring the carriers.

Two more of the 9 reversals were cases in which the Commerce Court merely continued decrees previously issued by the circuit courts. These should not be charged against the Commerce Court in contrasting its decisions with the previous circuit court cases.

Out of 24 final decisions by the Commerce Court we therefore have but 4 cases, original with it, in which an order of the commission in favor of a shipper was held to be invalid.

The Supreme Court has recently passed on 5 of the decisions by the Commerce Court and has defined its jurisdiction fully and conclusively. Two of these were cases in which the Commerce Court had assumed jurisdiction to hear appeals by shippers to whom the commission had refused relief. The Supreme Court denied this power to the Commerce Court. This is doubtless a defect in the act, but certainly should not be blamed on the Commerce Court.

In 2 other cases the Supreme Court reversed the Commerce Court and in 1 sustained it.

Every new lower court expects to have the majority of appeals from its decisions reversed at first. The only way for a new court to determine whether or not it possesses a doubtful power is to exercise it, so that the question may be determined by the Supreme Court at once and conclusively. The Interstate Commerce Commission was reversed in all but 2 of the first 23 cases in which it sought the aid of the courts to enforce its order.

The Commerce Court has cut down the time from the filing of the suit with it to the final decision in the Supreme Court from two years and one month (the average of 16 cases) to less than a year. The most elaborate case decided by it—the Intermountain rate case—was begun in October, decided in November, and argued in the Supreme Court in February. It is not possible so to expedite these cases through the circuit courts under the old system, as the law has already provided 12 other classes of favored cases in these courts equally important to interstate commerce cases.

The railroad problems presented in these cases are usually novel, intricate, and technical. It is most essential to have them passed on by judges who are experts in this branch of the law and who, by experience, are already familiar with the practical aspect of the question presented. This is especially important in applications for temporary injunctions to restrain the commission's orders, in which there is usually no time for extensive study, evidence, or investigation.

The Commerce Court will soon develop into a body of trained experts, competent and able to decide quickly, and at the same time thoroughly, our most involved railroad questions. It will also prevent the great diversity of opinion possible by leaving these questions to the 126 different district and circuit judges scattered all over the land.

The original interstate commerce act and each of its nine successive amendments have presented new and difficult problems of law and procedure, which any cracker-box philosopher could doubtless solve offhand, but which will probably puzzle our best lawyers and judges for some time to come. The creation of the Commerce Court was a wise and helpful step in the solution of these problems. Its jurisdiction has been accurately defined, its period of apprenticeship is over, and it is prepared to do efficiently the useful work for which it is so well fitted and so necessary. To abolish it thus underhandedly, in the spirit of spite which Congress has adopted toward it, would be most unwise.

It is hoped that the President will stand firm and by his veto preserve a court which, if only allowed to continue until the present unreasoning agitation subsides, is sure to prove of the greatest value to the country.

HENRY S. DRINKER, Jr.

PHILADELPHIA, August 8, 1912.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a statement which appears in the New York Times of last Sunday regarding the illegal sale of poisoned meats in the States of New Jersey and New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD] asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an article from the New York Times on the illegal sale of poisoned meats in the States of New Jersey and New York. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not object, but I want to know if the gentleman desires to print in the RECORD that article from last Sunday's New York Times in connection with the speech which the gentleman made a few weeks ago?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an analysis of the Roosevelt speech in accepting the Progressive nomination for the Presidency. It will take about half of one column of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EVANS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an analysis of Col. Roosevelt's speech. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, by whom is the analysis made? Are we to commence now having printed in the RECORD or as documents the speeches of the various candidates for the Presidency, and insert also in the RECORD everybody's analyses and criticisms of those speeches?

The SPEAKER. Anybody can shut out any of these publications by objecting.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the request is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will please restate his request.

Mr. EVANS. The request I made is to insert in the RECORD one-half of a column of editorial from the Chicago Daily Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EVANS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a certain article from the Chicago Daily Journal. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, in order that I may include a speech delivered in Congress in 1848 by Andrew Johnson on the veto power.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CONNELL] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD, to include a speech made in 1848 by Andrew Johnson on the veto power.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if it was ever published before?

Mr. CONNELL. I have seen only one copy of it, Mr. Speaker, and that is in the Library over here, and by itself. I never saw it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech delivered by Attorney General Wickersham to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech delivered by the Attorney General. Is there objection?

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know how long that speech is. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. It is longer than the editorial that the gentleman will insert, and a great deal more valuable. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the so-called Hepburn bill on Federal incorporation, no copies being available; also the Hearst bill on Federal incorporation, and also to extend my remarks in any other way that I may see fit. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the Hepburn bill and the Hearst bill, and also in any other way that he sees fit. [Laughter.] Is there objection?

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by adding the Dillingham bill on immigration.

The SPEAKER. Let us take up these things one at a time. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]?

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. AKIN of New York. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the farewell address of George Washington. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the farewell address of George Washington. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. FOCHT. I would like the gentleman to withhold.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the reading of the President's message. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] later.

FUR-SEAL REGULATIONS (S. DOC. NO. 921).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Under the fur-seal convention entered into by the United States with Great Britain, Japan, and Russia on the 7th of July, 1911, which was approved by the Senate on July 24, 1911, and ratified on December 12, 1911, this Government agreed to pay the sum of $200,000 to Great Britain and the sum of $200,000 to Japan when the convention went into effect; and in my message to Congress of December 7, 1911, the attention of Congress was especially called to the necessity for legislation on the part of the United States for the purpose of fulfilling the obligations assumed under the convention. In view of the omission of Congress up to the present time to adopt any legislation to carry out the obligations of this Government under this convention, it becomes incumbent upon me again to call the subject to the attention of Congress and to urge the importance of enacting at the earliest possible moment, and at this session of Congress, the legislation necessary to enable this Government to make the payments to Great Britain and Japan as required by this convention, and also to fulfill its other obligations thereunder in so far as legislation is necessary for that purpose.

The international conference at which the convention under consideration was agreed upon was held at the urgent invitation of the United States, and the acceptance of that invitation by the other parties was secured only after protracted negotiations and at the repeated request of the United States, and, notwithstanding these circumstances, the United States is now the only one of the four parties to the convention which has failed to adopt any legislation for the purpose of giving effect to the obligations imposed by the convention.

In this connection I desire also to call briefly to the attention of Congress the question of the policy to be pursued by this Government with reference to the regulation of the fur-seal herds within the jurisdiction of the United States. The convention reserves to the United States the right at any time and from time to time to suspend altogether the taking of sealskins on the islands and shores within its jurisdiction, and to impose such restrictions and regulations upon the total number of skins to be taken in any season and the manner, times, and places of taking them as may seem necessary to protect and preserve the seal herd or to increase its number. This, therefore, is a subject which may properly be dealt with by Congress, and it is essential in dealing with it not only to fulfill the obligations imposed upon the United States by the letter and the spirit of the convention but also to consider the interests of the other parties to the convention, for their cooperation is necessary to make it an effective and permanent settlement of the fur-seal controversy.

Ever since the question of land killing of seals was subjected to scientific investigation, soon after the fur-seal controversy arose, nearly 25 years ago, this Government has invariably insisted throughout the protracted and almost continuous diplomatic negotiations which have ensued for the settlement of this controversy that the progressive diminution of the herd was due to the killing of seals at sea, and that if pelagic sealing was discontinued the polygamous habits of the seals would make it possible to kill annually on land a large number of surplus males without detriment to the reproductive capacity of the herd and without interfering with the normal growth of the size of the herd. The position thus taken by the United States has always been put forward and relied on by the United States in urging that an international agreement should be entered into prohibiting pelagic sealing; and it is obvious that one of the considerations which induced Great Britain and Japan to enter into this convention prohibiting their subjects from pelagic sealing was the expectation that the position thus taken by the United States was well founded, and that the skins falling to the share of those Governments from the land killing of seals, as provided for in this convention, would compensate them for abandoning the taking of sealskins at sea.

With these considerations in mind, I feel called upon to suggest the inadvisability of adopting legislation the effect of which is to require this Government to suspend altogether the killing of seals on land before it has actually been proved by the test of experience and scientific investigation that such suspension of killing "is necessary to protect and preserve the seal herd." The other Governments might justly complain if this Government should deprive them of their expected share of the skins taken on land by prohibiting all land killing unless we can show by satisfactory evidence that this source was adopted as the result of changed conditions which justify a change in our former attitude on the subject. In this connection it should be noted that, since the fur-seal business has been taken over by the Government and no private interests are now concerned in making a profit out of it, there is no urgent necessity for imposing by legislation stringent limitations upon land killing. Legislation on this subject, therefore, may well be postponed until after the enactment of legislation necessary to give effect to our obligations under this convention.

It must also be remembered that this convention runs for a fixed period of only 15 years and can be terminated at the end of that period by any of the parties, so that it is of the utmost importance that this Government should deal with this subject not only in a way which will satisfy the other parties interested that they are receiving their fair share of the increase of the herd resulting from the cessation of pelagic sealing but also in such a way as to enable this Government to demonstrate that the killing of the surplus male seals on land is not detrimental to the welfare of the herd. It is evident, however, that this question can not fairly be tested if land killing and pelagic sealing are both prohibited at the same time, and it would be most unfortunate if we should lose the opportunity, which is now presented for the first time by virtue of this convention, of demonstrating by the test of actual experience the soundness of the position maintained by us throughout the controversy and upon the soundness of which depends the permanent solution of this question in the manner provided for in this convention.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 14, 1912.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 21279) be reprinted with the amendments of the Senate numbered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] asks unanimous consent that the Post Office appropriation bill be reprinted with the Senate amendments numbered. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

DISTRICT COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 17595) to amend sections 1 and 118 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to object, but I do not think we ought to start in to do that on Calendar Wednesday. The gentleman can do it at any other time.

Mr. CLAYTON. I merely ask to disagree to the Senate amendments to the bill, and ask for a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. It will take time. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon it.

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not think it will take any time on this proposition.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the bill is. Two gentlemen have given notice of their desire to address the House, and there is a Democratic caucus called to meet at 5 o'clock.

Mr. CLAYTON. Not on this proposition, which is merely to disagree to the amendments of the Senate and ask for a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN. I object to taking up anything from the Speaker's table on Calendar Wednesday.

WIDOWS OF SPANISH WAR SOLDIERS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The unfinished business coming over from last Calendar Wednesday is the bill (H. R. 17470) to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection. The House will resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union——

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, before going into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill, inasmuch as this is a unanimous report and there is no minority report, I should like to know if we can agree with anyone who opposes the bill as to the time for general debate.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The unfinished business is the bill (H. R. 17470) to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAGO. Does the gentleman propose to talk on the bill under consideration?

Mr. MANN. The Chair can not tell that yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no information on the subject, but the Chair assumes that the gentleman from Kentucky will bring himself within the rule. Certainly if he transcends any rule, it is quite competent for the gentleman who propounds the inquiry to raise a parliamentary objection to the gentleman from Kentucky proceeding except in order.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I propose to take up the thread of the debate on the reports submitted by the committee investigating the affairs of the United States Steel Corporation where I left it at the last session at which this subject was under consideration.

I wish in the beginning to emphasize the fact that the secret of the power of large consolidations producing vast tonnages of heavy freight is to be found in their control of transportation facilities.

There has been much talk about amendments to the Sherman Antitrust Act and to other antitrust legislation, and there is pressing need of amendment of the Sherman Act, but you will never obtain relief from the dominance of such concerns until you have solved the question of their control of common carriers.

The secret of the Standard Oil's power was in its control of freight rates. The secret of the Beef Trust's power was in the operation of private cars. The steel corporation's power over the industry and its inordinate profits is to be traced to its dominance of transportation by land and water. The committee has recommended that no industrial association shall own a common carrier, that the steel corporation shall not own or operate any railroad or other quasi public corporation, and that the business of carrying and the business of producing freight shall be separate and distinct in this country now and forever; and when that is done the power of the steel corporation will be broken, and competition will be restored in the steel industry of the United States. [Applause.]

I call the attention of this House to one of the greatest steamship and railway systems in the world, controlled absolutely, as if it were a common tramway, by a single corporation.

Here is a map of the richest and most celebrated ore range in the world—the Mesabi Range. In this narrow strip, about 80 miles from Lake Superior, is a body of a billion tons of ore lying parallel with the surface of the earth and mined as if it were a great bed of gravel. I simply call your attention to this map in order that you may clearly understand this situation. In the large map the Mesabi Range is reproduced on a smaller scale.

It is in round numbers a thousand miles by the course of traffic from the ore beds to the coal fields of the steel corporation. The coke comes from the Connellsville region and the greater portion of the ore from the Mesabi Range. This ore is transported 80 miles from the range to Lake Superior, then across Lakes Superior, Huron, and Erie to what are called the lower Lake ports, and from thence transported to the furnaces in Ohio and Pennsylvania.

To give you some idea of the volume of this traffic, if you were to pile near this Mesabi Range all the cotton grown in the South, all the tobacco in Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and the Carolinas; all the corn, over 300,000,000 bushels of it, in Illinois; all the wheat of the Dakotas, it would not amount to 70 per cent of the tonnage transported in six months over the roads that run from the Mesabi Range to Lake Superior. You can take the tonnage of all the freight transported on the Ohio River, which is greater than that of any other stream on earth, and it will not equal more than one-third of the tonnage carried on these two short railroads. All the streams in the United States combined do not transport in a year a greater tonnage than comes from this range over the roads of the steel corporation alone.

All the foreign traffic in and out of New York Harbor is not equal to one-half of it. Thirty million tons of ore pass along the declivity of this muskeg swamp between the Mesabi Range and the head of Lake Superior. Forty-five million tons are transported over this course along the Lakes to the lower Lake ports.

Now, it is a marvel to me that this matter has escaped the attention of lawmakers.

I do not marvel so much that it escaped the attention of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as that the Federal Government should have permitted common carriers over whom it has absolute and plenary jurisdiction, that are dedicated from their very use and their very nature to the best interests of the public, to be operated by these great corporations as if they were private property. Not only that, but the harbors and the passes in these Lakes, at a cost of millions of money, have been dredged year after year, not for the ordinary traffic on the Lakes, but for the sole use and benefit of the steel industry, especially the United States Steel Corporation.

Let us see the effect of the ownership and operation of these roads on the industry generally. The average freight train in the United States every time it travels a mile makes $2.80. These roads travel a gradual incline; that is, the range is 900 feet above the lakes. Start a freight train on the range, it will almost run down of itself. A single locomotive carries on the Great Northern 125 cars of 50 tons burden each. One locomotive on the Duluth, Missabe & Northern, or the Duluth & Iron Range, will carry from 75 to 80 cars, and that means $50 for every mile they travel at 80 cents per ton.

The average earning for a mile of a road in a year for all other roads in this country is from $8,000 to $11,000. The average earnings of these roads is from $40,000 to $50,000. The average rate of profit for all roads in the United States, says Judge Prouty in a recent decision, is about 7 per cent, which is amply sufficient; but these roads earn from 100 to 350 per cent per annum.

I could carry the illustrations further. Take all the railroads in the United States, and their expenses are 66⅔ per cent of the gross receipts, 100 per cent more than the operating expenses of these roads.

Now, let us see the effect of this condition of affairs on the independents.

These roads carry the ore not only for the steel corporation but for their competitors. Until recently they charged 80 cents per ton; it costs less than 30 cents a ton to transport the ore. There is a difference of a dollar on 2 tons of ore, the amount necessary to make 1 ton of pig iron. That dollar is taken from the pockets of the independents and put into the pockets of the steel corporation. That means that it costs every other concern outside of the steel corporation shipping over these roads $2 a ton more to manufacture pig iron on account of the fact that the steel corporation owns them. It costs the United States Steel Corporation $3 a ton less to assemble its material at the blast furnace than it does the independents. I have here a statement of a skilled accountant, Mr. MacRae, who made an able and elaborate report to the committee, and he deserves eternal credit for his courage, capacity, and indefatigable energy and indomitable honesty in working for one long year digging into the truth of this affair. This House and the country are also indebted to Mr. Wooley for invaluable service rendered this committee. Assisted by Mr. Mannington, he has spent months in unraveling the tangled and complicated skein of this corporation's control of transportation lines, and this was only a part of his great service.

Had this committee simply filed the exhaustive and masterly report of F. J. MacRae and the findings of Robert Wickliffe Wooley, including his analysis of the intercorporate relations of the directors of the steel corporation, the total amount appropriated for this investigation would have been well spent.

I take this occasion to acknowledge my sincere sense of obligation to the clerks to this committee. Their duties were necessarily exacting and onerous and were performed by Messrs. Hunter and Bestor, and last, but not least, by Miss Mahler, who succeeded them in that position, with rare energy and capacity.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANLEY. I will, for a question.

Mr. SABATH. Do I understand the gentleman to state that these railroads are owned by the Steel Trust?

Mr. STANLEY. Absolutely. I am going into this very briefly before I come to the question of legislation proposed by this committee by which it shall be unlawful for the steel corporation or any other industrial organization to own or operate a common carrier. There is nothing in the report of Mr. MacRae or in the investigation of this committee to indicate that the United States Steel Corporation manufactures any more cheaply than its competitors. In other words, if you assemble at a blast furnace the ore and the coke and the limestone, the steel corporation can not convert it into the multifarious forms in which the iron and steel are used by the ultimate consumer a cent cheaper than can the Bethlehem, Lackawanna, Jones & Laughlin, or any other large steel company. And yet the profits of the steel corporation exceed its competitors 100 per cent.

As stated in MacRae's report:

"For the last 10 years the net profits per ton of steel produced by the steel corporation have ranged between $10 and $16 per ton, the latter figure having been reached in the first few years of the company's existence. For the last year the net profit per ton has not been much over $12. On the basis of present prices the net is close to $11.

"While the net earnings per ton of steel produced by the steel corporation has ranged between $10 and $16 per ton, the independent steel companies have not fared so well. Several of the independents have not been able to show much over $4 per ton. The highest was approximately $7 per ton, by a small western independent company, whose properties represent actual cash paid in."

Charles Schwab claims that one-third of the cost of producing iron and steel is in the transportation. The Steel Corporation is, on the average, receiving in this country from its manipulations of common carriers $50,000,000 a year in rebates. It is amazing that this House should for 16 years have remained indifferent to this appalling condition. In it is vested the absolute and unquestioned power to regulate interstate commerce and to prevent these abuses, and yet the party in power during all that time has never proposed or enacted a law designed to prevent this flagrant misuse of public highways.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANLEY. I will yield for a question.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would like to ask the gentleman in reference to the cost of producing iron and steel. Was any proof taken by the committee on that point?

Mr. STANLEY. Worlds of it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the Steel Corporation admit the statement?

Mr. STANLEY. It does not admit or deny anything. There is no question about that statement. There is a world of information on that subject. There is no more difference between the cost of operating two blast furnaces than there is between two self-binders in a field. One's machine is like another. They are not covered by patents, and all the large concerns employ similar processes in smelting ore.

I wish now very briefly to show this committee the operation of a road that earns over 600 per cent of the Steel Corporation; and yet we talk about the Interstate Commerce Commission controlling freight rates. Here is a map of the Pittsburgh, Bessemer & Lake Erie Railroad, starting from Conneaut and Erie. Fifty-one per cent of its stock is owned by the Steel Corporation. One of its terminals is at the docks at Conneaut. Into Conneaut Harbor no ore vessels come except those owned by the corporation. The docks are the private property of that corporation for all practical purposes. The Government spends millions in dredging such harbors. This road had $10,000,000 of common stock and $2,000,000 of preferred stock. The Steel Corporation bought 51 per cent of that stock at from 10 to 15 cents on the dollar. When that was done the corporation constructed a short "cut-off," this road running from O. K. Junction to Cremis, a distance of 8 miles, and capitalized it at $500,000, and that road leased the entire system. Then the corporation entered into an arrangement with the Union Railroad by which that line was given a division of rates, 20 cents a ton, on all traffic originating on the Bessemer & Lake Erie, although this line is a pure plant facility, intended only to reach the steel company's plants. According to Senator Oliver's estimate it costs only 26 cents a ton to transport the whole distance from Conneaut to Pittsburgh. That was for the purpose of taking as much as possible from the earnings of the road with stockholders outside of the Steel Corporation, and as a result of this 99-year lease of the 334 per cent per annum earned in dividends in 1910 the 49 per cent of stock held on the outside received $224,994, and 51 per cent, or the corporation, received $3,728,357.

Coal transported from the Connellsville coal region passes through Pittsburgh and Youngstown, where the independents and competitors of the corporation have blast furnaces and steel mills; and from that point it is also transported to Chicago for the Gary and other corporation plants. The rate from the Connellsville region to the independents is 100 per cent higher than it is on the same coke carried on the same lines the rest of the way to Chicago. When it gets to Chicago the coke is delivered to two railroads, one the Indiana Belt and the other the Chicago, Lake Shore & Eastern. Both roads perform identically the same service, go from the same points to the same points, and carry the same material. The Indiana Belt receives 10 cents a ton for that haul, and the railroads pay to the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern, owned by the Steel Corporation, 40 cents a ton for identically the same service. On all shipments out of Chicago the corporation exacts from the railroads running into that city from 15 to 25 per cent of the through rate on all shipments, with the result that the Steel Corporation can sell its finished products $5 or $6 a ton less than any of its competitors, although the cost of manufacture is the same. This is the sword of Damocles held over all competitors, forcing them to meet at Gary's dinners, like industrial vassals, and sell at just the price that corporation dictates.

This is practically admitted by Judge Gary, and so capable a judge as Julian Kennedy expresses the opinion that the ownership of common carriers gives to the steel corporation the power of life and death over all its competitors.

"The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Kennedy, have you anything further to say?

"Mr. KENNEDY. There was one statement I wanted to make as bearing on this matter of transportation, that occurs to me in looking over the history of the case. There is a statement here of Mr. Gary having testified December 18, 1908, and in answer to the question as to whether he could put the price down and put other people out of business, Mr. Gary said:

"'Quite likely; that may be true. I will not say that it is not true. I will not say that in the competition we could not drive a good many of our competitors out of the business.

"'Mr. CLARK. Now, another thing.

"'Mr. GARY. It is not because of a hold on the market.

"'Mr. CLARK. What is it, then?

"'Mr. GARY. It is because of our ability to produce cheaper and because of our ownership in the independent concerns, such as the railroads, the steamship lines, etc., which gives a large credit from the United States Steel Corporation's standpoint.'

"Showing that transportation lines, in Mr. Gary's opinion, are important factors.

"Mr. BARTLETT. That is from the tariff hearings in 1908?

"Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. As I understand it, you are of the opinion, if by any method we could force the common carriers of the country to treat all industrials exactly alike, the advantage of the steel corporation over its competitors would be practically eliminated?

"Mr. KENNEDY. To a great extent. I think Mr. Gary has always been very reasonable and very honest to his competitors, but some other man in the future, some other king might rise who knew not Joseph, and it would really be better that no one company has as large an inside hold on the others.

"The CHAIRMAN. If the steel corporation chose to do it, with its present weapons, could it destroy its competitors?

"Mr. KENNEDY. I think it could; yes."

Why, my colleagues, I have had men worth millions, in Chicago and elsewhere, come to me, like Nicodemus, by night, and say, "You are doing a great work—we are in fact the industrial slaves of this gigantic concern, and I will tell you all I know about it. This use of our railroad systems ought to be stopped, but for God's sake do not say I told you—my doors will be closed and my business will be ruined."

Can we remedy it? Why, these are our roads, not theirs. If there is anything settled beyond doubt or controversy it is that the Federal Government has absolute, exclusive, unquestioned, plenary power over interstate commerce. We can take charge of all the railroads and steamship lines in the United States if we care to. We can exclude whomsoever we will. We may include whomsoever we will. We can prescribe what terms we will. The control of highways not only in this country but among all English-speaking people has always been a governmental function, and when a private concern operates a highway there is no difference in its legal status, there is no difference between its responsibility to the public and that of a stock company operating a turnpike—one collects tolls and the other makes tariffs. And we can determine the tolls and fix the tariffs and prescribe all other conditions upon which and under which any individual or corporation shall enter interstate commerce, much less own it.

I will not take the time of this patient committee at this late hour in reading law books. I intended to quote you quite a number of precedents, but I will cite only a few from innumerable decisions. In the case of Gibbons against Ogden, familiar to you all. Chief Justice Marshall held:

"We are now arrived at the inquiry, What is this power? It is the power to regulate; that is, to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed. The power, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution. If, as has always been understood, the sovereignty of Congress, though limited to specified objects, is plenary as to those objects, the power over commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single Government, having in its constitution the same restrictions upon the exercise of the power as are found in the Constitution of the United States."

Mr. Justice Bradley, in the case of Stockton against Baltimore, declared:

"We think that the power of Congress is supreme over the whole subject [interstate commerce], unimpeded and unembarrassed by State lines or State laws; that in this matter the country is one and the work to be accomplished is national; and that State interests, State jealousies, and State prejudices do not require to be consulted. In matters of foreign and interstate commerce there are no States."

No corporation has the moral or legal right to dominate the public highways, burdening the consumer and shackling competitors by exorbitant rates on its own lines, or unfair and inordinate allowances and divisions from other roads.

Jeremiah Black, 20 years ago, in the greatest effort of his life, completely exploded the time-worn sophistry that a corporation can exercise an absolute and unrestricted control over a public highway simply because it may own the means by which that highway is operated. He declared in an address, delivered before the judiciary committee of the Pennsylvania Legislature in 1883, that—

"On the other hand, the corporations deny that they owe any responsibility to the State more than individuals engaged in private business. They assert that the management of the railroads being a mere speculation of their own, these thoroughfares of trade and travel must be run for their interests, without regard to public right. If they take advantage of the power to oppress the labor and overtax the land of the State; if they crush the industry of one man or place to build up the prosperity of another; if they plunder the rich by extortion or deepen the distress of the poor by discriminating against them, they justify themselves by showing that all this was in the way of business; that their interest required them to do it; that if they had done otherwise their fortunes would not have been so great as they are; that it was the prudent, proper, and successful method of managing their own affairs. This is their universal answer to all complaints. Their protests against legislative intervention to protect the public always take this shape, with more or less distinctness of outline. In whatever language they clothe their argument, it is the same in substance as that with which Demetrius, the silversmith, defended the sanctity of the temple for which he made shrines: 'Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth.'"

"I aver that a man or corporation appointed to do a public duty must perform it with an eye single to the public interest. If he perverts his authority to purposes of private gain, he is guilty of corruption, and all who aid and abet him are his accomplices in crime. He defiles himself if he mingles his own business with that intrusted to him by the Government, and uses one to promote the other. If a judge excuse himself for a false decision by saying that he sold his judgment for the highest price he could get, you cover his character with infamy. A ministerial officer, like a sheriff, for instance, who extorts from a defendant, or even from a convict in his custody, what the law does not allow him to collect, and puts the surplus in his pocket, is a knave upon whom you have no mercy. You send county commissioners to the penitentiary for consulting their own financial advantage to the injury of the general weal. When the officers of a city corporation make a business of running it to enrich themselves at the expense of the public, you can see at a glance that they are the basest of criminals. Why, then, can you not see that the officers of a railway corporation are equally guilty when they pervert the authority with which they are clothed to purposes purely selfish? A railroad corporation is a part of the civil government as much as a city corporation. The officers of the former, as much as the latter, are agents and trustees of the public, and the public has an interest precisely similar in the fidelity of both. Why, then, should partiality or extortion be condemned as criminal in one if it be tolerated as fair business when practiced by the other?"

No man is a greater stickler for State rights than am I, but by taking jurisdiction of this matter, through the power vested by the interstate clause of the Constitution in the Federal Government we preserve the rights of the States. With all due deference to the eminent lawyers who have addressed themselves to this subject, they have totally failed to distinguish between an interstate corporation and interstate commerce. There is no such thing as an interstate corporation. An individual engaged in interstate commerce is just as subject to the laws governing interstate commerce as an interstate corporation. The traveling man does not become an interstate individual. He remains a citizen of a State, but the conduct of his business, in so far as it affects interstate commerce, is subject to any regulation of that commerce by the United States. A stock company is liable in the same way. A private corporation doing business entirely within, is subject only to the jurisdiction of that State. Congress has absolutely no authority to take any control over it whatever. It is absurd to claim that the Federal Congress can lay its hand upon a corporation engaged strictly in intrastate business. So long as it does not enter the channels of the interstate commerce it is beyond the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. Whenever the Federal Government has incorporated an institution it has always because it discharges some national and public function. As long as it is in private business, the Government can take no jurisdiction over it and the Supreme Court never will permit Congress, if it so desired, to override State laws and take jurisdiction of a private business because that private business may at some time engage in interstate commerce. The jurisdiction of the Federal Government ceases when the business ceases to be interstate, and it may be invoked only when it again enters interstate commerce. There is a difference as wide as the ocean between the business of a strictly intrastate concern and the commerce which is incident to that business. As stated by Mr. Farrar—

"Manufacture and production end before commerce begins, and form no part of it. They are completely under the control of the State when manufacture and production take place and are therefore beyond the commercial power of the Federal Government, as the court said, speaking through Justice Leman in Kidd v. Pearson (126 U. S., 22):

"'No distinction is more popular to the common mind or more clearly expressed in economic and political literature than that between manufacture and commerce. Manufacture is transformation—the fashioning of raw materials into a change of form for use. The functions of commerce are different. The buying and selling and transportation incident thereto constitute commerce.'"

"The demand of the people is for that degree of industrial peace which is not incompatible with fair and healthy commercial competition, not a peace of Warsaw made by desolating legislation; nor yet the Pax Romana of the all-conquering imperial trust. Nor do they intend to heed the plaintive voice of the spokesman for the modern Cyclops, 'monstrum horrendum informe, ingens,' asking the Federal Government to take it in its arms and coddle it, tell it what to do, and 'to fix prices.'"

Verily, extremes meet, and the monopolist and the socialist reach a common ground. For government to fix the prices of merchandise bought and sold in commerce is utterly beyond the power of any legislative body in America; and our free, democratic society, based on the independence of the individual and the development and protection of individual rights, would have to be shattered to its foundations and a new social order built up before any such proposition could be maintained.

Such a power necessarily implies the right to fix the price of human labor, not only because the price of the products of labor can not be fixed without indirectly fixing the proportion of the price that labor shall receive, but also because, as the liberty of the merchant, the producer, and the manufacturer is as great as the liberty of the laborer, a power great enough directly to shackle their liberty is great enough directly to shackle his liberty. No free people will ever submit to any such doctrine. It is the socialism of Marx and Engel, pure and simple, and may find its justification in their celebrated manifesto, but not in any of the records or documents that consecrate the rights and the political beliefs of the American citizen, undefiled by the social leprosy engendered in the ghettos of an oppressed race and in the hovels of a peasantry whose ancestors were adstricti glebis for a thousand years and who themselves are still the hewers of wood and drawers of water for an overbearing class of oligarchic land monopolists.

May not we now add to the description of the modern Cyclops from which has come this cry for the Government "to fix prices," the balance of the Virgilian bexameter just quoted, and say of it "cui lumen ademptum"? For surely the light of American liberty does not shine for it.

If under the commercial power the Congress could charter corporations to mine, manufacture, and produce, then we should have Federal mines and Federal factories, Federal wheat farms, Federal cotton plantations, Federal truck gardens, and Federal poultry yards. These corporations could enter the States without their consent and acquire and hold their soil against their public policy and even against their prohibitory laws. And this is the reductio ad absurdum of the whole matter, because if there is any question beyond dispute it is that a State has absolute dominion over her own soil, and no part of it can be held or owned without her consent, except by the Federal Government, or its instrumentalities for public purposes, under its sovereign power of eminent domain.

A Federal private business corporation, with the power to manufacture and produce, existing outside of the District of Columbia or a Territory or an insular possession of the United States, is therefore as complete a legal absurdity as the fabled creature, woman above and fish below, is a physiological absurdity. "Risum teneatis amici?"

Mr. Robert R. Reed, of New York, to whom I am forever indebted for his kind and valued assistance in the preparation of bills intended to prevent the misuse and operation of common carriers by industrials, has cogently stated both the unwisdom and unconstitutionality of this scheme of Federal incorporation:

"But apart from all this the proposition is of very doubtful constitutionality. The Federal power to create or, indeed, to license corporations will, I believe, be upheld only upon the assumption that it is necessary to the power of regulating commerce. And, of course, it is not necessary if commerce can be completely regulated without it, if everything that could be effected under the disputed power can be effected under existing powers as to which there is no dispute. The power to regulate commerce does not include the power to regulate all business dependent on commerce. Moreover, Congress can not limit or impair any of its own express constitutional powers, and an irrevocable charter, license, or power given to any corporation would limit pro tanto the power to regulate commerce. Congress has not licensed and should not license any corporation, combination, or monopoly. It should remain free to prohibit and exclude."

Now, I claim that this Congress can absolutely control this character of monopoly by its control of interstate commerce and never touch the jurisdiction of the State over the corporation in enforcing any regulation it sees fit to make.

Mr. LOUD. Is not that railroad of which the gentleman has spoken entirely in one State, that of Minnesota?

Mr. STANLEY. Well, I do not care if it is only in one county; that does not affect this discussion. The commerce is not in one State.

Mr. AUSTIN. And also the Pennsylvania Line, to which the gentleman called attention.

Mr. STANLEY. The courts have held it to be interstate commerce time and time again. The gentleman is making a contention which the steel corporation does not make for itself. This corporation came into court and claimed that these roads were engaged in interstate commerce. This committee has suggested that you can control the corporation, you can control the trust engaged in interstate commerce without giving it a Federal charter. When you do give it such a charter you will have broken down the last barrier existing between the State and the Nation. Your State courts are gone, your State rights are dead. These 48 sovereignties will have nothing left but their police power and have no more dignity than a magisterial district. In a recent and able discussion of this subject—in fact, the first ringing challenge to the President's proposal to solve existing evils by Federal incorporation—that learned and accomplished jurist, the Hon. FINIS GARRETT, of Tennessee, declared:

"Mr. Chairman, the second section of the sixth article of the Constitution of the United States provides;

"'This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.'

"If, therefore, such Federal corporations as the President advocates can be created, they will, under this section, as it has again and again been interpreted and applied by the courts, be supreme above State regulation and law. They can enter a State without so much as saying 'by your leave' and carry on their business, their agents snapping their fingers contemptuously at State law and rules. The States can have no authority, can exercise no control, can impose no terms save such as the discretion and grace of the Federal Government allow them. 'If it please you, O Federal Government,' the States must say, 'we would do this or that, make this regulation or that for your creatures, your corporations that have been given life by your law; if it please you not, however, why, not our will, nor our wisdom, but yours be exercised.' How vast the sweep of the proposed policy! How tremendous the change which will be wrought if it be consummated!"

Then will we have turned our backs upon the magnificent edifice erected by Jefferson for the preservation intact of the sovereignty of these sister States, the perpetuation of our liberties and our institutions. This sacred temple erected by his genius, and preserved by the wisdom of sages and the blood of heroes, shall not be defaced by any boisterous iconoclast from Sagamore Hill, or undermined by the federalistic heresies of a complacent reactionary in the White House. We will never surrender the sacred and sovereign powers of our State courts and legislatures to some select bureau here in Washington. What are the evils incident to this condition of affairs?

Senator WILLIAMS, in a letter addressed to Mr. Robert R. Reed and published September 27, 1910, said:

"I can imagine nothing more dangerous to the American Republic than control of great corporations by a Federal bureau subject in its turn to a political administration of either party, excluding or admitting participation in business substantially at the whim and caprice and by the favoritism or enmity of the head of the bureau, influenced by Senators, Speakers, and Presidents, whose 'pull' would be in favor of 'good trusts' and whose frowns would be for 'bad trusts.' In such a case 'good' would come to mean subservient. The remedy is to exclude trusts from interstate commerce, but to exclude them not by the fiat of a bureau (which in the last analysis is a man influenced by other men and acting secretly, with subordinates forbidden to give out information), but to exclude them by fiat of law, providing that corporations having charters conferring powers broad enough to establish monopoly or near monopoly and unlimited in the interest of the public shall be excluded. * * * Your remedy seems to be the right one—efficient, sufficient, operating in the open and by force of prescribed law."

Exclude industrials from the ownership and operation of the public highways—there is your remedy, and your only remedy.

Eighteen billions are now invested in railways in the United States, and one or more of the directors of the Steel Corporation sit at the head of the table upon the directorates of carriers capitalized at $10,000,000,000.

This corporation holds the railroads in the hollow of its hand and they dare not complain under this domination. Interlocking directorates gave the steel corporation absolute mastery over your railroads. Make it mandatory that no industrial concern shall engage in interstate commerce unless it writes into its own charter the plain and unequivocable statement that its directors are not directors in any railroad or transportation company; that no stockholder in any such company shall vote his stock if he is directly or indirectly interested in any mining or manufacturing enterprise shipping over the railroad in question. Force the president or some other responsible officer of the corporation to swear to this statement before permitting it to engage in interstate commerce. You can without making such a provision exclude whom you please from interstate commerce. Who will deny your right to exclude a manufacturing corporation which refuses to comply with so reasonable a condition? These huge consolidations can be compelled to write their own charter restrictions controlling their conduct in such matters. They are now governed in 99 cases out of 100 by laws written by themselves, not by the laws which you enact. We now say to all corporations "within a certain limit you may write your own laws." Have these great corporations, doing an interstate business, write into their charters certain prohibitions beyond which they can not go.

First, you should prohibit any corporation from engaging in interstate commerce having directors in common with any competing concern; second, that such corporation shall not own the stock of another corporation, and that no other corporation shall own its stock; third, that it is not overcapitalized; fourth, that it does not buy and sell its own stock; and, finally, a provision to which this committee has given its consent, which compels the filing of a statement in some bureau of this Government, duly verified by the oath of some responsible officer, that the foregoing statements are true.

Then you can not corrupt the bureau. It is merely the custodian, as a county clerk is the custodian of a record; and if a false affidavit is filed you can easily punish the maker of such affidavit for perjury. You can provide here pains and penalties, fine and imprisonment for the corporation or its officers who engage in interstate commerce in violation of any of the enumerated prohibitions.

If this Democratic House had done no better work than organize the committee which has recommended this legislation it would have deserved the gratitude and confidence of the country. The time is coming shortly when a Congress shall correct these abuses, a Congress which has never been the beneficiary of these guilty interests. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The time is coming shortly when we shall sit in judgment on, not an old friend but a public enemy, from whose dirty hands we have never been fed.

It has never given us campaign contributions. It has never been cheek by jowl with our candidate for President or with our Representatives in Congress. Our candidate for the Presidency in 1912 can well meet this corporation's smile, he "ne'er was ruled by thee." He will be elected untrammeled, with a sincere desire to serve the plain people. I tell you that without Federal incorporation, without breaking down the barriers erected by the States, and without infringing on their authority and jurisdiction, we can and we shall solve this problem.

And when the legislation suggested by this committee is enacted into law, these unearned and illegitimate profits of the United States Steel Corporation will be impossible. That corporation will dissolve itself. It will not be necessary to invoke the Sherman Antitrust Act. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, I wish to call the attention of the committee to another matter. We have recommended that the Bureau of Corporations shall report to Congress as well as to the President. Do you know that when we shall have revealed the whole story of the relations between the Bureau of Corporations and other departments of this Government it will make the most interesting, and yet the most salacious, narrative that has been printed in many a year? For years and years—and I speak advisedly—Mr. Herbert Knox Smith has come before Congress, before the House, before the Senate, before select committees, with his finger on his lips, and has stubbornly refused to tell those bodies, clothed with inquisitorial powers, any of the terrible secrets reposed in him. We have spent thousands and tens of thousands of dollars. This investigating committee expended $39,000, when it could have done with $29,000—yes; with half of that—if only Herbert Knox Smith had turned over to us the information he had. When he was asked about the Tennessee Coal & Iron deal he stood mute before that Senate committee, and during all that time he was giving full and complete information to the emissaries of the United States Steel Corporation, and I have the proof of it in black and white. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have it here, and I will read it if any member of the committee demands it.

Let us see what actually happened. Several years ago Senator Hansbrough introduced a resolution in the Senate to investigate the Harvester Trust. The Department of Justice employed Mr. Burdette T. Townsend to look into that affair. He filed the most comprehensive and conclusive indictment I have ever seen drawn against one of these interstate corporations, as you call them, and I think I have some experience. He charged that the Harvester Co. was receiving rebates from the Steel Corporation; the existence of interlocking directors serving the Harvester Trust and the United States Steel Corporation at the same time; that the Harvester Trust was robbing the farmers of this country of millions of dollars every year; that the corporation was organized by J. Pierpont Morgan & Co., at a profit of over $5,000,000; that it was conceived in sin and born in iniquity.

If the Harvester Trust had not sold a single reaper or binder or mower, it would have been proceeding in violation of law. He explained how the Harvester Co. had practically the same finance committee as the United States Steel Corporation; how the Steel Corporation sold steel for the manufacture of wagons and parts of harvester machines and twine binders so much lower to the Harvester Trust than to any other manufacturing concern that the agricultural-implement people came to the Steel Corporation and remonstrated with them, but in vain; how this conspiracy had put the small makers of wagons and agricultural implements out of business.

When that whole matter was about to be investigated, these twin trusts sent a man down here from New York who had earned the deathless gratitude of the Republican Party by his princely contributions to its corruption funds.

The minority report of Messrs. GARDNER and DANFORTH forbears "to express an opinion until we have had an opportunity to hear the question adequately discussed." A short review of the operations of the Bureau of Corporations and the transactions of the heads of that department with captains of high finance and industry will probably leave them no longer in doubt as to the advisability of making it incumbent on the Commissioner of Corporations to take the Senate and House of Representatives into his confidence to the same extent at least as his councils have previously been shared by "malefactors of great wealth." Government by commission as now conducted by the Bureau of Corporations is more than pleasing to the interests, and they are to-day more enthusiastic than ever in their advocacy of an extension of the same.

For several years the chief intermediary between big business and those who were invested by the executive department with the duty of investigating it was this same Mr. George W. Perkins. To pry into the secrets of a bureau clothed with plenary inquisitorial powers and directed to reveal the results of its investigations only upon the order of the President of the United States and to keep the interests most concerned advised as to the progress of a presumably secret inspection of their affairs and the probable results and attitude of the officers of the law, who were supposed to report its violations to the President only, was at best an invidious task for which Mr. Perkins had previously demonstrated his perculiar fitness.

For years this fanatically ardent partisan had broken through all the restraints which deter better men and had unhesitatingly sacrificed every other obligation to society and to himself in the secret service of his party. In 1904 Mr. Perkins, in his eagerness to aid his party and his hero, Mr. Roosevelt, actually donated $50,000 of other people's money to the good cause, and for this eminent service he was arrested under a warrant charging him with grand larceny. I do not wish to say anything disparaging about Mr. Perkins, but I will read what Chief Justice Cullen, of the court of appeals of New York, said about him.

Judge Cullen, in People ex rel. Perkins and Moss (187 N. Y. Repts., 434), said:

"The crime, if there was any in this case, commenced when the original agreement was made between the relator and the President, by which the money of the company was to be appropriated to the use of Bliss," the campaign treasurer, "and the method was adopted for the purpose of concealing such appropriation."

In discussing this affair, the court said:

"With the immense business carried on by the corporation, policies issued in every part of the country and to persons of every political party, both the relator and the President must have well known that the universal assent of the policy holders, the only thing which could have justified, even morally (not legally), the payment to Bliss could never be obtained, and that at all times a substantial minority would be opposed to such payment. * * * In the present case no one will doubt that had a clerk taken from the company's till a sum of money to give to the Republican club of his ward it would have been larceny. * * * If he knew the illegality of his act, and his intention was solely to benefit either Mr. Bliss personally or the political organization which he represented, he was guilty of larceny."

That is the thing that recommended this man to the especial favor and the high consideration of the President of the United States, and Mr. Herbert Knox Smith when he presented his credentials as minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary of the Harvester Trust, the Steel Trust, and the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANLEY. I can not yield now. For weeks here in Washington he oscillated between the Bureau of Corporations and the White House with the familiarity of a friend and the insolence of an ally. At the same time I have here the records showing that same man was keeping the Steel Corporation posted and closely in touch, and that he had the assurance from the Commissioner of Corporations that, whether Congress recommended it or not, he would not move a peg; that he would not proceed with that investigation; and Judge Gary reported to his own board of directors that "quite likely in some respects we may be traveling very near the line between propriety and impropriety." "Still," says Judge Gary, "you may be more or less disturbed without reason. At the last session of Congress a resolution was passed by both Houses asking the commissioner to investigate the United States Steel Corporation; the commissioner did not pay any attention to that resolution, etc. The finance committee [of which Mr. Perkins was chairman] has been in close touch with the matter all the time; we have been in frequent and almost constant communication with Commissioner Garfield and more or less with the President." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

At the same time the Commissioner of Corporations, Mr. Smith, writes the President that—

"he (Perkins) concluded with great emphasis with the remark that if after all the endeavors of this company and the other Morgan interests to uphold the policy of the administration and to adopt their methods of modern publicity this company was now to be attacked in a purely technical case, the interests he represented were going to fight.

* * * * * * *

"It is, says the Commissioner of Corporations, a very practical question whether it is well to throw away now the great influence of the so-called Morgan interests, which, up to this time, have supported the advancel policy of the administration, etc."

In other words, a bureau chief dares to advise the President of the United States that he must not prosecute the harvester company and the steel corporation because the harvester company, the Steel Corporation, and J. P. Morgan & Co. are very useful to this administration and he can not afford to antagonize them by enforcing the laws he took a solemn oath to impartially execute.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Has the gentleman heard that the same Mr. Perkins is now financing Mr. Roosevelt's present campaign?

Mr. STANLEY. The very same person. Who were these policy holders to whom Judge Cullen referred? The most pathetic and helpless figures in all this vale of tears, the young mother, clad in the black habiliments of woe, prostrate upon the new-made grave of her once loving lord, orphans wailing the name of father above the silent dead. He robbed the widow of her slender patrimony; he tore from the pinched fingers of childhood its last morsel of bread. They who did it—

"They are not man; they are not woman;
They are not brute; they are not human;
They are ghouls."

[Applause on the the Democratic side.]

Perkins to-day has escaped the penitentiary by the skin of his teeth for having picked the pockets of a shroud for the use and benefit of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANLEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Was it in this fine judicial temper that the gentleman acted on the special committee?

Mr. STANLEY. Exactly. I admit an abhorrence for larceny that is instinctive. It abides while assuming the dignity of a judge. I would not barter an inherent detestation for perfidy and theft for any honor on earth, and God pity the man who can contemplate that kind of pilfering without an honest and unutterable indignation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

They say that this party of progressive capitalism is about to tour the country singing psalms, between the tirades of Roosevelt and the platitudes of Perkins. Good Lord deliver us! Imagine Theodore Roosevelt and George W. Perkins leading in a revival. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There is nothing like it in all the history of the church since the days of Annanias and the unrepentant thief on the cross. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is a fact, LA FOLLETTE has charged it and they have not denied it, that a million dollars was contributed by the steel corporation officials to start this political Punch and Judy performance, lately pulled off at Chicago, in which these fantastic figures Roosevelt, Perkins, McCormick, and the rest of them, play their little parts, find their exits and their entrances, and take their cues from an insolent combination of political and financial highbinders, one of whom did not hesitate to rob a grave for the Republican campaign fund of 1904, and is now intrusted with the duty of providing provender for the bull moose. I would suggest as a battle hymn for this political camp meeting a modification of the war cry of the Turkish janizaries: "Allah! Allah! Mammon is Allah; there is no God but Mammon and Morgan is his prophet!" [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Do you believe that had the Commissioner of Corporations advised the President of the United States that in the absorption of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. he was not eliminating a competitor but was eliminating competition; had he told him what he knew, and I have extracts from the records showing what he knew or ought to have known.

In the North you have the Bessemer process. From the Mesabi Range come the Bessemer ores. The time had come for the passing of Bessemer steel and for the upbuilding of the basic process, when the open-hearth furnace would in a great measure supersede for all practical purposes the Bessemer converter. The Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., that young, rapidly growing, and prosperous concern, headed by Gates, Hanna, Ogilby, and Topping, and the rest of them, had already forced the steel corporation to write into its books that "it was up against it good and strong." Knowing these things would he have consented to have the last chance of competition in the steel business in the United States destroyed forever? Would he have consented to have the South and all her industries, as far as the steel is concerned, laid prostrate under the iron heel of this industrial bandit, had he known the truth? It is almost unbelievable.

You talk of the dangers that confront this Republic. Why, a few days ago I read the story of where a band of murderers invaded a court room in Virginia, and where they shot down the judge on the bench, and we recall it with horror; and yet, what did it amount to after all? It was but the death of a man. There lay a butchered hero prone upon the bench he had adorned, like a victim upon the altar. But above that piece of mangled earth, wrapped in its gory cerements, arose like a transfiguration the dread and immortal chancellor, his ermine purified by the blood that dappled it. Before the outraged majesty of the law these crude criminals fled in terror, hiding in the passes of the mountains or cowering in a felon's cell awaiting an ignominious death. [Applause.]

Suppose that instead of this wild resort to insane and futile violence they had approached this judge with fair promises of wealth and power. Suppose they had said, "Judge, if you will permit us to make counterfeit money, if you will permit us to make moonshine whisky, riches and honor and place and power shall be yours; we will support your administration; it will be strengthened, our friends will stand by you and make you all-powerful in politics. If you attempt to enforce the law against these friendly and puissant influences, we will fight—possibly start 'a panic' "—and the judge had been seduced by this secret attempt to debauch the clean and fearless execution of the law. Ah, then would that court have been stained and defiled indeed. There would have been no violence, but it is the silent prostitution of high officials, without noise or notice, that is most deadly, more to be feared and abhorred than all the tumult and brutal murders of a hundred bands of mountain marauders. Then would the sacred temple of justice itself have been polluted, and he who wore the dishonored ermine held in unspeakable contempt.

I do not know what honeyed words Frick and Gary poured into the ear of an attentive President in that 20-minute conference. If they had chosen to play the tempter, as did Lucifer to our crucified Redeemer, if they pictured to his wondering gaze their vast and unknown dominion over railway systems—mines and mills, banks and bankers, jurists and legislators, and an army of 200,000,000 men—they could have revealed a vista of wealth and power more vast than met the Savior's gaze from the mountain top. All they said we do not, probably will never, know. One thing only is certain—Roosevelt took the same relative position that the Savior assumed toward the devil, except that the Savior said, "Go, get thee behind me, Satan," and Roosevelt said, "I will stand in front of you, oh Steel Trust. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] I will silence popular clamor, I will paralyze the strong arm of the law, I will make justice a pariah. If you, with your multiplied millions will follow and finance a blatant truculent, capricious demagogue in his lust for office and for autocratic and ruthless power." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I anticipate as a result of the legislation suggested by this committee a new era in our industrial life. I firmly believe that there is nothing in all the history of the past quite so shameful as the confession that we are so degenerate or the law so impotent that monopoly and extortion can no longer be curbed or controlled.

Read from the hearings. Read from the statement of Carnegie that this corporation is so strong that it can successfully fix prices and defy the law. Gary suggests legislation by which he proposes to regulate himself. We are advised that the day of competition is passed, and we must recognize the existence of a lawless oligarchy we can no longer hope to control. Years ago Carnegie wrote:

"Such is the law, such has been the law, and such promises to be the law for the future; for, so far, no device has yet been devised that has permanently thwarted its operation, given freedom of competition, and all combinations or trusts that attempt to exact from the consumer more than a legitimate return upon capital and services write the charter of their own defeat. We have many proofs that this great law does not sleep, and that it will not be suppressed. * * * It is not in the power of man to exact for more than a brief season, and a very brief season, indeed, unusual profit upon actual capital invested, either in transportation or manufacture, so long as all are free to compete, and this freedom, it may safely be asserted, the American people are not likely to restrict."

When he was before the committee I asked him:

"Do you hold those views now?

"Mr. CARNEGIE. Yes; and don't you think those are pretty good views?

"The CHAIRMAN. I think those views ought to be written on tablets and placed in every library that you erect as a memorial of your good judgment at the time you wrote them, and your better judgment now, if you still hold those views.

"Mr. BEALL. And as a memento of what used to be."

"The CHAIRMAN. A tribute to a dead age.

"Mr. GARDNER. Does that situation still continue in the steel business?

"Mr. CARNEGIE. Oh, you know it does not. I believed that competition would continue. I discovered that it had ceased.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. BEALL. Do you believe the age of competition has passed?

"Mr. CARNEGIE. I believe there is no competition and has not been.

"Mr. BEALL. Why? In your judgment why is there no competition?

"Mr. CARNEGIE. Because they have been able to sit down and agree to fix prices and to maintain them. That is the reason.

"Mr. BEALL. In your judgment that is the situation to-day that has destroyed the competition and nullified this law that you referred to in this article.

"Mr. CARNEGIE. Certainly.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. REED. I do not object to Mr. Carnegie's capacity as an expert to form judgment on the fact; but I simply base my objection on the ground that he has already said he did not know the facts of to-day.

"Mr. CARNEGIE. Some facts I do not know of to-day, and others are patent to the world.

"Mr. BEALL. That is, you do not know when they meet or how they agree, but you can read signs that prove to your mind that they meet somewhere and somewhere agree.

"Mr. CARNEGIE. That is obvious, I think, to the least intelligent reader of the newspapers, and yet I think it is not denied.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. BEALL. Is it not a fact that the reason you are now suggesting this appeal to the Government is that in the last 10 or 12 years we have witnessed such a growth in these great corporations that they have now grown so strong and so great that it is the Government, and the Government alone, that is strong enough to face them upon the battle field?

"Mr. CARNEGIE. That is my opinion.

"Mr. BEALL. That the only agency that can control them, that can combat with them, is the power of the Federal Government?

"Mr. CARNEGIE. That is my opinion, and it is not recently formed.

"Mr. BEALL. And that before corporations of this kind and combinations of this kind—both existing, as you think—the consumers of this country are absolutely helpless.

"Mr. CARNEGIE. Yes; they are at the mercy——

"Mr. BEALL (interposing). They are at the mercy of these corporations?

"Mr. CARNEGIE. Certainly. You will find this as strongly stated as I can state it in this statement which I have prepared."

Let us no longer take counsel of the craven or the sycophant, forever canting that we can not eradicate monopoly; that we can not prohibit this character of plunder; that we must forever suffer these industrial corsairs to prey upon the sea of commerce. There was a day when, though kings bowed their titled heads before Algerian pirates, we had not a cent for tribute, and I thank God that on this side of the Chamber, at least, and among those who sent us here the spirit of Decatur is not dead. [Applause.] We will no longer pay tribute to organized plunder. Those who have coerced Presidents and despoiled an empire shall within six short months realize that justice is swift, omnipotent, and blind; and that under a new régime, under the ægis of a new party, the law in its majesty, in its dignity, without passion, without variableness, without the shadow of turning, but with stern and pitiless justice toward the high and the low—the law, it shall be obeyed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. CLAYTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17470, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 22199. An act to extend the limits of the port of entry of Galveston, Tex., to include Port Bolivar, in that State.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 4113. An act for the relief of Robert E. Burke;

H. R. 7672. An act for the relief of Mary J. Manning; and

H. R. 21221. An act making a grant of lands for school purposes in block No. 31, town site of Powell, Shoshone reclamation project, Wyo.

THE SUGAR SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report. I bring back to the House the bill (H. R. 21213) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," known as the sugar bill, and report therewith a total disagreement on the part of the conferees. There is no written report here, but the House conferees and the Senate conferees were unable to reach an agreement. I do not think it is possible to reach one. We have possession of the papers. I do not care to act on them, but the Senate may desire to act further. I do not want to bring on a vote or any contest this evening, and I ask unanimous consent to make a motion that the House do further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments, so that the papers may go back to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the House further disagree to the Senate amendments on the sugar bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that he ask unanimous consent to consider the bill and then make that motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is in order to consider it, because there is no conference report.

Mr. MANN. But it would not be in order to consider it to-day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate amendments to the sugar bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate amendments to the sugar bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House do further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LAND-GRANT BILL.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter which I have addressed to Senator CHAMBERLAIN, touching the bill H. R. 22002, the land-grant bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter. Is there objection?

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman says that it is addressed to Senator CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN is a Member of the Senate. I suppose the letter is not in any violation of any of the rules of the House?

Mr. LAFFERTY. It is a letter in relation to the merits of a bill which passed the House on Saturday last and has now gone to the Senate.

Mr. JAMES. If it is a letter which does not reflect on the Senator I have no objection.

Mr. LAFFERTY. It is a letter bearing on the merits of the bill H. R. 22002—the land-grant bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection and it was so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, August 15, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 15, 1912.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. GALLINGER took the chair as President pro tempore under the previous order of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. LODGE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I present a conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the so-called Panama Canal bill. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, and also that the bill as it will stand, if the conference report were agreed to, may be printed in the RECORD. I also ask that the bill as it will stand, if the conference report were agreed to, may be printed in bill form and distributed on the desks of Senators, so that they may have it in convenient form before them when the matter is called up for action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received and printed as requested.

The report and bill are as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 13, 15, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 48, 50, 51, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 14, 28, 47, 49, 63.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 9 of the amendment, after the word "and," insert the words "govern the"; in lines 23 and 24 of the amendment strike out the colon after the word "qualified," and strike out the words, "Provided, That he be subject to removal at the will of the President"; in line 27 of the amendment strike out the word "and," and after the word "operation" insert a comma and the words "and protection." In the first line of the last paragraph of the amendment strike out the words "The President"; capitalize the letter "b" in the word "before"; in the same line and line 2 of the paragraph strike out the words "shall cause the commission of arts to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the commission of arts may"; and in the same line, after the word "report," insert the words "to the President"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 11 and 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the two said Senate amendments and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That section 4132 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4132. Vessels built within the United States and belonging wholly to citizens thereof; and vessels which may be captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize, or which may be adjudged to be forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States; and seagoing vessels, whether steam or sail, which have been certified by the Steamboat-Inspection Service as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo, not more than 5 years old at the time they apply for registry, wherever built, which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, being wholly owned by citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, and no others, may be registered as directed in this title. Foreign-built vessels registered pursuant to this act shall not engage in the coastwise trade: Provided, That a foreign-built yacht, pleasure boat, or vessel not used or intended to be used for trade admitted to American registry pursuant to this section shall not be exempt from the collection of ad valorem duty provided in section 37 of the act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes." That all materials of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction or repair of vessels built in the United States and all such materials necessary for the building or repair of their machinery and all articles necessary for their outfit and equipment may be imported into the United States free of duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided further, that such vessels so admitted under the provisions of this section may contract with the Postmaster General under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce," so long as such vessels shall in all respects comply with the provisions and requirement of said act.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the following part of Senate amendment 16: "nor be less than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the canal," and agree to the same with the following amendment: Insert, in lieu of the words just quoted, the words "nor be less than the equivalent of 75 cents per net registered ton"; and that the Senate recede from that part of its amendment numbered 16 striking out the words "The toll for each passenger shall not be more than $1.50.

Amendment numbered 17: That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in line 3 of the amendment, the word "alleged." In lines 10, 11, and 12 of the amendment strike out the words "off without proceeding to execution. All such claims, whether by agreement or after judgment, shall be paid"; and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amendment the words "the allowance and prosecution of"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amendment the word "and" and insert in lieu thereof the words "or the"; and on page 12, line 11, of the bill, after the word "judge," insert the word "thereof"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amendment the words "his assistants" and insert in lieu thereof the words "may appoint one assistant when necessary"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "canal" the words "or elsewhere"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "route" the words "or elsewhere"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the amendment strike out the words "ship engaged in or" and insert in lieu thereof the word "vessel"; in lines 1 and 2 of the amendment strike out the words "by the terms of this act"; in line 2 of the amendment, after the word "coastwise," insert the words "or foreign"; add to the amendment the following: "Suit may be brought by any shipper or by the Attorney General of the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"If the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be of the opinion that any such existing specified service by water other than through the Panama Canal is being operated in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and that such extension will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on the route by water under consideration, the Interstate Commerce Commission may, by order, extend the time during which such service by water may continue to be operated beyond July 1, 1914. In every case of such extension the rates, schedules, and practices of such water carrier shall be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and shall be subject to the act to regulate commerce and all amendments thereto in the same manner and to the same extent as is the railroad or other common carrier controlling such water carrier or interested in any manner in its operation: Provided, Any application for extension under the terms of this provision filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission prior to July 1, 1914, but for any reason not heard and disposed of before said date, may be considered and granted thereafter."

Transpose the order of amendments 61 and 62, so that amendment numbered 61 follows amendment numbered 62.

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOSEPH L. BRISTOW,
F. M. SIMMONS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
W. C. ADAMSON,
T. W. SIMS,
Managers on the part of the House.

An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone.

Be it enacted, etc., That the zone of land and land under water of the width of 10 miles extending to the distance of 5 miles on each side of the center line of the route of the canal now being constructed thereon, which zone begins in the Caribbean Sea 3 marine miles from mean low-water mark and extends to and across the Isthmus of Panama into the Pacific Ocean to the distance of 3 marine miles from mean low-water mark, excluding therefrom the cities of Panama and Colon and their adjacent harbors located within said zone, as excepted in the treaty with the Republic of Panama dated November 18, 1903, but including all islands within said described zone, and in addition thereto the group of islands in the Bay of Panama named Perico, Naos, Culebra, and Flamenco, and lands and waters outside of said limits above described which are necessary or convenient or from time to time may become necessary or convenient for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, or protection of the said canal or of any auxiliary canals, lakes, or other works necessary or convenient for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, or protection of said canal, the use, occupancy, or control whereof were granted to the United States by the treaty between the United States and the Republic of Panama, the ratifications of which were exchanged on the 26th day of February, 1904, shall be known and designated as the Canal Zone, and the canal now being constructed thereon shall hereafter be known and designated as the Panama Canal. The President is authorized by treaty with the Republic of Panama to acquire any additional land or land under water not already granted, or which was excepted from the grant, that he may deem necessary for the operation, maintenance, sanitation, or protection of the Panama Canal, and to exchange any land or land under water not deemed necessary for such purpose for other land or land under water which may be deemed necessary for such purposes, which additional land or land under water so acquired shall become part of the Canal Zone.

SEC. 2. That all laws, orders, regulations, and ordinances adopted and promulgated in the Canal Zone by order of the President for the government and sanitation of the Canal Zone and the construction of the Panama Canal are hereby ratified and confirmed as valid and binding until Congress shall otherwise provide. The existing courts established in the Canal Zone by Executive order are recognized and confirmed to continue in operation until the courts provided for in this act shall be established.

SEC. 3. That the President is authorized to declare by Executive order that all land and land under water within the limits of the Canal Zone is necessary for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, or protection of the Panama Canal, and to extinguish, by agreement when advisable, all claims and titles of adverse claimants and occupants. Upon failure to secure by agreement title to any such parcel of land or land under water the adverse claim or occupancy shall be disposed of and title thereto secured in the United States and compensation therefor fixed and paid in the manner provided in the aforesaid treaty with the Republic of Panama, or such modification of such treaty as may hereafter be made.

SEC. 4. That when in the judgment of the President the construction of the Panama Canal shall be sufficiently advanced toward completion to render the further services of the Isthmian Canal Commission unnecessary the President is authorized by Executive order to discontinue the Isthmian Canal Commission, which, together with the present organization, shall then cease to exist; and the President is authorized thereafter to complete, govern, and operate the Panama Canal and govern the Canal Zone, or cause them to be completed, governed, and operated through a governor of the Panama Canal and such other persons as he may deem competent to discharge the various duties connected with the completion, care, maintenance, sanitation, operation, government, and protection of the canal and Canal Zone. If any of the persons appointed or employed as aforesaid shall be persons in the military or naval service of the United States, the amount of the official salary paid to any such person shall be deducted from the amount of salary or compensation provided by or which shall be fixed under the terms of this act. The governor of the Panama Canal shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, commissioned for a term of four years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified. He shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year. All other persons necessary for the completion, care, management, maintenance, sanitation, government, operation, and protection of the Panama Canal and Canal Zone shall be appointed by the President or by his authority, removable at his pleasure, and the compensation of such persons shall be fixed by the President, or by his authority, until such time as Congress may by law regulate the same, but salaries or compensation fixed hereunder by the President shall in no instance exceed by more than 25 per cent the salary or compensation paid for the same or similar services to persons employed by the Government in continental United States; that upon the completion of the Panama Canal the President shall cause the same to be officially and formally opened for use and operation.

Before the completion of the canal the Commission of Arts may make report to the President of their recommendation regarding the artistic character of the structures of the canal, such report to be transmitted to Congress.

SEC. 5. That the President is hereby authorized to prescribe and from time to time change the tolls that shall be levied by the Government of the United States for the use of the Panama Canal: Provided, That no tolls, when prescribed as above, shall be changed unless six months' notice thereof shall have been given by the President by proclamation. No tolls shall be levied upon vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States. That section 4132 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4132. Vessels built within the United States and belonging wholly to citizens thereof, and vessels which may be captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize, or which may be adjudged to be forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States, and seagoing vessels, whether steam or sail, which have been certified by the Steamboat-Inspection Service as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo, not more than five years old at the time they apply for registry, wherever built, which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, being wholly owned by citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, and no others, may be registered as directed in this title. Foreign-built vessels registered pursuant to this act shall not engage in the coastwise trade: Provided, That a foreign-built yacht, pleasure boat, or vessel, not used or intended to be used for trade, admitted to American registry pursuant to this section, shall not be exempt from the collection of ad valorem duty provided in section 37 of the act approved August 5, 1909, entitled 'An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.' That all materials of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction or repair of vessels built in the United States and all such materials necessary for the building or repair of their machinery, and all articles necessary for their outfit and equipment, may be imported into the United States free of duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided further, That such vessels so admitted under the provisions of this section may contract with the Postmaster General, under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled 'An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce,' so long as such vessels shall in all respects comply with the provisions and requirements of said act. Tolls may be based upon gross or net registered tonnage, displacement tonnage, or otherwise, and may be based on one form of tonnage for warships and another for ships of commerce. The rate of tolls may be lower upon vessels in ballast than upon vessels carrying passengers or cargo. When based upon net registered tonnage for ships of commerce, the tolls shall not exceed $1.25 per net registered ton, nor be less, other than for vessels of the United States and its citizens, than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the canal, subject, however, to the provisions of article 19 of the convention between the United States and the Republic of Panama entered into November 18, 1903. If the tolls shall not be based upon net registered tonnage, they shall not exceed the equivalent of $1.25 per net registered ton as nearly as the same may be determined, nor be less than the equivalent of 75 cents per net registered ton. The toll for each passenger shall not be more than $1.50. The President is authorized to make, and from time to time amend, regulations governing the operation of the Panama Canal and the passage and control of vessels through the same or any part thereof, including the locks and approaches thereto, and all rules and regulations affecting pilots and pilotage in the canal or the approaches thereto through the adjacent waters."

Such regulations shall provide for prompt adjustment by agreement and immediate payment of claims for damages which may arise from injury to vessels, cargo, or passengers from the passing of vessels through the locks under the control of those operating them under such rules and regulations. In case of disagreement, suit may be brought in the district court of the Canal Zone against the governor of the Panama Canal. The hearing and disposition of such cases shall be expedited, and the judgment shall be immediately paid out of any moneys appropriated or allotted for canal operation.

The President shall provide a method for the determination and adjustment of all claims arising out of personal injuries to employees thereafter occurring while directly engaged in actual work in connection with the construction, maintenance, operation, or sanitation of the canal or of the Panama Railroad, or of any auxiliary canals, locks, or other works necessary and convenient for the construction, maintenance, operation, or sanitation of the canal, whether such injuries result in death or not, and prescribe a schedule of compensation therefor, and may revise and modify such method and schedule at any time; and such claims, to the extent they shall be allowed on such adjustment, if allowed at all, shall be paid out of the moneys hereafter appropriated for that purpose or out of the funds of the Panama Railroad Co. if said company was responsible for said injury, as the case may require. And after such method and schedule shall be provided by the President, the provisions of the act entitled "An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment," approved May 30, 1908, and of the act entitled "An act relating to injured employees on the Isthmian Canal," approved February 24, 1909, shall not apply to personal injuries thereafter received and claims for which are subject to determination and adjustment as provided in this section.

SEC. 6. That the President is authorized to cause to be erected, maintained, and operated, subject to the international convention and the act of Congress to regulate radio communication, at suitable places along the Panama Canal and the coast adjacent to its two terminals, in connection with the operation of said canal, such wireless telegraphic installations as he may deem necessary for the operation, maintenance, sanitation, and protection of said canal, and for other purposes. If it is found necessary to locate such installations upon territory of the Republic of Panama, the President is authorized to make such agreement with said Government as may be necessary, and also to provide for the acceptance and transmission, by said system, of all private and commercial messages, and those of the Government of Panama, on such terms and for such tolls as the President may prescribe: Provided, That the messages of the Government of the United States and the departments thereof, and the management of the Panama Canal, shall always be given precedence over all other messages. The President is also authorized, in his discretion, to enter into such operating agreements or leases with any private wireless company or companies as may best insure freedom from interference with the wireless telegraphic installations established by the United States. The President is also authorized to establish, maintain, and operate, through the Panama Railroad Co. or otherwise, dry docks, repair shops, yards, docks, wharves, warehouses, storehouses, and other necessary facilities and appurtenances for the purpose of providing coal and other materials, labor, repairs, and supplies for vessels of the Government of the United States and, incidentally, for supplying such at reasonable prices to passing vessels, in accordance with appropriations hereby authorized to be made from time to time by Congress as a part of the maintenance and operation of the said canal. Moneys received from the conduct of said business may be expended and reinvested for such purposes without being covered into the Treasury of the United States; and such moneys are hereby appropriated for such purposes, but all deposits of such funds shall be subject to the provisions of existing law relating to the deposit of other public funds of the United States, and any net profits accruing from such business shall annually be covered into the Treasury of the United States. Monthly reports of such receipts and expenditures shall be made to the President by the persons in charge, and annual reports shall be made to the Congress.

SEC. 7. That the governor of the Panama Canal shall, in connection with the operation of such canal, have official control and jurisdiction over the Canal Zone, and shall perform all duties in connection with the civil government of the Canal Zone, which is to be held, treated, and governed as an adjunct of such Panama Canal. Unless in this act otherwise provided, all existing laws of the Canal Zone referring to the civil governor or the civil administration of the Canal Zone shall be applicable to the governor of the Panama Canal, who shall perform all such executive and administrative duties required by existing law. The President is authorized to determine or cause to be determined what towns shall exist in the Canal Zone and subdivide and from time to time resubdivide said Canal Zone into subdivisions, to be designated by name or number, so that there shall be situated one town in each subdivision, and the boundaries of each subdivision shall be clearly defined. In each town there shall be a magistrate's court, with exclusive original jurisdiction coextensive with the subdivision in which it is situated of all civil cases in which the principal sum claimed does not exceed $300, and all criminal cases wherein the punishment that may be imposed shall not exceed a fine of $100 or imprisonment not exceeding 30 days, or both, and all violations of police regulations and ordinances and all actions involving possession or title to personal property or the forcible entry and detainer of real estate. Such magistrates shall also hold preliminary investigations in charges of felony and offenses under section 10 of this act, and commit or bail in bailable cases to the district court. A sufficient number of magistrates and constables, who must be citizens of the United States, to conduct the business of such courts shall be appointed by the governor of the Panama Canal for terms of four years and until their successors are appointed and qualified, and the compensation of such persons shall be fixed by the President, or by his authority, until such time as Congress may by law regulate the same. The rules governing said courts and prescribing the duties of said magistrates and constables, oaths, and bonds, the times and places of holding such courts, the disposition of fines, costs, forfeitures, enforcements of judgments, providing for appeals therefrom to the district court, and the disposition, treatment, and pardon of convicts shall be established by order of the President. The governor of the Panama Canal shall appoint all notaries public, prescribe their powers and duties, their official, seal, and the fees to be charged and collected by them.

SEC. 8. That there shall be in the Canal Zone one district court with two divisions, one including Balboa and the other including Cristobal; and one district judge of the said district, who shall hold his court in both divisions at such time as he may designate by order, at least once a month in each division. The rules of practice in such district court shall be prescribed or amended by order of the President. The said district court shall have original jurisdiction of all felony cases, of offenses arising under section 10 of this act, all causes in equity, admiralty, and all cases at law involving principal sums exceeding $300, and all appeals from judgments rendered in magistrates' courts. The jurisdiction in admiralty herein conferred upon the district judge and the district court shall be the same that is exercised by the United States district judges and the United States district courts, and the procedure and practice shall also be the same. The district court or the judge thereof shall also have jurisdiction of all other matters and proceedings not herein provided for, which are now within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone, of the Circuit Court of the Canal Zone, the District Court of the Canal Zone, or the judges thereof. Said judge shall provide for the selection, summoning, serving, and compensation of jurors from among the citizens of the United States, to be subject to jury duty in either division of such district, and a jury shall be had in any criminal case or civil case at law originating in said court on the demand of either party. There shall be a district attorney and a marshal for said district. It shall be the duty of the district attorney to conduct all business, civil and criminal, for the government, and to advise the governor of the Panama Canal on all legal questions touching the operation of the canal and the administration of civil affairs. It shall be the duty of the marshal to execute all process of the court, preserve order therein, and do all things incident to the office of marshal. The district judge, the district attorney, and the marshal shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for terms of four years each, and until their successors are appointed and qualified, and during their terms of office shall reside within the Canal Zone, and shall hold no other office, nor serve on any official board or commission, nor receive any emoluments except their salaries. The district judge shall receive the same salary paid the district judges of the United States, and shall appoint the clerk of said court, and may appoint one assistant when necessary, who shall receive salaries to be fixed by the President. The district judge shall be entitled to six weeks' leave of absence each year with pay. During his absence, or during any period of disability or disqualification from sickness or otherwise to discharge his duties, the same shall be temporarily performed by any circuit or district judge of the United States who may be designated by the President, and who, during such service, shall receive the additional mileage and per diem allowed by law to district judges of the United States when holding court away from their homes. The district attorney and the marshal shall be paid each a salary of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 9. That the records of the existing courts and all causes, proceedings, and criminal prosecutions pending therein, as shown by the dockets thereof, except as herein otherwise provided, shall immediately upon the organization of the courts created by this act be transferred to such new courts having jurisdiction of like cases, be entered upon the dockets thereof, and proceed as if they had originally been brought therein, whereupon all the existing courts, except the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone, shall cease to exist. The President may continue the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone and retain the judges thereof in office for such time as to him may seem necessary to determine finally any causes and proceedings which may be pending therein. All laws of the Canal Zone imposing duties upon the clerks or ministerial officers of existing courts shall apply and impose such duties upon the clerks and ministerial officers of the new courts created by this act having jurisdiction of like cases, matters, and duties.

All existing laws in the Canal Zone governing practice and procedure in existing courts shall be applicable and adapted to the practice and procedure in the new courts.

The Circuit Court of Appeals of the Fifth Circuit of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review, revise, modify, reverse, or affirm the final judgments and decrees of the District Court of the Canal Zone and to render such judgments as in the opinion of the said appellate court should have been rendered by the trial court in all actions and proceedings in which the Constitution or any statute, treaty, title, right, or privilege of the United States is involved and a right thereunder denied, and in cases in which the value in controversy exceeds $1,000, to be ascertained by the oath of either party or by other competent evidence, and also in criminal causes wherein the offense charged is punishable as a felony. And such appellate jurisdiction, subject to the right of review by or appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States as in other cases authorized by law, may be exercised by said circuit court of appeals in the same manner, under the same regulations, and by the same procedure as nearly as practicable as is done in reviewing the final judgments and decrees of the district courts of the United States.

SEC. 10. That after the Panama Canal shall have been completed and opened for operation the governor of the Panama Canal shall have the right to make such rules and regulations, subject to the approval of the President, touching the right of any person to remain upon or pass over any part of the Canal Zone as may be necessary. Any person violating any of such rules or regulations shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction in the district court of the Canal Zone shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding a year, or both, in the discretion of the court. It shall be unlawful for any person, by any means or in any way, to injure or obstruct, or attempt to injure or obstruct, any part of the Panama Canal or the locks thereof or the approaches thereto. Any person violating this provision shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction in the district court of the Canal Zone shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 20 years, or both, in the discretion of the court. If the act shall cause the death of any person within a year and a day thereafter, the person so convicted shall be guilty of murder, and shall be punished accordingly.

SEC. 11. That section 5 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, is hereby amended by adding thereto a new paragraph at the end thereof, as follows:

"From and after the 1st day of July, 1914, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever (by stock ownership or otherwise, either directly, indirectly, through any holding company, or by stockholders or directors in common, or in any other manner) in any common carrier by water operated through the Panama Canal or elsewhere with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic, or any vessel carrying freight or passengers upon said water route or elsewhere; and in case of the violation of this provision each day in which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense."

Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine questions of fact as to the competition or possibility of competition, after full hearing, on the application of any railroad company or other carrier. Such application may be filed for the purpose of determining whether any existing service is in violation of this section and pray for an order permitting the continuance of any vessel or vessels already in operation, or for the purpose of asking an order to install new service not in conflict with the provisions of this paragraph. The commission may on its own motion or the application of any shipper institute proceedings to inquire into the operation of any vessel in use by any railroad or other carrier which has not applied to the commission and had the question of competition or the possibility of competition determined as herein provided. In all such cases the order of said commission shall be final. If the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be of the opinion that any such existing specified service by water other than through the Panama Canal is being operated in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people and that such extension will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on the route by water under consideration, the Interstate Commerce Commission may, by order, extend the time during which such service by water may continue to be operated beyond July 1, 1914. In every case of such extension the rates, schedules, and practices of such water carrier shall be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and shall be subject to the act to regulate commerce and all amendments thereto in the same manner and to the same extent as is the railroad or other common carrier controlling such water carrier or interested in any manner in its operation: Provided, Any application for extension under the terms of this provision filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission prior to July 1, 1914, but for any reason not heard and disposed of before said date may be considered and granted thereafter.

No vessel permitted to engage in the coastwise or foreign trade of the United States shall be permitted to enter or pass through said canal if such ship is owned, chartered, operated, or controlled by any person or company which is doing business in violation of the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," or the provisions of sections 73 to 77, both inclusive, of an act approved August 27, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," or the provisions of any other act of Congress amending or supplementing the said act of July 2, 1890, commonly known as the Sherman Antitrust Act, and amendments thereto, or said sections of the act of August 27, 1894. The question of fact may be determined by the judgment of any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in any cause pending before it to which the owners or operators of such ship are parties. Suit may be brought by any shipper or by the Attorney General of the United States.

That section 6 of said act to regulate commerce, as heretofore amended, is hereby amended by adding a new paragraph at the end thereof, as follows:

"When property may be or is transported from point to point in the United States by rail and water through the Panama Canal or otherwise, the transportation being by a common carrier or carriers, and not entirely within the limits of a single State, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have jurisdiction of such transportation and of the carriers, both by rail and by water, which may or do engage in the same, in the following particulars, in addition to the jurisdiction given by the act to regulate commerce, as amended June 18, 1910:

"(a) To establish physical connection between the lines of the rail carrier and the dock of the water carrier by directing the rail carrier to make suitable connection between its line and a track or tracks which have been constructed from the dock to the limits of its right of way, or by directing either or both the rail and water carrier, individually or in connection with one another, to construct and connect with the lines of the rail carrier a spur track or tracks to the dock. This provision shall only apply where such connection is reasonably practicable, can be made with safety to the public, and where the amount of business to be handled is sufficient to justify the outlay.

"The commission shall have full authority to determine the terms and conditions upon which these connecting tracks, when constructed, shall be operated, and it may, either in the construction or the operation of such tracks, determine what sum shall be paid to or by either carrier. The provisions of this paragraph shall extend to cases where the dock is owned by other parties than the carrier involved.

"(b) To establish through routes and maximum joint rates between and over such rail and water lines, and to determine all the terms and conditions under which such lines shall be operated in the handling of the traffic embraced.

"(c) To establish maximum proportional rates by rail to and from the ports to which the traffic is brought, or from which it is taken by the water carrier, and to determine to what traffic and in connection with what vessels and upon what terms and conditions such rates shall apply. By proportional rates are meant those which differ from the corresponding local rates to and from the port and which apply only to traffic which has been brought to the port or is carried from the port by a common carrier by water.

"(d) If any rail carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce enters into arrangements with any water carrier operating from a port in the United States to a foreign country, through the Panama Canal or otherwise, for the handling of through business between interior points of the United States and such foreign country, the Interstate Commerce Commission may require such railway to enter into similar arrangements with any or all other lines of steamships operating from said port to the same foreign country."

The orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission relating to this section shall only be made upon formal complaint or in proceedings instituted by the commission of its own motion and after full hearing. The orders provided for in the two amendments to the act to regulate commerce enacted in this section shall be served in the same manner and enforced by the same penalties and proceedings as are the orders of the commission made under the provisions of section 15 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended June 18, 1910, and they may be conditioned for the payment of any sum or the giving of security for the payment of any sum or the discharge of any obligation which may be required by the terms of said order.

SEC. 12. That all laws and treaties relating to the extradition of persons accused of crime in force in the United States, to the extent that they may not be in conflict with or superseded by any special treaty entered into between the United States and the Republic of Panama with respect to the Canal Zone, and all laws relating to the rendition of fugitives from justice as between the several States and Territories of the United States, shall extend to and be considered in force in the Canal Zone, and for such purposes and such purposes only the Canal Zone shall be considered and treated as an organized Territory of the United States.

SEC. 13. That in time of war in which the United States shall be engaged, or when, in the opinion of the President, war is imminent, such officer of the Army as the President may designate shall, upon the order of the President, assume and have exclusive authority and jurisdiction over the operation of the Panama Canal and all of its adjuncts, appendants, and appurtenances, including the entire control and government of the Canal Zone, and during a continuance of such condition the governor of the Panama Canal shall, in all respects and particulars as to the operation of such Panama Canal, and all duties, matters, and transactions affecting the Canal Zone, be subject to the order and direction of such officer of the Army.

SEC. 14. That this act shall be known as, and referred to as, the Panama Canal act, and the right to alter, amend, or repeal any or all of its provisions or to extend, modify, or annul any rule or regulation made under its authority is expressly reserved.

PUBLIC-LAND SERVICE (S. DOC. NO. 922).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting additional estimates of appropriations for the administration of the public-land service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN-DEPREDATION CLAIMS (S. DOC. NO. 925).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 8th instant, a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian-depredation cases for which no appropriation has heretofore been made, amounting to $11,388, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

LIST OF JUDGMENTS (S. DOC. NO. 924).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 8th instant, a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims against the United States, amounting to $31,619.41, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS (S. DOC. NO. 926).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 8th instant, a list of judgments rendered against the United States by circuit and district courts, amounting to $9,748.04, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

LIST OF CLAIMS (S. DOC. NO. 923).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 8th instant, a list of claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, amounting to $138,830.88, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21213) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 356) to further continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 1, 1912, entitled "Joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies," in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 21324. An act providing for the refund of certain duties incorrectly collected on a certain horse; and

H. R. 22199. An act to extend the limits of the port of entry of Galveston, Tex., to include Port Bolivar, in that State.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of sundry assistants to superintendents of construction, United States life-saving stations, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the bill (S. 5173) to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service and the bill (S. 7061) to create the coast guard by combining therein the existing Life-Saving Service and Revenue-Cutter Service, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Henderson M. Powers, of Lancaster, Pa., suggesting certain plans for the improvement of the Mississippi River, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BURNHAM. I present three telegrams in the nature of petitions from various citizens of Antrim, Concord, and Keene, N. H., urging the passage of the so-called Kenyon interstate liquor bill. I ask that the telegrams be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20362) granting a pension to Catherine Wise, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1035) thereon.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 7455) authorizing the towns of Ball Bluff, Libby, and Cornish, in the county of Aitkin, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River, in Aitkin County, Minn., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1036) thereon.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 7427) for the relief of Edgar Allan, jr., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1037) thereon.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 6616) to provide for the protection of national military parks, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1038) thereon.

Mr. DU PONT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 7288) to authorize the transfer of First Lieut. Sydney Smith from the retired to the active list of the Army, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 24266) to authorize the sale of burnt timber on the public domain, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1039) thereon.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred S. Res. 160, providing for an investigation of the management of the Branch National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, Santa Monica, Cal., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1040) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 24458) authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to deliver to certain cities and towns condemned bronze or brass cannon, with their carriages and outfit of cannon balls, etc., reported it with amendments.

INVESTIGATION OF THE PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. From the Committee on Patents I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 337) requesting the President to cause an investigation of the Patent Office and to make a report with recommendations to Congress, and I submit a report (No. 1034) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the joint resolution.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if the President has not already the authority and power proposed to be conferred by the joint resolution?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the joint resolution was reported unanimously by the House Committee on Patents and passed by the House. I think that the President would have authority to ask his Commission on Efficiency to investigate and report upon conditions in any department specified in the joint resolution, but I assume that what is desired is to have an examination made of such a character as if it entailed expense, they may get the necessary appropriation, and this authorizes an expenditure of not to exceed $10,000 for the purpose. I assume that is the reason the joint resolution is necessary.

I will say, in connection with the subject, if the Senator from Minnesota will permit me, and in answer to his question, that there is an elaborate report which I am going to ask to have printed in the RECORD, explaining the object and purpose of the joint resolution. It is the House committee's report.

I think everybody knows that the Patent Office has had very little improvement made in it for many years, and if anybody will read the report, he will see that conditions prevailing there certainly deserve a careful inquiry. The joint resolution, as will appear by the letters printed in the House report, is earnestly advocated by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Patents. If anybody cares to examine the report, he will see, among other things, that the papers and the titles to millions and millions of dollars' worth of property in this country secured by patent are reposing upon shelves in the Patent Office without the slightest protection from fire, and in case of their destruction there would be chaos in that business. I have only a superficial knowledge of the matter, but I am suggesting to the Senate what I see in the report, and of what the chairman of the House committee has informed me. Our committee did not have a session or a hearing on the matter, because the House report was so elaborate, but six out of the seven members of our committee have been polled and have signed a favorable report upon the joint resolution. It is by their instruction that I have reported it.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, my suggestion did not go to the advisability of this inquiry at all. There are two methods by which the inquiry can be made; one is by Congress, or either House of Congress, and the other is by the President, with his board of efficiency, or whatever that board is called. I am not much of a stickler for a close, accurate finding of the relation and line between the executive and legislative branches of the Government, nor am I the champion of the cause of the present Executive, but it does strike me as a very unusual course for Congress to direct the President of the United States to make an examination and investigation of this character. We can make it through committees; we can make it through a commission; and the President can make it through his commission. While it may not be a most vital matter, it does strike me as a very peculiar action on the part of Congress. I simply call the attention of the chairman to that.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, I am very much interested in this subject, but have not had an opportunity to examine the House report to which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] refers. I wish to say in this connection, however, that the Patent Office is a very much neglected branch of this Government. It is self-sustaining, and not only that but it pays a revenue into the Treasury of the United States over and above its expenses and is entitled to more consideration than it has heretofore had.

The remark by the acting chairman of the committee as to the value of the records that are contained in the Patent Office in an unprotected manner is really startling.

In addition to that the services rendered at the Patent Office are very inadequate to the importance of the subject. Patents are granted without sufficient examination because the office is not properly organized. It has got to be so now that a patent is little more than a right to action in the courts, while there ought to be sufficient examination of the application for patent and sufficient work bestowed upon every branch of that service to make the patent stand for something and be worth more, and incidentally to avoid a great deal of misunderstanding that occurs on account of the inadequate work of the department. Many persons are led to believe that they have valuable patents for inventions because the patent has been hung on some unimportant feature of the consideration, when, as a matter of fact, the patent is of no value at all. That leads to great disappointment, and often to litigation and many unfortunate conditions.

As to the matter of procedure, I have not had time to inquire, but I am in favor of an examination of the Patent Office and its work and for a radical improvement at the earliest possible date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the House report on the joint resolution, with certain features of it that were adapted to the House situation and that are not adapted to the Senate situation eliminated, may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The report submitted this day by Mr. BRANDEGEE is as follows:

The Committee on Patents, having had under consideration House joint resolution 337, requesting the President to cause an investigation of the Patent Office and make a report with recommendations to Congress, submits the following report, with a unanimous recommendation that the resolution do pass:

The purpose of the resolution is to secure in ample time for action at the next session of Congress concrete recommendations concerning a reorganization of the administration of the Patent Office from a responsible authority, based upon a careful study of the problems involved by qualified experts.

The reports of the Commissioner of Patents to the Secretary of the Interior and the Congress show that in his judgment the present organization of the Patent Office is inadequate to handle properly the increasing business of the office. Your committee believes that the conditions is such as to justify a thorough investigation of the suggestions made by the commissioner to the effect that both salaries and working space are inadequate. Such investigation, in order to become the foundation of a comprehensive plan for the improvement of the efficiency of the bureau, should be made with a greater regard for details than would be practicable in an investigation by a congressional committee. Such an investigation is within the general scope of the duties of the accountants and experts heretofore employed by the President to inquire into the methods of transacting public business of the Government in the executive branch, popularly known as the Commission on Economy and Efficiency. It is submitted that such a commission, already organized and having already had some experience in the investigation of the conduct of Government business, is better qualified for the proposed work than any special commission which might be organized for the express purpose. The reference of this matter to the existing organization will also avoid the possibility of duplication of effort, inasmuch as it is by existing law within the jurisdiction of this body to investigate the Patent Office.

A complaint frequently made against the Patent Office is that patents are frequently issued on applications that do not state real inventions. Issuance of such patents of doubtful validity, and occasionally of no validity, has a bad effect on the industrial development of the country in two ways. On the one hand, the owner of a questionable patent has a color of right to prevent others from using some machine, device, combination, or process which may in fact have been more or less widely known before the patent was ever applied for; and this may result in the manufacturer, through fear of infringement, abandoning the use of an idea which in justice he should have had the right to use. It may result in his paying a royalty which he ought not to have been obliged to pay, and it may result in his being subjected to the expense of defending an infringement suit based upon a patent which never should have issued. On the other hand, the issuance of a large number of patents of questionable validity creates in the public mind such a distrust of patents that the real inventor finds his patent to some extent discredited in public opinion, and finds in the courts no such presumption of validity as to allow him an injunction for infringement until after the merits of his patent have been passed on by the court. Your committee believe that our patent system can far better serve its purpose of stimulating invention and industry if the examinations in the Patent Office can be made so rigid as practically to prevent the issuance of patents except for real inventions. It is the purpose of this investigation to ascertain to what extent this can be done by improvement of the administration of the Patent Office.

The Patent Office for some years has been a self-sustaining institution; that is to say, the fees collected have been more than sufficient to pay every expense of the bureau. Inasmuch as the office now receives only $15 for the preliminary fee on an application for patent and $20 for final fee on the issuance of a patent, it is confidently believed that every expense necessary to bring the office to the highest efficiency, even including the cost of erecting a new building, should that prove desirable, can be met by a comparatively slight increase in Patent Office fees. This would not be in any sense a burden on the inventor, since he would be fully compensated by the better quality of patents which could be issued after more rigid examination. The resolution directs the attention of the investigating body to this phase of the problem and calls for recommendations to meet all proposed expenses out of increase of fees, so that the improvement can be made without any expense whatever to the Treasury.

The present resolution states the scope of the proposed investigation of the Patent Office at once more broadly and more specifically than the scope of the general investigation of all executive offices is stated in the existing law. It also requests presidential recommendations on this important subject at a specific date which will allow time for thorough consideration before the expiration of the present Congress.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
THE PRESIDENT'S COMMISSION ON ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY,
Washington, July 22, 1912.

Hon. ROBERT J. BULKLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your request for an estimate of the expense to be incurred in making an investigation and report by December 10, 1912, on the administration of the Patent Office, as contemplated by House joint resolution 337, we beg to state that until the investigation of the present methods, personnel, equipment, and building is commenced it is difficult to estimate the number of employees that will be needed in order to complete the work by the date named in the resolution.

The following is an estimate prepared from our knowledge of the Patent Office and its present methods, personnel, etc.:

Estimated expense of investigation of Patent Office, Aug. 10 to Dec. 10, 1912.

Securing a descriptive report, in detail, of the administration of the office, including present methods, personnel, equipment, building, etc., said report to be the basis for consideration of changes to be recommended, and to accompany the report to be submitted to Congress, employment of experts and clerical force	$3,000
Conducting hearings and securing the critical and constructive views of members of the patent bar, Patent Office officials, and others	2,000
Preparation of an analysis of the facts, criticisms of existing conditions, and constructive recommendations by the member or members of the President's Commission on Economy and Efficiency assigned to work upon this inquiry, including clerical and stenographic assistance	2,500
Preparation for submission to Congress of the recommendations of the commission as to changes in law, increase in appropriations, additional building accommodations, etc	1,000
Miscellaneous expenses, such as printing blanks and circulars, travel of employees and expert witnesses, stationery, etc	1,500
Total	10,000

Respectfully,

F. A. CLEVELAND, Chairman.

The reasons for the passage of this resolution are well stated by the Secretary of the Interior in the following letter indorsing the resolution:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 22, 1912.

Hon. ROBERT J. BULKLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BULKLEY: My attention has been directed to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 337) authorizing an investigation of the administration of the Patent Office, with a view to determining whether or not the present methods, personnel, equipment, and building of said office are adequate for the performance of its functions, taking into consideration the present character and volume of business and also such increase in complexity or volume as may be reasonably expected in the future, and to make such recommendations in connection therewith to Congress as may be deemed necessary to enable the Patent Office to discharge its functions in a thorough and economical manner.

I have consulted the Commissioner of Patents in regard to this investigation and I indorse his opinion that an investigation of this character would be of the greatest value. The commissioner has repeatedly, in his fiscal reports to the Secretary of the Interior and annual reports to Congress, invited attention to the inadequacy of the present quarters and equipment and also the insufficiencies of force and salaries to enable the office to perform its business in a prompt and efficient manner, and he will be glad to furnish any and all information required by such an investigating committee and to cooperate with them in every way which will lead to a complete and careful investigation of the present methods, personnel, equipment, and building, as well as in respect to necessary changes of the patent laws.

The present building which houses the Patent Office is not fireproof and is piled high with tons of inflammable matter comprising the secret archives of that bureau. Much of this material is stored in wooden cases and upon open shelves, subject to the ravages of time and other destructive agents. There are also recorded in that office the deeds of all assignments of titles of invention, which are of the greatest value in determining the ownership of valuable patents and the loss of which, by fire or otherwise, would be a tremendous blow to the commercial interests of the country. Conditions have been growing worse from year to year, and the limit of congestion has been reached. In the effort to obtain more room for storage of Patent Office records and for the transaction of business, rooms in the basement have been cleaned out for the storage of records, and several of such rooms have been floored for the use of examining divisions. The District fire department and other officials have pronounced the building unsafe as to fire, and the engineers of the War Department have said that the walls should be lightened of their great weight, especially in the northwest corner of the building.

The commissioner reports that the scientific library is in need of thorough reorganization. That branch is of great importance to inventors and to the office, the number of volumes having reached between forty and fifty thousand of scientific works which are constantly searched by interested people, as well as by the examining corps in the conduct of their work of examining applications for patents. These volumes should be thoroughly digested so that the subject matter will be readily accessible. This will result in the saving of much time and expense.

It is necessary that additional translators be provided, in view of the constant and rapid increase in the number of foreign patents, in order that the same may be classified and promptly sent to the various examining divisions to be used as references in the examination of applications for patents. Translations of such patents are not only made for the examining corps but for inventors and others, and the receipts for such translations would easily pay the salaries of the additional force.

The commissioner states that, although the salaries of the examiners employed in the Patent Office have been increased during his incumbency in the office of commissioner and he has been able by this means to check to a certain degree the great number of resignations, he is still unable to hold as great a percentage of these specially trained men as is desirable to attain the best possible efficiency. Owing to the rigid examination necessary to pass in order to enter the examining corps, it is made up almost exclusively of men who have graduated from various technical schools and universities. After entering the office nearly all take courses of law in the Washington law schools, and, in fact, many have knowledge of law before entering the office. After they have become experienced in the practice of the Patent Office many accept offers made to them by established law firms or corporations. The constantly changing force of course necessarily reduces the efficiency of the office, since it takes considerable time for a new man to learn the class of inventions which have been assigned to him and the practice of the Patent Office in respect to the applications.

At the present time the entire number of American patents, which exceeds a million, is undergoing a reclassification, about half of the work having been completed. It is necessary that additional force be given to speedily terminate the classification of the United States patents and also to reclassify the foreign patents, of which there are between two and three million, as well as to digest and classify the forty or fifty thousand volumes of scientific and technical works in the library above referred to. When this work is completed an enormous benefit will accrue to the inventors and manufacturers of the country and to the public. The work of examination of applications for patents will be simplified and such patents as are granted will have a much greater degree of validity.

Certain changes in the patent laws which relate to the simplification and expedition of the work of the Patent Office and to the safeguarding of the records of the office have been from time to time suggested by the commissioner in his annual report to Congress.

The proposed investigation will receive the hearty commendation not only of the inventors but also of the manufacturers, chemical, electrical, and other engineering associations throughout the country, each of which has, within the last few years, been taking increased interest in the welfare of the patent system and of the Patent Office.

I approve a most thorough investigation of the facts upon which the recommendations of the commissioner are based and welcome all suggestions of changes which will result in the increased efficiency and economy of the system, and especially such as will result in the reduction of the issuance of patents of doubtful validity.

In conclusion I wish to assure you that all efforts to advance the efficiency of the patent system will receive my most hearty support and also the support of the Commissioner of Patents.

Very respectfully,

OREGON & CALIFORNIA RAILROAD CO. SUITS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 22002) supplementing the joint resolution of Congress approved April 30, 1908, entitled "Joint resolution instructing the Attorney General to institute certain suits," and so forth. I ask to have it substituted for the bill (S. 5885) supplementing the joint resolution of Congress approved April 30, 1908, entitled "Joint resolution instructing the Attorney General to institute certain suits," and so forth, which is now on the calendar. The House bill practically is the same as that reported to the Senate by the Committee on Public Lands with one or two sections eliminated, so that the lands will be withdrawn in case of forfeiture.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon to what the bill relates?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It has reference to suits in Oregon against the Oregon & California Railroad Co.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to its consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I will not object to the consideration of this bill, but I think we ought to go on and dispose of the unfinished business at the earliest moment, and I shall object to the consideration of any other bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. LODGE. I said I should not object to this bill, but I gave notice that I would object to the consideration of any other bill, for I think we ought to get to the business of the Senate and dispose of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A similar bill, which is on the calendar, has been heretofore read, and, if there be no objection, the reading of the bill will be dispensed with. The Chair hears no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 5885) supplementing the joint resolution of Congress approved April 30, 1908, entitled "Joint resolution instructing the Attorney General to institute certain suits," and so forth, being calendar No. 768, will be indefinitely postponed.

EVAN URNER RINEHART.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 7267) waiving the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy in the case of Evan Urner Rinehart, to report it with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 1033) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not object.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I agree to one bill, there may be twenty more bills just as meritorious as this for which consideration will be asked, and it will be hours before we get to the important business of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that if this bill does not pass at this session it will be of no use. There is only a matter of six months remaining in which the beneficiary can be admitted to the Naval Pay Corps.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I can have unanimous consent to take up the fur-seal bill at the conclusion of the routine morning business and dispose of it to-day, at some hour to be fixed, I will interpose no objection.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to get unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill which will only take a very short time, and I do not want to consent to anything that will cut it out entirely.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The bill for which I have asked consideration is to extend the age limit in the case of a young man who has served in the Navy for six years, and has been disabled on account of his hearing. The department wants to put him in a position where he can be appointed in the Pay Corps, and the limit is only a year from last February.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to the Senator's bill, and I think the Senator is aware of that; but I want to dispose of the unfinished business. The unfinished business will come up regularly at 12 o'clock, and, if I can get an agreement to vote on it, I will postpone it until the time it regularly comes up, and let other bills be considered meantime.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that the Senator is only going to take up the unfinished business at 12 o'clock? I thought he wanted to take it up at the close of the routine morning business.

Mr. LODGE. My desire is to take up the bill now, but if Senators wish to occupy the hour and a half between now and 12 o'clock, and I can get an agreement to vote on the fur-seal bill after it comes up in its order, that will satisfy me and will enable Senators to get up unobjected bills which they desire to have passed. I therefore ask that when the unfinished business is taken up—if it is not taken up before 12 o'clock—that a vote be taken on the bill and any amendment to it not later than 3 o'clock to-day.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] expects to speak after the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] has concluded. The Senator from Indiana is not here, and so I will suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that he withhold his request until the Senator from Indiana is here. I think there will only be one or possibly two speeches on this side.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if we take up the unfinished business at 12 o'clock and agree to vote not later than 4 o'clock—I will make it 4 o'clock—surely there can not be any more time than that desired. There can not be a disposition to carry the bill over.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I think there is no intention to do that, but it might so happen that, owing to the length of the speech of the Senator from Indiana——

Mr. SHIVELY entered the Chamber.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Indiana is now present, and he can answer for himself. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that, in order to allow Senators an opportunity to dispose of some unobjected bills during the morning hour, I was making a request that when the fur-seal bill came up as the unfinished business at 12 o'clock, there should be an unanimous-consent agreement that we should vote on the bill and amendments not later than 4 o'clock. That will allow four hours. I know of no one except the Senator from New York and the Senator from Indiana who desires to speak on the bill.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, the proposition allows four hours for debate—that is, we proceed to vote at 4 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. Yes. I will say that I am very anxious to get the bill disposed of, not only because we are approaching the end of the session, but I want to give an opportunity to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who has been very considerate in this matter, and to other Senators who have bills, to get up their bills if possible. I do not want to be blocking all other business; and it seems to me we ought to dispose of the fur-seal measure. As I have said, I know of no one except the Senator from New York and the Senator from Indiana who desires to be heard.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, it is difficult to state how long we are going to be or how much time we will probably take. I certainly shall not wish to take more than an hour, and I hope to occupy a good deal less time than that.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, there is no disposition, of course, on the part of myself or anyone else on this side to delay this matter, but it does seem that just now there is considerable haste in regard to it. I presume, however, that can be accounted for because of the state of the public business in the Senate. The Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] says he thinks he will not have occasion to occupy the floor more than an hour. Some little certainty in regard to that will make some difference about the proposed agreement. I certainly do not wish to undertake to foreclose other Senators, and I do not know how many Senators may want to address the Senate on this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SHIVELY. I do not wish to object; but if there are other Senators present who desire to enter into this debate, I assume they will say so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and that order will be entered.

Mr. LODGE. The bill will be taken up at 12 o'clock.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, in regard to the unanimous consent just granted, I should like to know whether it was in the usual form which embraces amendments. I do not know that anything was said about that.

Mr. LODGE. I said the bill and amendments.

Mr. BACON. I did not hear the Senator. Will that include any amendment that may be offered?

Mr. LODGE. As a matter of fact, there is only one amendment pending, and I doubt if there will be many amendments offered, but I was careful to say "the bill and amendments," as the Chair noticed.

Mr. SHIVELY. Including pending amendments?

Mr. LODGE. Amendments pending and to be offered—the usual request. If I did not say it, I intended to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has reported a bill from the Committee on Naval Affairs and has asked unanimous consent for its present consideration. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 7267) waiving the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy in the case of Evan Urner Rinehart.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in line 4, after the word "waived," to insert the words "for one year," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy be, and it is hereby, waived for one year in the case of Evan Urner Rinehart in consideration of his previous naval service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERSONNEL OF REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 7461) construing the provisions of section 8 of the act entitled "An act to improve the efficiency of the personnel of the Revenue-Cutter Service," approved April 16, 1908, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 1032) thereon. The bill contains only a few lines, and the committee were unanimously in favor of it. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that in computing the length of service which shall entitle a warrant or petty officer to longevity pay under the eighth section of the act approved April 16, 1908, entitled "An act to improve the efficiency of the personnel of the Revenue-Cutter Service," all service rendered under the official designation of "pilot" in the Revenue-Cutter Service shall be included.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMISSION ON RURAL CREDITS IN EUROPE.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 132) providing for an American commission for the investigation of rural credits in Europe, introduced on August 8 by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], and upon which the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] addressed the Senate yesterday, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

REFUND OF CUSTOMS DUTIES.

Mr. CULLOM. From the Committee on Finance, I report favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 21324) providing for the refund of certain duties incorrectly collected on a certain horse. It is a small bill involving only $75, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Stanley H. Kunz, of Chicago, Ill., $75 incorrectly collected on a horse named C. W. Burt, returned from Canada to the United States through the port of Port Huron, Mich., and entered on entry numbered 1772 on August 10, 1911.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLASSIFICATION OF FREIGHT.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not want to take up the morning hour with any request for the consideration of any bill on the calendar, but there is a bill here which is of great importance as well as of great urgency. It is a bill to give additional power to the Interstate Commerce Commission in regard to the classification of freight. It has been reported, without dissent, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I do not believe there will be any objection to it from any source, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up to-morrow at 4 o'clock and that we then proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator kindly state the calendar number and number of the bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. The calendar number is 872, Senate bill 6099, to amend section 15 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended June 29, 1906, and June 18, 1910.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the bill lead to much discussion?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think it will lead to any discussion; I think it will be passed in five minutes.

Mr. PENROSE. Then, why should we not take it up this morning after the morning business is concluded?

Mr. CUMMINS. There seems to be some objection to that, but I will be glad to have it taken up then.

Mr. PENROSE. Then, I ask for the regular order—which will not take more than a few minutes—reports of committees.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are still in order.

THE SUGAR SCHEDULE.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21213) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909 (placing sugar on the free list), having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the conferees have been unable to agree.

BOIES PENROSE,
H. C. LODGE,
JOSEPH L. BRISTOW,
J. W. BAILEY,
F. M. SIMMONS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

O. W. UNDERWOOD,
FRANCIS BURTON HARRISON,
CLAUDE KITCHIN,
SERENO E. PAYNE,
SAMUEL W. MCCALL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that the conference report lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report will lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRIGGS:

A bill (S. 7470) for the relief of William H. Jennings (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MCLEAN:

A bill (S. 7471) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Wood (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 7472) increasing the limit of cost for the erection of a United States post-office and courthouse building at San Juan, P. R. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. POMERENE. I introduce a bill to amend section 1 of "An act to regulate commerce." The present act covers the subject of transportation of oil by freight lines. The purpose of this act is to extend it to natural and artificial gas and water.

The bill (S. 7469) to amend the act to regulate commerce as amended June 29, 1906, April 13, 1908, and June 18, 1910, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

FOREIGN EMPLOYMENT OF UNITED STATES FORCES.

Mr. BACON. I introduce the bill which I send to the desk, and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia introduces a bill, which he asks to have read. Without objection, the bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, was unanimous consent asked for the reading of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia requested that the bill be read.

Mr. McCUMBER. Has it just been introduced or is it a bill just reported?

Mr. BACON. It is entitled to be read.

Mr. McCUMBER. In full on the first reading?

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly; bills are only read by title by consent.

Mr. McCUMBER. Without reference to a committee?

Mr. BACON. Yes; bills are only read by title by consent.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator if he only wishes the bill read or whether he wishes it acted upon?

Mr. BACON. I do not wish it acted upon now, of course. I wish it read, though, in order that it may go into the RECORD, and then I shall have one word to say about it.

Mr. McCUMBER. If we are going to take up the time reading long bills, we shall have very little left to dispose of bills on the calendar.

Mr. BACON. This is not a long bill; it is a short bill. I have not occupied one second of the Senate's time this morning.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to prefer a request, which under the circumstances I think is a very reasonable one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill has not been concluded.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well; I thought it had.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, which is as follows:

A bill (S. 7468) to prescribe the authority for the use or employment of the Army in any country or territory beyond the jurisdiction of the sovereignty and laws of the United States, to limit the same, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That except as herein provided or as specially otherwise provided by statute the money appropriated by law at any time for the pay and supplies of the Army shall be used only for the pay and supplies of the Army on duty in the United States and in the territory subject to the laws and jurisdiction of the United States; and no part of the money thus at any time appropriated shall be used for the pay or supplies of any part of the Army of the United States employed, stationed, or on duty in any country or territory beyond and not subject to the jurisdiction and laws of the United States unless in going to and returning from points within the same: Provided, That this prohibition shall not apply to cases of emergency, within the discretion of the President, arising at a time when the Congress of the United States is not in session.

SEC. 2. In every case when, while Congress is not in session as aforesaid, any part of the Army shall be ordered for duty into any country or territory not subject to and beyond the jurisdiction of the laws of the United States, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to report to the Congress at the beginning of the next ensuing session the authority for such order, the number and designation of the troops so ordered on duty in said foreign country, and the operations of said troops under said order; and no part of the money thus at any time appropriated by law shall be used for the pay and supplies of said part of the Army remaining in said foreign country beyond the term of 10 days after the beginning of the next ensuing session of Congress, unless expressly authorized thereto by act of Congress.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not expect to occupy any of the time to-day on any subject, and I will, with the permission of the Senate, detain it two minutes.

I offered an amendment last night to the Army appropriation bill which was almost identical in terms with the bill I have just introduced. Because of the fact that there was no quorum present last night, I could not press it to a final conclusion without seriously inconveniencing the business of the Senate, and therefore I refrained from doing so and submitted to the apparent rejection of the amendment upon the sound without any call for the yeas and nays. I announced at the time that it would not be the last of it; that I intended to continue to press this measure, as I considered it to be an important one. I believe, however, that the newspaper reports represent me as saying exactly the opposite to the effect that I would not be heard on it again. I said in as emphatic terms as I could that I would be, and that that would not be the last of it.

I simply desire to state in this connection what may be in a measure a repetition, and very briefly, that this measure is not to be misrepresented or misunderstood. It has been sought to discredit it by the suggestion that the purpose was to remove from the authorities the power to protect the persons and property of citizens in foreign countries. There is nothing further from the design of this bill. On the contrary, it makes special provision for such protection under all circumstances that may arise.

The only purpose of the bill is to define the authority by which such measures of protection shall be undertaken and to properly limit the exercise of that authority against abuses of the power thus given.

I alluded last night to the fact that every day we have newspaper accounts of the use of the Army or the Navy, including the Marine Corps, in what I consider to be unlawful use in foreign countries, and I instanced several cases in which it had occurred. We have another one this morning, in which it is stated in the press telegrams that in a foreign country, with which we are at peace, the soldiers of the Marine Corps, and officers, too, of course, were actually engaged in battle on yesterday, not simply protecting consuls but taking a part in a battle between contending armies there. For that purpose there were marched into the interior of that country hundreds of armed men of our Marine Corps. The newspapers yesterday morning said there were going to be 350 more of them sent there. They were actually engaged in battle as sharpshooters on one side of a conflict of arms in that country.

I merely mention that to show the importance of this measure. Of course nobody supposes that at this session of Congress anything can be accomplished in the attempted passage of the bill, but it will survive until the next session, when possibly something may be accomplished.

Possibly I am too apprehensive in such matters, but I regard it as a serious matter. I think that if such things as these are to continue, if the armed forces of the United States are to be sent into foreign countries at every whim and caprice of the head of a department, and the Army and Navy of the United States are to be toys and playthings for them to sport with, the time may not be far away when it may be a grave question of inquiry whether serious infractions of the laws of the country, and even of the Constitution, the fundamental law, are made by some of those clothed with power.

I ask that the bill be read the second time and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill was read the second time by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL (H. R. 25970).

Mr. BRIGGS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,200 to pay W. M. Palmer for detail service in charge of enrolled bills, United States Senate, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $254,266.76 to reimburse the State of Massachusetts for money expended as interest and as premium for gold wherewith to pay such interest on bonds issued in 1863 for the purpose of strengthening the harbors and fortifying the coast, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—EMMA A. POLAND.

On motion of Mr. PENROSE, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 1575, 62d Cong., 1st sess.) granting a pension to Emma A. Poland be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—JOSEPH H. RICHARDSON.

On motion of Mr. BRIGGS, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate certain papers accompanying the bill (S. 7155, 62d Cong., 2d sess.) to increase the pension of Joseph H. Richardson, no adverse report having been made thereon.

COMMITTEE ON THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 379) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the name and title of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals be changed to the "Committee on the Panama Canal."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CULBERSON. Let it be read again.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to it.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

INQUIRIES OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

Mr. KENYON. I introduce a resolution to perfect a former resolution (S. Res. 378) I introduced. It will take but a second. I introduce the following as section 2 of the resolution introduced by me Tuesday. It is merely to perfect the resolution, which I ask may stand as a part of the resolution. It need not be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa will send the perfected resolution to the desk, which will be received and printed.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A few weeks ago the Senate authorized the printing as a public document of an article by Hon. Hannis Taylor upon the contribution of Pelatiah Webster in the preparation of the Constitution. There are several errors in the print. I ask that 100 copies be reprinted for the use of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator in his request to limit the number of copies to 100?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have limited it to 100 for the document room.

Mr. SMOOT. If that limit is made I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

POSTAL ROADS.

Mr. POMERENE. During the discussion in the Senate on the subject of good roads the Senate adopted a section in the Post Office bill (H. R. 21279) providing for the appointment of a commission of three Senators and three Representatives to investigate the subject and make report to Congress.

In the State of Ohio on September 3 there will be submitted to the people a proposed amendment to the Constitution authorizing the issuance of $50,000,000 of bonds for the purpose of constructing a system of intercounty wagon roads. I have a copy of that amendment here with some explanatory notes showing the per capita cost to the taxpayers and the percentage of the cost which will be borne by city and village real estate, by farm property, by public-service corporations, by banks, and by personal property.

I also have a communication which is being sent out by friends of the measure which contains a short extract from the address of Gov. Harmon upon that subject. I have also an article from a magazine called "Better Roads" showing the benefits to be derived from this system.

With the hope that this may be of some aid to that commission and also advance the cause of good roads generally throughout the country and particularly in my own State, I ask permission that these papers may be printed in the RECORD. I do not ask that they be read unless the Senate so desires.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF OHIO TO EXTEND STATE BOND LIMIT TO $50,000,000 FOR INTERCOUNTY WAGON ROADS.

"ARTICLE 8.

"SEC. 1. The State may contract debts to supply casual deficits or failures in revenues or to meet expenses not otherwise provided for; but the aggregate amount of such debts, direct and contingent, whether contracted by virtue of one or more acts of the general assembly, or at different periods of time, shall never exceed $750,000; and the money arising from the creation of such debts shall be applied to the purpose for which it was obtained, or to repay the debts so contracted, and to no other purpose whatever: Provided, however, That laws may be passed to contract debts and authorize issues of bonds to an amount which in the aggregate of all issues shall not exceed $50,000,000 for the purpose of constructing, rebuilding, improving, and repairing a system of intercounty wagon roads throughout the State. Not to exceed $10,000,000 of such bonds shall be issued in any one year, and there shall be levied and collected annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds and to provide a sinking fund for their redemption at maturity, and laws shall be passed to provide for the maintenance of said roads. Such wagon roads shall be determined under general laws, and the cost of constructing, rebuilding, improving, repairing, and maintaining the same shall be paid by the State. The provisions of this section shall not be limited or controlled by section 6, of article 12."

Section 1, article 8, of the constitution limits State indebtedness to $750,000.

This amendment raises the limit of indebtedness for the specific purpose of constructing, rebuilding, improving, and repairing a system of intercounty wagon roads to $50,000,000, and, if adopted, will authorize legislation providing for an issue of State bonds not to exceed in the aggregate of all issues $50,000,000. Not more than $10,000,000 in bonds can be issued in any one year. The cost of constructing and maintaining this system of intercounty wagon roads shall be paid by the State, and provision shall be made for the redemption of said bonds. The object is to authorize and empower the State to construct and maintain an intercounty system of permanent wagon roads, the cost of which shall be levied upon the entire tax duplicate.

Based upon statistics given by the Ohio tax commission and computing interest and sinking-fund charges on $50,000,000 at 3½ per cent on 35-year bonds issued in amounts of $5,000,000 each year, the proportion of the tax on account of such bonds borne by the different classes of property within the State will be as follows:

	Duplicate.	Proportion.
		Per cent.
Real estate in cities and villages	$2,544,547,115	41.0
Farm lands	1,676,590,965	27.1
Public utilities	912,862,833	14.7
Banks	174,693,439	2.8
Personal property	891,437,728	14.4
State tax duplicate	6,202,132,080	100.0

Average per capita cost per year, 53 cents.

Average annual tax on each $1,000—	Cents.
For first 10 years	26½
For next 10 years	43
For the last 10 years	20

To the voters of Ohio:

Your attention is invited to the good-roads amendment to be voted upon at the special election on September 3, and to some reasons why you should vote for it.

It was adopted by the constitutional convention after a more prolonged and exhaustive discussion than was given to any other proposition, and by many it is regarded as meaning more to the well-being of the State of Ohio than any other of the proposed amendments.

GOV. HARMON'S STATEMENT.

In an address before the constitutional convention Gov. Harmon said:

"The existing limitation of State indebtedness should not be changed except with respect to building a system of good roads.

"The need of this is great and the cost too heavy to be borne by present taxation.

"The improvement is permanent, and its benefits are not confined to those who make it.

"So the expense may well be spread over a period of years by issuing bonds under a careful limit of amount, with proper provisions for a sinking fund."

The proposed method of building roads by a bond issue, which Gov. Harmon recommended, will not destroy the low-tax-rate idea, to which the people of the State seem to be committed, and preserves to the counties, townships, and road districts their local funds. The campaign for indorsement by the people of the proposal at the polls has been started. It is a true progressive movement. Spreading the interest and sinking fund charges over a term of years will fix a charge not to exceed three-tenths of 1 mill. Undoubtedly the investment of $50,000,000 during the next 10 years will be the greatest asset ever added to the State by internal improvements. It will increase farm values, give employment to men, stimulate many kinds of industry, and begin an era of prosperity throughout the State. The most important part of the proposal is the stipulation that the State shall pay all the cost of these roads, thus leaving to the counties and townships the control and use of county and township road funds for construction and upkeep of local roads.

[From Better Roads.]

YOU SHOULD VOTE FOR THIS AMENDMENT—

If you are a farmer, because your farm will increase in value; you can raise more profitable crops; your cost of haul will be lower; you can market your products when prices are best; your children can get to school; your family can attend church; your physician will be in closer touch with you; your boys and girls will stay on the farm; you will have better mail service, better social life, and happier conditions all about you.

If you are a merchant, because good roads will enlarge your trading radius and make possible for purchasers to reach you every day in the year.

If you represent a chamber of commerce or board of trade, because public roads are commercial feeders to the cities, and every improvement of these roads means a greater prosperity to the cities through increased agricultural productions and greater stimulus to all industries.

If you are a day laborer, because a large per cent of the cost of construction of public roads goes to labor.

If you are a highway official, because you are striving for a better method of road construction and maintenance and more efficient road administration.

If you are interested in railroads, because improved wagon roads mean greater production, consequently more traffic, prevent freight congestion, bring you more industries, more tourists, and larger dividends.

If you are an automobile user, because you can get the benefit of your machine every day in the year; your repair bills will be lower; longer and better tours will be possible at all seasons of the year.

If you are a dealer in farm products and implements, because you can receive the products and deliver the implements at all times of the year.

If you are an automobile manufacturer, because every mile of improved roads means a greater demand for both pleasure and commercial cars, increases wealth, and consequently the power to purchase your machines.

If you are a publisher or editor, because improved roads make wider circulation possible, increase advertising by stimulating commercial enterprises, and because road improvement is the most important economic question of the day.

If you are a manufacturer of road machinery or road materials, because road improvement means more business for you.

If you are a proprietor of a hotel, because improved roads mean more tours and more commercial travel.

If you are a banker, because good roads will increase agriculture, commerce, manufacture, deposits, depositors, and dividends.

If you are a minister of the gospel, because good roads will make it possible for you to visit the people and for the people to reach your meetings.

If you are a traveler or a tramp, because good roads are more attractive than mudholes.

If you are a father or a mother, because your children can get to the public schools, the Sunday school, the mass, and the church.

If you are a progressive citizen, because you can not progress so long as your State and Nation remain in the mud.

CLAIMS AGAINST MEXICO.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I present a letter addressed to the Secretary of State from attorneys representing claimants against the Mexican Government for damages occasioned by the killing and wounding of American citizens on American soil by armed soldiers in Mexico firing across the international boundary line. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUGUST 8, 1912.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: The undersigned are the attorneys representing Mrs. Celia Griffiths, widow of William R. Griffiths, and the attorneys of Mr. A. R. Chandler, father of Walter H. Chandler. Both the said Griffiths and the said Chandler were killed in the streets of the city of El Paso, Tex., on May 8, 1911, by shots fired into the United States from Mexico during the attack on the city of Juarez, by the forces under the command of Francisco I. Madero, now President of the Republic of Mexico.

The claims of our clients were presented to the Department of State, Washington, D. C., by letter of date August 2, 1911. Thereafter the Department of State informed us that the United States disclaimed jurisdiction and could do no more than advise the claimants to appeal to the Government which injured them for such relief as it might see fit to grant.

On the 26th day of September, 1911, we directed a letter to your excellency in which we stated, among other things, the following:

"Though we greatly fear that Mexico will follow the precedents established by all the countries of Latin America during the last hundred years and which are better known to the department than to ourselves, the helplessness of our necessitous clients compels them to accept advice which under the circumstances is nothing less than a command.

But they here now solemnly protest; that they do so under compulsion; that Mexico is not the judge of the fact or of the gravity of the wrongs which it has inflicted on citizens of the United States upon the territory of the United States; that they do not voluntarily submit themselves to the jurisdiction of Mexico, but are, as it were, thrust therein; that whatever may be the decision of Mexico they will refuse to accept the same as res judicate unless the same be consistent with justice, as to which that decision is not even prima facie evidence; that if after those delays which consume the very hopes of the friendless that decision shall be adverse, as all experience but not a sense of the groundlessness of their complaint makes them fear will be the case, they will still entreat the protection of that Government to which they owe allegiance and ask that Government to ignore the judgment which the wrongdoer has rendered in favor of himself."

Thereafter, on February 3, 1912, your excellency again communicated with us in reference to these claims. We answered the said communication on the 12th day of February, 1912, from which said letter we quote the following extracts:

"We protest with as much energy as respect for a great department of the Government of our country and for ourselves will permit against the advice contained in those letters, that our clients, without the moral support or even the manifested sympathy of the Government of their native land, should bargain with the subordinate agents of Mexico as to the price of the blood of a husband or of a son, and if unsuccessful as shopmen of such wares as that should, equally unattended and unsupported, journey through a thousand miles of desert and a hundred warring bands, to whom nothing is sacred and the name American is an invitation to outrage, in order that they may present to a foreign Government, the desolator of their homes, claims which had not received the countenance of their own.

"We greatly doubt if to this good hour the archives of the State Department at Washington contain even a formal expression of Mexican regret for the violation on the 8th, 9th, and 10th days of May, 1911, at El Paso, Tex., of American sovereignty and the destruction of American life on American soil, and it was only after Mr. SMITH had introduced his resolution that Mexico awoke to the fact that it had representatives at the scenes of slaughter, who might confer with the victims, and she then proposed to avail herself of it, not as a means of discharging her duty and of binding up the wounds which she had inflicted, but as the basis of a device to gain additional time and to frustrate the efforts of an American Congressman to obtain redress for his countrymen."

We now desire to present to your excellency the fact that the instructions of your department have been carefully and diligently followed, that as such attorneys we first presented the claims to the Department of State, then upon direction of the department we presented same to the consulative claims commission, acting through Ambassador Wilson at Mexico City. We thereafter, upon the further instruction of the department, presented same to Mr. Llorente, Mexican consul in this city, and that thereafter, upon further direction and instruction from the department, we presented the said claims to Mr. D. A. Richardson, special counsel for the Mexican Government investigating the said claims.

We respectfully represent that on yesterday, in response to a communication of the Mexican consul appearing in local papers, we called at the consulate, and were there advised by Mr. Llorente, the Mexican consul, that the Mexican Government had made an award in the two cases herein referred to in the sum of $2,000 each. We protested against the inadequacy and unjustness of the amount awarded and in behalf of our clients refused to accept same in adjustment of their claims, informing the consul that we reserved our right to appeal to our Government from the decision rendered by Mexico.

Mr. Llorente informed us that the decision of Mexico in awarding damages in these cases was arrived at from a precedent established by the United States Government. We cited to him the fact that the case he had in mind was that of a Mexican citizen who was under indictment and arrest, charged with the commission of a felony, and who sought to effect his escape from the officers of the law, and that the death of the Mexican citizen in that instance occurred without the territorial jurisdiction of the Government of Mexico; that, upon the other hand, the cases he was now considering were those of American citizens who were shot to death under the shadow of the American flag, on American soil, and they were not charged with the commission of any crime nor were they endeavoring to effect their escape from the officers of the law.

His reply was that it was immaterial to him or to his Government what the facts in the various cases might be; that the American Government had placed the sum of $2,000 as a price of a Mexican life; that a Mexican was as good as an American; and that an American was worth no more than a Mexican.

We now desire to represent to your excellency that we have exhausted all methods suggested by you; that Mexico has exhibited the spirit we anticipated eight months ago and has followed the course we suggested it would follow in our communication directed to you and herein referred to. Therefore, in behalf of our clients, we herewith direct this appeal to the American Government, most respectfully praying that our Government will do those things which it deems necessary to require the Government of Mexico to effect a just and equitable adjustment of these claims, which it has passed upon and found to be meritorious, but in which it refuses to make a just settlement.

Respectfully,

COLDWELL & SWEENEY.

CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business on Saturday the Senate take up for consideration Calendar No. 892, being the bill (S. 3315) to prohibit corporations from making contributions in connection with political elections and to limit the amount of such contributions by individuals or persons.

Mr. PENROSE. I object to that bill coming up at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I give notice that at the time named I will move to take up the bill for consideration.

LAWS OF THE PHILIPPINES (S. DOC. NO. 927).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Philippines and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 86 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith a set of the laws enacted by the Second Philippine Legislature during its second session, from October 16, 1911, to February 6, 1912, inclusive, and also certain laws enacted by the Philippine Commission.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 15, 1912.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. J. Res. 356. Joint resolution to further continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 1, 1912, entitled "Joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies," was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WOOL AND METAL TARIFF MEASURES.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, Friday, immediately after the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to reconsider House bill 22195, the wool bill, and that a vote be taken thereon before 2 o'clock; and that immediately after the termination of action by the Senate on the wool bill the Senate will proceed to reconsider House bill 18642, commonly known as the metal bill, and that the vote be taken thereon not later than 5 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that on to-morrow, immediately after the routine morning business has been disposed of, the Senate shall proceed to reconsider House bill 22195, which is known as the wool bill; and that a vote be taken thereon not later than 2 o'clock, and following that, the Senate shall proceed to the reconsideration of House bill 18642, the vote to be taken thereon not later than 5 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. CUMMINS. I could not quite hear the agreement proposed. Is consent asked for the consideration of a motion to reconsider?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is simply a parliamentary procedure in acting upon the bills vetoed.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Constitution says that when a bill vetoed by the President is sent here from the other House the Senate shall proceed to reconsider.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is simply a question, then, as to whether the bill will become a law notwithstanding the disapproval of the President. I have no objection to that, but——

Mr. SIMMONS. I adopted the language of the Constitution.

Mr. CUMMINS. It seems to me the time fixed for that is altogether too late. I assume that it will not lead to any debate.

Mr. PENROSE. It is "not later than 5 o'clock."

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator will observe that I fixed it not later than 2 o'clock on the wool bill and I provided——

Mr. CUMMINS. There are other bills that we are very anxious to have considered, and——

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator does not let me finish. I provided that immediately after we had finished the consideration of the wool bill the Senate should then take up the consideration of the metal bill, and that a vote should be taken on that bill not later than 5 o'clock. We may get through with both bills before 2 o'clock.

Mr. CUMMINS. That would practically consume the day, and I do not believe, in view of the situation, we ought to take a whole day on those bills.

Mr. SIMMONS. What does the Senator suggest? I do not think that the time will be required, and I do not think we would use any more time than was absolutely necessary.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator from North Carolina will propose to dispose of both during the forenoon, I would have no objection, but I am not willing that we should take up the whole day on those matters, which ought to be determined by a vote rather than by debate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think under the form I have presented the request that any more time will be taken than is absolutely necessary. If we get through with the wool bill by 12 o'clock, as I think we will, then we would, under the order, immediately proceed to the consideration of the metal schedule bill. I will change it, however, to meet the view of the Senator, and propose that we vote by 12 o'clock on the first bill and by 2 o'clock on the second bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why can not the Senate proceed to vote not later than 11 o'clock upon one and not later than 12 o'clock upon the other?

Mr. CUMMINS. That would be satisfactory to me.

Mr. McCUMBER. We have debated the bills at length.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will permit me, I would not like to agree to limit the time on the wool bill, as that would oblige us to vote upon it immediately after the routine morning business. The routine morning business may take up two-thirds of the time between 10 and 11. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] I think desires to make some observations, and that might leave him no time.

I will agree, however, that we change the order and take up the metal bill first and vote on that by 11 o'clock to-morrow, and then take up the wool bill. How much time does the Senator from Wisconsin suggest on the wool bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have not any suggestion to make about it. I am going to call up and ask to have the veto message and the bill laid before the Senate to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

Mr. SIMMONS. What did the Senator say?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I say I shall ask to have the bill laid before the Senate to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was asking unanimous consent to take up the steel bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I also included the wool bill. If the Senator does not desire the wool bill included in the request, I will then let my request be as to the steel bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to know of the Senator from North Carolina whether there is any agreement reached as to pairs, and if not, whether we can agree upon the question of pairs.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] has had that matter in charge.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will ask the same question of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, it is an entire mistake to say that I have that matter in charge or have anything to do with it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I beg pardon of the Senator. I meant to say——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am not criticizing the Senator. I merely want to explain that the matter of pairs is a matter between those who enter into the arrangement of pairs. It must be fixed by the Senators themselves. I would consider myself interfering with a matter that I had no right to interfere with—a matter of honor between Senators and absolutely personal to them. As far as I know, it has been so regarded during my service in the Senate.

I do not intend to express any opinion, to make any criticism, or any suggestion as to what shall be done as between Senators who have entered into an agreement to pair. When those who have paired find the arrangement unsatisfactory, they made it themselves and they must unmake it themselves. I would feel that I would subject myself to criticism if I should undertake to interfere in respect to an agreement as to pairs between two Senators. Whenever a Senator is dissatisfied with the arrangement he has made in respect to his pair it is his duty to communicate with the Senator with whom he has his agreement. It is his privilege to cancel it when he sees fit. If he sees fit to disregard it, that is a matter which concerns his honor and his understanding of the agreement. I have no authority over it. I do not feel that I ought to make even a suggestion in respect to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course it is a situation that does not occur very often. We are here near the close of the session with a great many Senators absent. I thought perhaps we could have some arrangement made whereby on the votes to be taken, where there are pairs, the minority side could arrange for another pair.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We can not arrange for pairs. That arrangement must be made by the Senators themselves. I realize the position in which the Senator considers the question to be, but it has been made by other Senators. There are Senators on the floor who have felt that there ought to be some change where a two-thirds vote is required and the wires were open to them and they have communicated in a few hours and adjusted it either by an agreement or by canceling the pairs. I can not interject myself into the arrangement. I have not any right to do it and I am not willing to do it. Every Senator must take care of the matter of his pair according to his own wishes and his own judgment as to what is right.

Mr. LODGE. On the matter of treaties in the past—I refer to those things that have been most recent in our experience—there was no question about giving two for one where a two-thirds vote was required. There was a general understanding that the Senator voting on the side of one-third was entitled to a double pair. It was the understanding that if he did not receive a double pair he was at liberty to vote. They have always given double pairs on treaties, and on some of the vetoes which I have looked up, as on the Fitz-John Porter case, and one or two others, double pairs were given the same way. It has been a matter of general understanding always that the Senator voting on the minority side was entitled to his double pair. Unless there is some such general understanding, I am afraid it will be impossible to arrive at an agreement.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I dislike to say anything more, but I must take issue with the Senator from Massachusetts. That may have been his understanding, but, so far as I am advised, there has been no understanding one way or the other in the Senate. Each Senator must understand it as he sees fit.

Mr. LODGE. That is very well, but to have it understood that if a Senator demands a double pair and then disregards his general standing pair, if he does not receive it, puts on him a burden that is hardly fair. The general understanding about double pairs I have never before seen questioned.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have never seen such a question raised. I have been here for 17 years, and I never heard the suggestion before.

Mr. LODGE. It was raised on the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is a matter which each Senator has during the present session determined for himself. If he feels at liberty to violate his pair it is for his sense of honor to determine whether he will do it or not. If he is not satisfied with it there is ample time for him now to use the wires and adjust the matter with his pair or cancel the pair. The Senate rules do not recognize pairs. It is peculiarly a personal matter between Senators.

Mr. LODGE. I do not refer to the rules.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. As to saying there was an understanding in the Senate one way or the other, as to when a Senator violates his pair, that is entirely unknown to me. I have never known such an understanding since I have been in the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. That is the precise point, when the Senator uses the word that a Senator is to violate his pair. It has never been considered a violation of the pair where a Senator was entitled to a double pair. That was the universal understanding at the time of the treaty, and when the minority over there, the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] and others, asked for double pairs they were always given. That was the general understanding. Nobody ever considered that it was a violation of the pairs. There was no suggestion of it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator put his understanding as the universal understanding of the Senate. It can not be universal as long as I am a Member of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I am not——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will let me get through; it can not be said that it is universal as long as I am a Member of the Senate. I have no such opinion. I never heard of such an understanding. I do not believe to-day there is any understanding one way or the other about it in the Senate. It is a matter which each Senator must settle for himself and must adjust with his pair. There is no understanding that a Senator may violate his pair. It is for him to determine the matter and to stand by the arrangement. If he wants to correct it he must negotiate with the Senator with whom he has a pair.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. President, I am compelled, in view of the remarks made by the Senator from Virginia, to object to fixing a time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

CLASSIFICATION OF FREIGHT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate Senate resolution No. 375.

Mr. BORAH. There is a unanimous-consent agreement on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution to which the Senator from Ohio refers was laid over without prejudice, and undoubtedly he has a right to ask that it be laid before the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have been attempting to secure recognition for some time. It is evident that we can not call up any more bills this morning and I do not want to interfere with the unanimous-consent agreement or even to infringe upon it.

I again ask unanimous consent that to-morrow at 4 o'clock the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 872, the bill (S. 6099) to amend section 15 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended June 29, 1906, and June 18, 1910, it being the bill to which I referred a few minutes ago. I promise the Senate that if we take up this bill and it involves any considerable debate I will not resist a motion to displace it with some other business.

Mr. CLAPP. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa if he would have any objection to this. I desire to express my sympathy with him as to the importance of the bill, for which he now has asked consideration. There is also another bill reported from the same committee that is a very important bill. I do not think it will lead to any debate. With his permission, I should like to include in the order that, following the disposition of the bill referred to by the Senator from Iowa, the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 651, the bill (S. 957) relating to bills of lading, and see if we can not dispose of both those subjects in one afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the request of the Senator from Iowa will have to be submitted as an independent proposition. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I do not desire to object to the request of the Senator from Iowa, because I am in entire sympathy with his having that hearing, but I give notice now that the deserving cases on this calendar that have been kicked along here for speeches on all sorts of subjects are going to have a chance to be considered, or I shall object to every single request from this time on for unanimous consent. We can not attend to business on this calendar and listen to long speeches; and I am going to insist on the calendar having some attention.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not want to seem discourteous, but I believe my matter has the right of way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the request of the Senator from Iowa. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not wish to interpose an objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa, and I will not do so if he will so modify his request that the bill named therein, instead of at the time fixed in the request as submitted, would be taken up upon the disposition of the wool bill and the veto of the President.

Mr. CUMMINS. I named that hour because I assumed before the day was over we would have a unanimous-consent agreement upon the wool bill and it would terminate before that hour. I do not want to interfere with that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I apprehend not. I do not know that the debate over the wool bill will take a half an hour or 15 minutes, but it may run along beyond the two hours. If it should get into such a position before the Senate and be brought up against the unanimous-consent agreement of the Senator from Iowa to take up this bill at exactly 4 o'clock, it would have to be cut off.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am willing to modify my request by saying subject to the disposition of the wool bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think that undoubtedly the Senator will be able to get it up much earlier.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

STANDARD OIL CO. AND AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of the Senator from Ohio is before the Senate, and it will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 375, submitted by Mr. POMERENE on the 9th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, relieved from further consideration of S. Con. Res. 4, declaring it to be the sense of the Senate and of the House of Representatives that criminal prosecutions should be begun against the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co. and the other parties and persons who were declared by the Supreme Court of the United States to be violating the criminal provisions of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman antitrust law, and instructing the Attorney General to institute criminal prosecutions against them where the evidence, in his opinion, justifies said proceedings; and Resolved further, That said resolution be laid before the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understood the Presiding Officer to declare that morning business had closed. We have a unanimous-consent agreement which I understand necessarily precedes everything else. It is that immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business we shall proceed to the consideration——

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator speak a little louder? I am not able to hear him.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was simply reading the unanimous-consent agreement, which is that "immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21094) to create a commission on industrial relations." I make the point of order that that is the only business in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In answering the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, the Chair will say that this is a resolution that was submitted; that upon the request of the Senator from Ohio it was passed over without prejudice on two former occasions, and that under the usual rule it would come up on the call of the Senator. The Chair is of the opinion that it is properly before the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, Senate concurrent resolution No. 4 was referred to the Judiciary Committee on May 7. I am advised that on Monday of this week, after consideration in the committee, a motion was made to indefinitely postpone, and that was defeated. Another motion was made to report it adversely, and that was defeated. Another motion was made to report it back to the Senate without any recommendation, and that was defeated.

Under these circumstances it seems to me that the Senate ought to have the right to act upon the pending resolution, and I am inclined to insist upon it, because I feel keenly that if due respect is to be shown to the law it must be enforced. That is the sentiment which prevails, I think, with all good citizens. On this matter there is no less authority than the Attorney General himself. In an article printed in the Century Magazine of February he says, with reference to this law:

> There is, of course, some genuine discontent with the Sherman law, but I suspect most of it arises not so much from any real uncertainty as to its meaning as from a realization of that meaning.

And I think that that is the trouble with the defendants in these cases.

On page 620 the Attorney General further says:

> On the other hand, the faithful and rigid enforcement of the Sherman law will soon demonstrate the folly of trying to carry on a business which is not legitimate.

That is my doctrine; and if this law had been enforced as it ought to have been we would not have the trust question with us now.

Again he says, in answer to those who speak of the repeal or the amendment of the Sherman law, on page 621:

> There is, in my judgment, no occasion to amend the Sherman law. That law is effective as it stands.

The President himself in his tour throughout the Northwest, on October 27, 1911, said, in a speech delivered before the Hamilton Club in Chicago, as follows:

> I would rather cut off my right hand than to do anything to disturb the business of the country, especially with a motive of cultivating political success. But we have a condition of lawlessness to deal with. We have had it for 20 years. Men have gone on organizing combinations in violation of the antitrust law on the theory that it either could not or would not be enforced. The Supreme Court has held that this lawlessness must be stamped out. There is no discretion in the Executive to suspend any single statute.

If that is true, it must apply to every provision of the statute.

Continuing, the President said:

> It is his duty to enforce the law and to direct the prosecution of those who violate it. * * * There is only one way that I know of to cure the corporations that are suffering from contagion and disease, and that is to eradicate the disease. The law will be enforced to the letter.

President Taft, in his speech in Chicago, October 28, 1911, on the subject of the enforcement of the Sherman law, said:

It is not within my discretion as an executive officer to suspend any statute that stands upon the statute books. I am here under my oath taken to defend the Constitution and the laws of the United States, to enforce the law, and when I find it violated, to prosecute or direct prosecution of those who violate it.

It seems to me that with this construction as to the character of the duties to be performed by the President and the Attorney General they ought not now to hesitate in the enforcement of the criminal provisions of this law after the Supreme Court of the United States has declared that these provisions have been violated.

I shall not attempt to discuss the matter further, except to say that when it comes to the question of the constitutional authority of the Senate to adopt a resolution of this kind the Senate passed a bill providing for the appeal in the American Tobacco Co. case, and just this morning a bill was passed directing the Attorney General to adjust certain pending legislation. If we have the power to instruct in any one class of cases, it seems to me we have in the other; and I therefore insist upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do not know whether I made myself clear in making the point of order which I did. I understood the Chair declared that morning business was closed. There is upon the calendar a unanimous-consent agreement that immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bill 21094. According to my information there is nothing more sacred than a unanimous-consent agreement. According to my understanding nothing can take precedence of a unanimous-consent agreement. The time having arrived when the unanimous-consent agreement should be taken up, the Senate has nothing else to do except to proceed with the consideration of it.

If the Senator from Ohio had called up his resolution during the continuance of the morning business, there might have been reason for saying that he could proceed with it, but the morning business having been concluded, it seems to me it is to ignore the unanimous-consent agreement to permit this business to intervene.

I again make the point of order, Mr. President, that there is nothing in order at this time but to proceed with the consideration of House bill 21094.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, in justification of his own action, will state that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] came to the Chair and made inquiry about the resolution, and the Chair suggested to him that upon the conclusion of the morning business his resolution would be in order. Resolutions going over have always been considered to be a part of the morning business. Inadvertently the Chair did state that morning business was closed, and it was with the understanding that the Senator from Ohio should be recognized to call up his resolution. The resolution was laid over by unanimous consent to retain its place on the calendar, the Senator having the right to call it up at any morning session during the morning hour. The Chair believes that, under the circumstances, it was no transgression of the rule, and feels constrained to overrule the point of order.

The Chair will add, if there is any fault it was on the part of the Chair in not recognizing the Senator from Ohio before inadvertently announcing the close of morning business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, to my mind the resolution which was presented by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] July 26, 1911, and from the consideration of which the pending resolution seeks to discharge the Judiciary Committee is one of the most remarkable propositions that has been presented to either House of Congress. The concurrent resolution to which he has referred reads as follows:

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of The Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey and others against The United States decreed, in effect, the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey and 33 other constituent organizations and 7 individual defendants have united together to form and effect a combination, and as such conspired to monopolize, and have monopolized, and are continuing to monopolize a substantial part of the commerce among the States, in the Territories, and with foreign nations in restraint of interstate trade and commerce, in violation of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman antitrust law; and

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of The United States of America against The American Tobacco Co. and others, and in the case of The American Tobacco Co. and others against The United States, in effect decreed that the said the American Tobacco Co. and its codefendants, corporate and individual, had formed and maintained a combination in restraint of trade, and that they were engaged in an attempt to monopolize and in a monopolization within the first and second sections of the Sherman antitrust law; and

Whereas under the provisions of said act if the said parties or persons, or any of them, or anyone for them or anyone aiding or abetting them, have entered into or continued any contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, in the Territories, or with foreign nations, or have monopolized or attempted to monopolize or combine or conspire with any person or persons to monopolize, any part of the trade or commerce as aforesaid, they are amenable to criminal prosecution; and

Whereas no criminal prosecutions have been begun against any of the said parties or persons: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), First. That it is the sense of the Senate and of the House of Representatives that criminal prosecutions should be begun against any or all of said parties or persons who shall have, in the opinion of the Attorney General, violated the criminal provisions of said statute.

Second. That the Attorney General of the United States be, and he is hereby, instructed to institute criminal prosecutions against said parties or persons for said violations, if any, where the evidence, in the opinion of the Attorney General, shall justify such proceedings.

Mr. President, if this resolution is to be construed literally as it reads it is absolutely inane; it means nothing; it amounts to nothing unless it be a mere slur upon the office of the Attorney General of the United States; and I do not understand that it is the business of Congress to indulge in that sort of thing. The language of the resolution is:

That criminal prosecutions should be begun against any or all of said parties or persons who shall have, in the opinion of the Attorney General, violated the criminal provisions of said statute.

Congress is asked to solemnly pass a resolution directing the Attorney General to do what the law already commands him to do, namely, to institute a criminal prosecution under this law if, in his opinion, the facts will warrant such a prosecution. If, in the opinion of the Attorney General, this statute has been violated and he, nevertheless, refuses to prosecute, then this resolution is entirely out of place, and the proceeding which Congress should take should be one begun in the other House, and instead of being a mere resolution directing him to institute a prosecution, it should be a proceeding for the impeachment of that officer. If it is not his opinion that the statute has been violated, then this resolution ought not to be passed and no action at all should be taken. Evidently it is not the opinion of the Attorney General that the statute has been violated or he would have instituted the prosecution, provided he had believed that facts could be obtained which would probably result in a conviction.

Mr. President, I object to this resolution, and I understood it to be the sense of the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary that it was objectionable, because it undertakes to invade the province of a separate and independent department of the Government. The Constitution very wisely divides the several general governmental functions of the Government among the three several departments—the judicial, the legislative, and the executive departments. The Constitution provides that the legislative power shall be exercised by the Congress of the United States, and by that affirmative declaration effectually inhibits Congress from exercising anything but legislative power. It is true that in the Constitution there are specific provisions which authorize, in certain instances, Congress to exercise judicial power. It exercises the judicial power in impeachment cases; it exercises judicial functions when passing upon the right of its Members to their seats; but, except where specific provision is made in the Constitution, the grant to Congress of the legislative power is absolutely exclusive. Congress has no authority, as Congress, to do anything except to pass laws. Will anybody contend that this resolution is a law? A resolution directing the Attorney General to institute a prosecution for the violation of a law is not a law; it is purely the exercise of an executive function.

The Constitution declares as emphatically with reference to the executive power, that the executive power shall be vested in the President; and the President, unless the Constitution expressly confers some portion of the executive power upon another branch of the Government, is the sole possessor of the executive power of the United States. One of the executive powers—and it so happens that it is one of the executive powers which are enumerated in express words in the Constitution—is that the President "shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed." So when Congress passes a general statute providing that certain acts shall constitute a criminal offense, Congress has exercised its function; Congress has then passed a law; and it devolves not upon Congress but upon the executive department of the Government to see that that law is executed. It is no business of Congress, any more than it is the business of citizens generally, to oversee the execution of the laws which they make.

If the power to pass laws and the power to execute laws were vested in the same body, the result of it would be what it has always been in the history of this world—a despotism—because whenever the body which makes the law also undertakes to execute it and undertakes to construe it we have, under the guise of interpretation and under the guise of execution, the making of special laws or of special edicts. That would be the result here, and the result of any attempt to determine that a particular law passed by Congress had been violated and to direct that a specific prosecution should be instituted.

We have no machinery in Congress that investigates these questions. Congress is not a grand jury; Congress is a law-making body; and yet we are called upon here, first of all, to make up our minds that probably this statute has been violated. It may have been violated, but I for one do not know whether or not the circumstances are such that the Attorney General ought to institute this prosecution; and I doubt very much whether there is anybody here who, if he were the Attorney General of the United States, upon the information which he now has, would undertake to institute this prosecution. I imagine that any Member of the Senate, if he were Attorney General and were charged with this responsibility, would want to investigate it a little further.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Utah says he does not know whether or not the statute has been violated. The Supreme Court in the American Tobacco Co. case says particularly that by the undisputed facts in the record the law has been violated. It seems to me that is pretty fair evidence upon which to base the conclusion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do not recall precisely what the Supreme Court has said in the Tobacco case, but certainly the Senator from Ohio would not claim that a grand jury would be warranted in finding an indictment upon the declaration which the court had made—the Supreme Court of the United States or any other court—in a civil proceeding.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, most certainly I do not so claim; but I do claim that the evidence upon which the Supreme Court says the statute has been violated—and it makes that statement based upon undisputed facts—would justify an inquiry by the grand jury.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio if the Supreme Court indicated that the evidence was sufficient to warrant a conviction in a criminal case, or merely that the act had been violated and the evidence was sufficient as to civil cases?

Mr. POMERENE. I assume that they were deciding a civil case at the time, but if the Senator will permit me to read a sentence from the opinion in the Tobacco case I will do so. The court says:

> In stating summarily, as we have done, the conclusions which, in our opinion, are plainly deducible from the undisputed facts, we have not paused to give the reasons why we consider, after great consideration, that the elaborate arguments advanced to affix a different complexion to the case are wholly devoid of merit.

Mr. KENYON. Pardon me just a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I have discovered that it is quite different in securing convictions under the criminal features of the Sherman law from what it is to secure dissolution in civil actions, for it would require much more evidence in any criminal case, especially under the Sherman Act. Juries do not seem to be willing to regard it the same as they do other statutes, and I have had somewhat of a painful experience in trying to enforce the criminal features of that act. I am in favor, nevertheless, of every effort to enforce the criminal features of that act, and I believe it is the only method of curbing the trusts; but I am not in favor of this resolution in its present form, directing the Attorney General merely to do his duty. As the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] suggests, if he has not done his duty, the remedy is somewhere else. I believe, from my experience with the Attorney General, that there is no man who has ever brought to the discharge of his duties in connection with the Sherman Antitrust Act and its enforcement the same capacity and courage as has the present Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it does seem to me, in view of the fact that there has been one case in New York in which a jury refused to convict and another case in the city of Chicago in which a jury refused to convict, that we are hardly justified in making the statement that it is impolitic to begin litigation of this character because juries will not convict. It seems to me that it would be more appropriate to come in and ask to repeal the criminal provision of the statute or insist upon the abolishment of the jury system in this class of cases.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not wish to intrude upon the time of the Senator from Utah——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. But I do not want the Senator from Ohio to put me in a false position as to that. If I have any hobby in the world, it is the enforcement of the criminal features of the Sherman Act. I am not in favor of repealing the law against murder or horse stealing because, forsooth, some murderers and horse thieves escape. I was merely calling attention to the enforcement of the criminal features of that act. The Attorney General is in a position to know, I think, better than we are all the facts, and this resolution certainly is an inference, at least, that he is not performing the duties of his office. I have introduced a bill here, for which I hope I will have the Senator's support, striking fines out of the Sherman Act, so that in case of conviction or in case of certain pleadings the court will be compelled to send the defendants to jail. Suppose you prosecute the Standard Oil Co. and the court assesses a fine. It is a farce; it does not amount to anything; the fine is merely transferred to the back of the consumer; but I do think that for the Senate to pass a resolution that instructs an officer such as the Attorney General merely to do his duty is rather a farce.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether he thinks that to direct a prosecution of a violator of a general law is an executive function or a legislative function?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, primarily the duty to prosecute is an executive function, but the departments are so correlated that the legislative branch of the Government is constantly giving directions and instructions by statute as to what shall be the jurisdiction and what shall constitute the duties of executive officials; and if we have the right to pass such a statute, we also, in my judgment, have the right to pass a resolution calling the attention of the Attorney General to a particular case and directing him, not absolutely, but directing him in the event that the evidence justifies it, to begin the prosecution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Why leave it to the opinion of the Attorney General? If the Senator is entirely certain that the statute has been violated and there is sufficient justification for the prosecution of these offenders, why not, if we have the power, instruct the Attorney General in positive terms to institute this prosecution?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I recognize the fact that he must investigate this evidence. To this day we have not an expression of opinion from the Attorney General that he can not get the evidence or that the evidence does not exist whereby these men can be convicted; but the Supreme Court has made a finding in this case. That finding was in the civil branch of the the case it is true and I recognize the difference in the degree of proof which is required between a civil and a criminal case. I recognize also that there is a possibility that he may have given an immunity bath to some of these men, but that is no reason why we should not pass this resolution and have some information upon the subject.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Ohio knows very well that the Attorney General has investigated this case. He has investigated the facts of this case, because it was he who instituted the prosecutions to which the Senator refers, in which the decisions of the Supreme Court were made. That being so, is it not perfectly clear that the Attorney General is not of opinion that criminal prosecutions could be maintained?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me submit to the Senator, if the Attorney General is not of that opinion, then the Senator must conclude that the Attorney General has violated his oath of office and ought to be proceeded against by impeachment.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator say to the Senate that the Attorney General is of the opinion that the criminal provisions of the statute has not been violated?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Utah will not say anything about it, because he does not know.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, Mr. President, why does the Senator draw the conclusion that the Attorney General is probably of the opinion that the criminal sections of the law have not been violated?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Because, Mr. President, the ordinary presumption is that an officer will do his duty, and the Attorney General is no exception to that rule. It is to be presumed—and Congress has no business, without evidence to the contrary, to assume otherwise—that the Attorney General, having investigated this case, is of the opinion that no prosecution should be instituted; otherwise, as I have already stated, he would be amenable to another proceeding.

Mr. POMERENE. In view of the findings of the Supreme Court, I am inclined to believe that the Senator's presumption is rather violent.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator mean to say that he thinks the Attorney General has violated his oath of office?

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator press the question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My question was a perfectly plain one.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, it is my belief that he has not done his duty.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then, why does not the Senator present a resolution instructing him to do it. If the Senator thinks the Attorney General is of the opinion that these people ought to be prosecuted and that he has deliberately declined to do his sworn duty, why does not the Senator present a resolution to that effect?

Mr. POMERENE. The point has not been reached when it is necessary, in my judgment, to take such violent measures.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. It is interesting in that connection, when the charge is made that the Attorney General has not done his duty, to know that in the administration of his office there have been 39 indictments under the Sherman Act and 27 bills in equity, a total of 66 cases, which is more than all the cases, criminal and civil, brought under all the administrations since the law was enacted. In the administration of President Roosevelt, who I imagine the Senator from Ohio would not question had done his duty, there were 18 bills in equity and 25 indictments, a total of 43; in the administration of President McKinley there were 3 bills in equity and not a single criminal prosecution; in the administration of President Cleveland—and during a portion of that time the governor of the State of the Senator from Ohio was Attorney General and had charge of these matters—there were 2 indictments brought under the Sherman Act, 4 bills in equity, and 2 informations for contempt, making 8 altogether. So that the present Attorney General has secured 39 indictments as against 2 in the administration of President Cleveland. He has certainly tried to do his duty.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Can the Senator from Iowa state how many convictions have resulted?

Mr. KENYON. Out of all these cases?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In those 39 cases.

Mr. KENYON. The only jail sentence that has been imposed since the Sherman law was enacted has been under the administration of the present Attorney General, in the Turpentine Trust case, commonly known as the Naval Stores case, where two gentlemen were convicted on trial, the decision affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals, and the case is now in the Supreme Court of the United States upon a writ of certiorari. That is the only jail sentence imposed under this act. There have been a large number of pleas, I will say to the Senator from Utah, of nolle contendere, in which fines have been imposed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. How many convictions altogether?

Mr. KENYON. I do not think I can say. There have been a large number. For instance, in the Wire Pool Trust case in New York there were 66 who pleaded nolle contendere and were fined, the Government insisting on a jail sentence. In the Glass Trust case at Pittsburgh there were 16 who entered the same plea, and were fined, the Government and the Attorney General insisting on jail sentences.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. In view of the fact that we have wandered away from the real question at issue into the records of the different administrations with reference to the enforcement of this law, all of which records will receive their encomiums during the coming political discussion, I wonder if the Senator from Ohio would not be willing to ask that the resolution go over without prejudice and give me 15 minutes in which to pass a good measure.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I realize that the Senator from Idaho has a unanimous-consent agreement to take up the matter he has in mind, and I am willing that the resolution shall go over under the conditions suggested.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am quite willing to do that; but I simply want to make this final observation, that, if Congress has the power to pass a resolution of this kind, or ought to pass a resolution of this kind, it can be done in any kind of a case. Whenever we hear that somebody has violated the post-office laws or committed a murder or done anything else under a Federal statute, it would be perfectly proper to come in here and introduce a resolution to have that man prosecuted, but I undertake to say that that is not the function of Congress at all.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, before the Senator closes, I want to suggest to the Senator from Ohio and urge that he strike out a portion of his resolution. If he would strike out the second paragraph instructing the Attorney General to institute criminal prosecutions, so that the resolution would be merely an expression of the sense of the Senate, I would be glad to support it. I believe in criminal prosecutions of the officers of Standard Oil, and believe guilt must be made personal; but I do not believe in insulting the Attorney General of the United States, especially an Attorney General who has done more than any Attorney General ever did to put life into the Sherman Act.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask that the resolution go to the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the order, in the opinion of the Chair, if it is not concluded this morning.

Mr. POMERENE. Do I understand that the Senate has agreed to take up the matter of the Senator from Idaho and let this resolution go over without prejudice?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has not. The Senator's request that it shall go over without prejudice has not been submitted. Did the Senator make that request?

Mr. POMERENE. I made that request.

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask that the resolution go to the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go to the calendar unless it is concluded by 12 o'clock.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I intend to proceed with the discussion unless the Senator from Ohio is willing to have the resolution go to the calendar.

Mr. BORAH. If it is proceeded with until 12 o'clock, what will be its fate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go to the calendar.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the Senator from Ohio had better let it go to the calendar. It will go there anyhow.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, the Senator from Utah insists upon his objection?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly, I insist upon it; I do not make objections unless I intend to insist upon them.

Mr. POMERENE. I understood it was the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] who made the objection to its being passed over until to-morrow, preserving its place.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I also objected. Several Senators objected.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from North Dakota joined me in the objection, and I certainly shall object unless the resolution goes to the calendar.

Mr. POMERENE. The purpose is quite apparent, and, as the resolution is now in the archives of the Judiciary Committee and the Senator from Utah insists that he is going to talk until after the morning hour has expired, I do not know that anything is gained by keeping the Senator from Idaho out of his place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go to the calendar.

INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I can not, because I have only 10 minutes in which to do business. Mr. President, I now ask to take up the bill the consideration of which was fixed by unanimous-consent order for this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement referred to by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] the Chair lays before the Senate the bill (H. R. 21094) to create a commission on industrial relations.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first acted upon.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to hear the bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I waive the request as to the further reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for amendments, and the committee amendments will be first stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Education and Labor was, in section 3, page 2, line 23, before the word "years," to strike out "three" and insert "two," so as to read "two years."

Mr. BORAH. On further consideration by the committee we desire to have the amendment disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 3, section 4, line 25, after the word "usefulness," to insert: "into the question of smuggling or other illegal entry of Asiatics into the United States or its insular possessions, and of the methods by which such Asiatics have gained and are gaining such admission, and shall report to Congress as speedily as possible with such recommendation as said commission may think proper to prevent such smuggling and illegal entry," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That the commission shall inquire into the general condition of labor in the principal industries of the United States, including agriculture, and especially in those which are carried on in corporate forms; into existing relations between employers and employees; into the effect of industrial conditions on public welfare and into the rights and powers of the community to deal therewith; into the conditions of sanitation and safety of employees and the provisions for protecting the life, limb, and health of the employees; into the growth of associations of employers and of wage earners and the effect of such associations upon the relations between employers and employees; into the extent and results of methods of collective bargaining; into any methods which have been tried in any State or in foreign countries for maintaining mutually satisfactory relations between employees and employers; into methods for avoiding or adjusting labor disputes through peaceful and conciliatory mediation and negotiations; into the scope, methods, and resources of existing bureaus of labor and into possible ways of increasing their usefulness; into the question of smuggling or other illegal entry of Asiatics into the United States or its insular possessions, and of the methods by which such Asiatics have gained and are gaining such admission, and shall report to Congress as speedily as possible with such recommendation as said commission may think proper to prevent such smuggling and illegal entry. The commission shall seek to discover the underlying causes of dissatisfaction in the industrial situation and report its conclusions thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, section 5, line 15, after the word "thereof," to strike out:

Provided, That no person employed hereunder by the commission shall be paid compensation at a rate in excess of $3,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce in the House has informed me that they made some clerical errors in the paging of the conference report on the Panama Canal bill, and I ask unanimous consent, as will be done there, to withdraw it temporarily to correct those errors. They are not errors in substance, but simply as to the paging.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request made by the Senator from Connecticut will be agreed to.

ARKANSAS & MEMPHIS RAILWAY CO.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7424) to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled "An act to authorize Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River."

Mr. CRAWFORD. I must object to the request. All of these cases have practically the same rights here in these closing days, and I am going to object and insist upon the calendar being taken up and giving to each case the attention it is entitled to receive.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I hope the Senator from South Dakota will not object. This is a matter in which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] is very much interested. He left here, and he wrote back about it. It is a matter of local concern, and will not take five minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senate will only do it, every case on the calendar can receive attention.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator allowed a half a dozen to go through, and I wish he would allow this. I hope he will not draw the line on this little local bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have not drawn the line on this bill. I began some time ago.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If this bill is not passed at once, there is no possibility of its getting through the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

I. S. ROGERS AND J. L. WORTHLEY.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that we proceed with the consideration of the calendar, beginning with Calendar No. 816, being the bill (H. R. 7650) for the relief of I. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair remembers, there is a unanimous-consent agreement to that effect.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is, bills as to which there is no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7650) for the relief of I. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley. It proposes to appropriate $750 to reimburse I. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley for money paid to the proper officers of the court as bondsmen for U. G. Copeland.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is there a report of a committee on that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that it be read.

The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey, July 17, 1912, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7650) for the relief of I. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley, have given the same careful consideration, and beg leave to submit a report with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

House Report No. 767, Sixty-second Congress, second session, is adopted and made a part of this report, as follows:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7650) for the relief of I. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

"In line 3, page 1, strike out the words "one thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "seven hundred and fifty."

"The claimants, I. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley, were sureties on the bail bond of one U. G. Copeland, who was bound thereby to appear before the United States Court of the Eastern District of Arkansas on the first day of the April term of court in 1905; that the said U. G. Copeland did not appear at said term of court, and subsequently the bond for his appearance was declared forfeited, and later the judgment was entered against I. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley, sureties thereon, for the sum of $1,000. On February 7, 1907, the full amount of $1,000 was paid to the Government by I. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley, sureties, each paying $500.

"It appears that subsequently U. G. Copeland was apprehended, tried, and sentenced to the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., the expense to the Government, however, in getting said U. G. Copeland from Texas to Arkansas being $250, which amount is deducted from the amount paid by the sureties.

"The affidavits of I. S. Rogers and other affidavits are hereby made a part of this report, together with the letter of the United States district attorney for the eastern district of Arkansas, under date of January 24, 1912."

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
EASTERN DISTRICT OF ARKANSAS,
Little Rock, Ark., January 24, 1912.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Replying to the communication of the Hon. W. R. Harr, Assistant Attorney General, under date of January 19, 1912, initials "W. R. H., H. S. R., File No. 52132–11," making inquiry as to the payment by U. G. Copeland's sureties of the amount of his recognizance, I have the honor to reply:

(1) The amount of the bond was $1,000.

(2) The full amount of $1,000 was paid by two of his sureties, namely, I. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley, each paying $500.

(3) Payment was made on February 7, 1907.

(4) Copeland was subsequently arrested, convicted, and sentenced to the Atlanta penitentiary, where he now is.

Respectfully,

WM. G. WHIPPLE,
United States Attorney.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., January 27, 1912.

Hon. EDWARD W. POU,
Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

SIR: In further reply to your letter of the 17th instant, I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a report received from the United States attorney at Little Rock, Ark., furnishing all the information available with respect to the payment of the forfeited bail bond of U. G. Copeland by his sureties, I. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley.

This information is not sufficient to enable the department to express any opinion upon the merits of the claim.

For the Attorney General.

Respectfully,

W. R. HARR,
Assistant Attorney General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, January 19, 1912.

Hon. EDWARD W. POU,
Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

SIR: The department is in receipt of your circular letter of the 17th instant, inclosing a copy of bill H. R. 7650, for the relief of I. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley.

You request that copies of all the papers on file here bearing upon the subject be forwarded, together with an expression of my opinion as to the merits of the claim.

It has been necessary to call upon the United States attorney for the eastern district of Arkansas for a report showing all the facts, and as soon as it is received I will be pleased to communicate with you further about the matter.

For the Attorney General.

Respectfully,

W. R. HARR,
Assistant Attorney General.

[In the matter of H. R. 7650, for the relief of I. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley.]

AFFIDAVIT OF I. S. ROGERS.

My name is I. S. Rogers, and I am the same I. S. Rogers whose name is mentioned in the title of this bill. I am a resident of Phillips County, Ark., and have been for a number of years. On the 10th day of March, 1905, I, together with J. L. Worthley and W. B. Dalzell, executed a bond in the sum of $1,000 to the Government for the appearance of one U. G. Copeland, a deputy United States marshal of this district, for his appearance before the United States district court at Little Rock, Ark., who was charged with the offense of violating section 5438 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. He had been bound over by E. R. Crum, a United States commissioner of the court at Helena, for his appearance to the next term of the United States district court at Little Rock. At the time fixed for his appearance he appeared before the court at Little Rock, and upon motion the case was continued, and in the interim between the continuance of said cause and the next term of the court he had fled the country. A forfeiture was taken on the bond and afterwards judgment rendered against the sureties on said bond. That so soon as I and J. L. Worthley discovered that Copeland was a fugitive from justice we caused postals to be printed offering a reward of $150 for the apprehension of said Copeland, which said postals were placed in the hands of the sheriff of this county and by him sent broadcast through the country.

I finally had a letter from the sheriff of Greene County, Tex., advising me of the whereabouts of the said Copeland, which information I imparted to the United States authorities, who captured him, brought him to Little Rock, where he was tried and convicted.

After the rendition of the judgment against Worthley and myself, we paid the same, without execution, to the proper authorities.

I desire to state that both Worthley and myself are men of moderate means and can ill afford to lose this amount of money.

I. S. ROGERS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 24th day of May, A. D. 1911.

[SEAL.] S. A. McGUIRE,
Notary Public in and for Phillips County, Ark.

My commission expires December 8, 1914.

AFFIDAVIT OF E. R. CRUM.

I am acquainted with all the parties mentioned in the above affidavit and know of my knowledge that the facts set forth in the above affidavit are true.

E. R. CRUM.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 24th day of May, A. D. 1911.

[SEAL.] S. A. McGUIRE,

My commission expires December 8, 1914.

AFFIDAVIT OF F. F. KITCHENS.

I, F. F. Kitchens, state on oath that at the time mentioned in the affidavit of I. S. Rogers, I was sheriff of Phillips County, Ark., and I personally know that the facts mentioned in his affidavit are true.

F. F. KITCHENS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 24th day of May, A. D. 1911.

[SEAL.] S. A. McGUIRE,
Notary Public in and for Phillips County, Ark.

My commission expires December 8, 1914.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIRECTION OF WORK OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

The bill (S. 6172) to regulate the method of directing the work of Government employees was announced as the next bill in order.

Mr. BURTON. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

F. W. THEODORE SCHROETER.

The bill (S. 1154) for the relief of F. W. Theodore Schroeter was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, to strike out "$1,635.20" and insert "$1,397.76," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to F. W. Theodore Schroeter, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,397.76, to compensate him for injuries received while in the employ of the Government of the United States on the Penama Canal September 28, 1907.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND AT JONESVILLE, MICH.

The bill (H. R. 16191) to convey certain real estate in the village of Jonesville, Hillsdale County, Mich., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FUR-SEAL CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 16571.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the north Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington July 7, 1911.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CULBERSON. Just to give notice of a motion.

Mr. ROOT. I yield.

Mr. CULBERSON. This morning I gave notice of a motion to consider the bill (S. 3315) to prohibit corporations from making contributions in connection with political elections and to limit the amount of such contributions by individuals or persons. I now enter that motion, which is that to-morrow, immediately after the routine morning business, I will move that the Senate take up for consideration this bill, my purpose being to make the motion now and ask that it lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I want to know the force and effect of a notice that a motion is entered. If the motion is made and not acted upon, I presume that motion will be pending. If it is not made, I can not see anything which is gained by noticing it beforehand.

Mr. CULBERSON. I enter the motion now and ask that it lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. McCUMBER. I make the point of order that no motion can be made now under our unanimous-consent agreement. It can not be entered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York yielded to the Senator from Texas. The Senator from Texas has entered the motion. The Chair is of opinion that it will have little efficacy with other business before the Senate; but the Senator enters the motion. The Chair thinks he has a right to do that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Chair hold that a Senator, even by the consent of another Senator, can displace a unanimous-consent agreement to the extent of entering a motion pertaining to other business? If he can, it seems to me we have to that extent at least violated the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a usual violation then, and it has not great force.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. ROOT. I do.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to ask the Chair if it is possible for me to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24224) to amend sections 5, 11, and 25 of an act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyrights," approved March 4, 1909?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order. The Senator from New York will proceed.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, we have before us in the bill to give effect to the fur-seal treaty a very narrow and simple question. It arises upon the difference between the provisions adopted by the House of Representatives to regulate the carrying on of a business undertaking, of which the United States is the principal owner, and a different provision suggested by a majority of the Senate committee. The business is the care and protection of the seal herd upon the Pribilof Islands, belonging to the United States, and the slaughter of a portion of the male seals each year and the sending of their skins to market. That is the business. It is a brutal business, Mr. President, at the best.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has dwelt much upon the butchery that occurs upon the seal islands. Many times, if my memory serves me, a score of times, during his argument he referred to the men who are acting as agents for the Government in carrying on the business as butchers, apparently stigmatizing them by that distinction. Well, sir, they are butchers. That is the business. You can not take and sell sealskins without killing the seal, and the business of taking and selling sealskins is butchery as much as the business of turning cattle into beef or sheep into mutton. It is a bloody and revolting business, and if you are to stop the butchery you must stop the business.

But no one proposes that the United States shall cease to secure for the benefit of its people and of the world the supply of clothing of fur that comes from carrying on this business. All that we are undertaking to do is to regulate it, and the butchery must go on. It is as much butchery to kill a 3-year-old or a 4-year-old seal as it is to kill a 2-year-old or a 1-year-old seal. There is no distinction of sentiment or of sympathy. The sole question is at what age shall seals be killed and to what number and extent shall they be killed, and when and how shall they be killed, in order that the business may be properly conducted.

Mr. President, let me state what the physical situation is, and then state the difference between the two proposals. The physical situation is that the United States owns certain islands in the Bering Sea which are the resort of these animals whose fur is useful and valuable. They were bought from Russia in 1867 with the rest of Alaska, and the herd, which formerly consisted of several millions, has gradually decreased until there are now about 130,000 seals resorting to the islands.

For 25 years the United States has contended that the decrease in the herd has been occasioned by pelagic sealing. We held, in 1892, a great arbitration in Paris in which we invoked judgment practically against the rest of the world to stop the pelagic sealing. The judgment in that arbitration went against us in the main, upon the ground that we had no control over the waters of the Bering Sea; that these animals were as free to be taken by all mankind as the fish swimming in the high seas, and that our claim to prevent other nations from engaging in pelagic sealing could not be maintained as a matter of international law.

But the tribunal established a series of regulations which at the time were supposed to be adequate to confine or prevent pelagic sealing, so that it would no longer result in the decrease of the seal herd. Those regulations proved to be insufficient, and we have year by year during all the 20 years that have succeeded been endeavoring to secure new agreements, new treaties, new regulations under which the practice of pelagic sealing should be stopped or restricted. We have at last secured an agreement which will accomplish that.

Now we turn to the situation upon the islands. About two years ago a lease of the sealing privilege to a commercial company expired. The Government very properly refused to continue the lease and undertook then to carry on the business of taking and selling sealskins through its own agency. By a statute passed in 1910 we undertook to regulate the business of killing upon land, and the regulations included in that statute in substance prohibited first the killing of any female seal; second, the killing of any seal less than 1 year old.

I call the especial attention of the Senate to that. Under the law as we prescribed it in 1910 male seals might be killed, under regulations by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, which were not less than 1 year old. Then there was a provision that they might not be killed by firearms or other disturbing means and a provision that they could be taken for food for the natives.

Under that statute the Secretary of Commerce and Labor made regulations which somewhat further restricted the killing. He provided that no seal should be taken having skins weighing less than 5 pounds and none having skins weighing over 8½ pounds. It is under that statute and those regulations that we have been proceeding.

Now, Mr. President, it is useful to have in mind certain other facts about these seals. The seal lives about 12 years. The fur of the seal is useful only up to the time that it is about 5 years of age. After that its further life is of no consequence as the life of a fur-bearing animal. The bulk, the vast majority, of the seals that are useful for fur are the seals of 3 years of age. Although the fur of seals of 2 years and of 1 year is useful, nevertheless the great body is the 3-year-old seal, and after it passes that, the next year, the fourth year, or when it is 4 years old, the fur is inferior, and when it becomes 5 it is practically useless.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I think he overlooks the fact that under the law of 1910 only male seals of 3 years old should be killed. The limitation as to 1-year seals was simply in reference to food for the natives. I call his attention to the proviso in section 1 of the bill.

Mr. ROOT. The provision I will read. Section 7 of the act provides:

That section 1961 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and section 178 of the act of March 3, 1899, be amended to read as follows:

"It shall be unlawful to kill any female seal or any seal less than 1 year old at any season of the year, except as above provided.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to the proviso in section 1 of that act?

Mr. ROOT. I have not the act before me. I have only a quotation made in the report.

Mr. NELSON. Allow me to quote it. It is very brief.

Mr. ROOT. I shall be obliged to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Perhaps I had better read the whole section; it is not long:

That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have power to authorize the killing of fur seals and the taking of sealskins on the Pribilof Islands, in Alaska, under regulations established by him prescribing the manner in which such killing shall be done and limiting the number of seals to be killed, whenever he shall determine that such killing is necessary or desirable and not inconsistent with the preservation of the seal herd: Provided, however, That under such authority the right of killing fur seals and taking sealskins shall be exercised by officers, agents, or employees of the United States appointed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and by the natives of the Pribilof Islands under the direction and supervision of such officers, agents, or employees, and by no other person: And provided further—

And this is what I want to call the attention of the Senator to:

And provided further, That male seals only shall be killed and that not more than 95 per cent of 3-year-old male seals shall be killed in any one year.

That other provision about killing 1-year-olds and 2-year-olds is simply for the killing of food for the natives, not for commercial purposes. This law limited it to the killing of strictly 3-year-olds and none younger, except for the purposes of food for the natives.

Mr. ROOT. I do not so understand it, but whatever it was is perhaps not so important as the question what it is proposed to be made. It certainly was construed as not limiting the killing to 3-year-old seals, but permitting the killing of all male seals above 1 year old.

Now, the House proposed to further limit the killing by this provision:

Provided, That no seals shall be killed—

And I will say that the Senator from Minnesota inadvertently omitted this in the statement made yesterday as to what the provisions of the House bill were. The House bill provides——

Mr. NELSON. I did not quote from the House bill, I suggest to the Senator.

Mr. ROOT. That may have been so. The bill, as passed by the House, provides that—

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have authority to determine the number of fur seals to be taken annually on these islands * * *. Provided, however, That no seals shall be killed in the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1912, except such as may be necessary for food purposes only.

That is, the first restriction that is imposed is the closed season for one year.

And provided further, That no seals shall be killed at any time except 3-year-old males not needed for breeding purposes.

That is the second provision, which, according to my reading of the statutes and the construction that has been placed upon them by the department, further limits the seals to be killed so that only 3-year-old seals can be taken.

And provided further, That the number of 3-year-old males selected from among the finest and most perfect seals of that age, found on the hauling grounds, to be reserved for breeding purposes in each year ending August 1 shall not be fewer than the following: In 1913, 2,000; in 1914, 2,500; in 1915, 3,000; in 1916, 3,500; in 1917, and in each year thereafter until 1921, inclusive, 4,000; and in 1922, and in each year thereafter until 1926, inclusive, 5,000.

That is, through the entire period of the treaty which this act is designed to put into effect. That is to say, Mr. President, the House provision stops killing entirely for the first year. It limits the killing to 3-year-old seals by unquestionable language, and it requires that there shall be done with this herd just what every farmer does, what every cattle raiser does with his cattle, with his sheep, with whatever domestic animals he is raising—that is, that the females shall all be preserved, and that there shall be selected from the males each year a sufficient number of the finest and best to keep up the productivity of the herd.

Now, Mr. President, so long as we are to engage in this butchering business let us engage in it in a common-sense and practical way and apply the reason and the experience and the sense which we apply to our own affairs. It is just as absurd to say that no male seals shall be killed for the next 10 years as it would be to say that no farmer in the United States shall send to the butcher a bull calf for the next 10 years. There is no more sense in one than there would be in the other.

That, sir, is the House provision. The majority of the Senate committee propose instead of that to stop killing altogether for 10 years. There are some very clear and positive reasons why that should not be done. In the first place, it would be entirely useless. The preponderance of evidence, the opinion of the men who have studied the subject most thoroughly, the opinion of the great majority of the men who have been up to the islands and have studied the habits of the fur seals, is that it would not only be useless but it would be worse than useless, because the accumulation of a great mass of the bull seals upon these little islands, with their fighting and their struggling for the possession of the harems would trample down the females, would trample down the young pups, would create confusion and turmoil and strife and disorder that would be injurious to the herd. That is the opinion of the majority.

Observe, Mr. President, that for nine years after the killing period allowed in the House bill the seals will continue to live, and every year there will be fed into this mass of superfluous bull seals upon the islands one-half of all the seals of each successive annual generation. So there would be not merely the bulls of one year but nine times that number remaining. I say the preponderance of the testimony is that it would be injurious. There is no testimony whatever to show that it would be of any advantage—absolutely none.

Reference has been made to the fact that in 1835 the Russians found their herd depleted, and they established a closed season for 10 years. Mr. President, that is a mistake. The Russians in 1835 stopped the killing of female seals and they reduced the number of seals that they killed, and gradually increased it, until in 1867, when we took the islands over, they were able to kill 70,000 seals in a single year. The lesson to be learned from the Russian experience is that the depletion of the fur-seal herd comes from the killing of female seals, which the House provision absolutely prohibits and which our law now absolutely prohibits.

As I have said, we have for 25 years been arguing and furnishing evidence for all the world that it was the killing of female seals that was depleting this seal herd. The great objection to pelagic sealing is that it is the females which are killed to a greater extent than the males. The Russians up to 1835 were killing indiscriminately males and females.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ROOT. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator to give his authority for that statement. I think it is utterly without foundation.

Mr. ROOT. I will give it. I quote first from the report of the House committee, which was a very thoughtful and painstaking report, made after very full hearing and examination and cross-examination of witnesses. Mr. President, let me say that while the House committee reached their conclusions upon a full hearing of witnesses, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations never heard a witness or gave a hearing, except that they heard the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, whose statements were all the other way.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Does the Senator from New York not know that the committee which went to Alaska in 1904 made a report on this subject?

Mr. ROOT. I do.

Mr. NELSON. And that finally that committee suggested the form of a treaty in 1905 to the State Department, and that the State Department actually adopted the report suggested by that committee in 1905?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I know that the committee which went to Alaska made a report; and I am going to appeal to the Senate in a few minutes to preserve the good faith of the United States under a treaty made upon the basis of that report, and I am going to appeal because I made the offer on the basis of that report, signed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM]. Let me now finish upon this and I will return to that subject.

In making my answer to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], I say I quote from the very painstaking and careful report of the House committee, in which they say:

> It is now confidently asserted that, with a complete cessation of seal killing in the open ocean, and the consequent immunizing of the breeding females from slaughter, the Pribilof seal herd will rapidly increase in numbers. It can be cited, in confirmation of this belief, that following the year 1835, when the Russians first recognized the principle of noninterference with the females, the Pribilof herd gradually increased during a period of 35 years to several millions in 1867.

In 1835 the Pribilof herd reached a condition of numbering not more than 250,000.

> The situation in that year became so alarming that all killing was prohibited except 6,480 nursing pups for natives' food and 100 bachelors or young males.

At another point in the report the committee say:

> Also the vital principle that females should be exempt from slaughter and never disturbed on land was recognized in 1835 for the first time and thereafter enforced, at first partially and finally rigorously. With these restrictive measures in operation the herd gradually increased, contemporaneously with a gradually increasing killing of surplus young males for skins, until in 1867, the year of the cession, the Russians took 75,000 skins and the seal herd again numbered millions.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will allow me, at that time they had reached the number of 4,700,000, if I remember correctly.

Mr. ROOT. I refer to page 114 of the hearings before the House committee, in which there appears a quotation taken from a report of Mr. Elliott, the chief supporter of the closed-season idea—a quotation from Sir George Simpson's Overland Journey Around the World in 1841 and 1842, in which he says:

> Some 20 or 30 years ago there was a most wasteful destruction of the seal, when young and old, male and female, were indiscriminately knocked on the head. This imprudence, as anyone might have expected, proved detrimental in two ways: The race was almost extirpated and the market was glutted to such a degree—at the rate for some time of 200,000 skins a year—that the prices did not even pay the expense of carriage.

Mr. Elliott continues with his statement:

> Also, that though the tardy recognition of the fact that females should not be slaughtered was made on the Pribilof Islands shortly prior to 1841–42, yet suitable management of the business had not been made, inasmuch as all classes, "as a whole," were driven to the killing grounds.

There is a further statement from Mr. Elliott on page 115, in which he quotes from a manuscript letter dealing with the number of sealskins shipped in 1847, and a contemporaneous letter, and says:

> This is interesting, because it is the record of the first killing on the seal islands when the female were entirely exempted from slaughter.

It appears also in the testimony before the House committee that—

> The first evidence of recuperation was not well seen on the rookeries until 1840. By 1844 a killing of 20,000 young males, surplus males, was easily and safely made. This killing was slightly increased annually thereafter, so that by 1857 a killing of 60,000 to 72,000 was easily and safely made.

And by 1867 there was a larger number. So, I say, there is no evidence whatever that there is any utility——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly; I will yield for a question, but I desire to finish this statement.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to ask the Senator whether he has fully answered my question as to what evidence was presented before the House committee that the Russians killed the females and males indiscriminately. Is that all?

Mr. ROOT. No, sir; I have not undertaken to give all the evidence, and I can not stop the progress of my remarks to make an exhaustive compilation of evidence. I have quoted the finding of facts of the House committee which heard the testimony, and I have referred to testimony which sustains that finding of facts, and that is far enough to go.

Mr. President, let me restate my proposition, that upon the difference between the House provision restricting the killing and the proposed provision making the 10-year closed season, the preponderance of testimony is that the closed season would be injurious, and there is no testimony whatever of any value which shows that there is anything to be gained by departing from the ordinary natural course which is followed by all stock raisers of killing each year the surplus males and reserving enough males to continue the propagation of the herd.

But, sir, there are other considerations than the simple business consideration which we ought to have in mind.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York allow me to ask him a question here in regard to a matter which I myself do not fully understand?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. It bears directly upon the proportion of males that ought to be preserved. The question is this: When do the males reach the age at which they can be used for breeding purposes? I have been informed that while the female will breed at about two years, the male does not reach the age at which he can be used for that purpose until he is about 6 years of age.

Mr. ROOT. When he is about 6 years of age; yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, instead of providing for a certain definite number of males each year, why should not there be a provision that they simply reserve a percentage of the entire number so that they would always bear the proper relation to the number of females?

Mr. ROOT. As I understand, the practice which has been fixed in the House bill is based upon a percentage calculation. It is a simpler rule to give the men who are there than to require them to estimate the percentage; that is to say, the people familiar with the herd and who have been on the spot, starting with the number of males and the number of females now, and taking the regular ratio of increase of the two, fix these numbers as giving the requisite percentage, with a large margin over for safety, and it is worked out in the tabulated statements which appear in the voluminous testimony.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ROOT. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to ask the Senator from New York two questions, and if his argument, as he has laid it out, will answer the questions, he need not pause to answer them now. I suppose I betray my ignorance, somewhat, in asking them.

The first question is, What is there to prevent any other nation than those with whom we have treaty obligations from entering the business of pelagic sealing? Second, What right, if any, have the nations with which we have treaties upon the subject, upon the Pribilof Islands to take any seals at all from our territory? I should like to have those two questions answered.

Mr. ROOT. Those questions I shall answer in the remarks that I am just approaching.

Mr. President, I have made some statements regarding the long-standing controversy about the pelagic sealing by other countries. The Bering Sea arbitration in 1892 defeated our contention that we were entitled to prevent the other nations of the earth from taking seals, and established the regulations that proved to be unsatisfactory and insufficient. Let me simply add to that a statement regarding the number of seals that, upon the best statistics which can be obtained, appear to have been destroyed by pelagic sealing; that is, the shooting of the seals in the water.

You have already been told many times that in the autumn the seals leave the islands and go far to the south, as much as 5,000 miles away. Of course, when they first leave the islands they are near together, and they spread out as they go farther away. About 1881 some enterprising gentleman, running a whaler, discovered that it was possible, by getting up near the islands, to shoot the seals as they were leaving the islands and going into the water. From 1881 down the number of vessels engaged in taking seals in the water increased and the number of seals taken increased, so that the figures ran along like this: In 1881, 10,000—I give the round numbers—they ran along to 15,000; 16,000; 23,000; 28,000; 30,000; 26,000; 29,000; 10,000; 59,000; in 1892, 46,000; in 1893, 30,000, in 1894, 61,000; in 1895, 56,000. Then they somewhat decreased. We are talking now about land killing on a much smaller scale. There were 12,000 killed last year on land, while in 1894 there were 61,000 seals killed in the water. The evidence is that from 60 to 80 per cent of those were female seals, and every female seal, when she went to sea left a pup on land, a pup which died from starvation because of the mother's death, and every female killed was pregnant with young at the time, so that three lives were killed. Then, for all the seals that were taken and enumerated in the returns, there were many that sank and could not be recovered, so that it is probable that for 60,000 seals taken by the pelagic sealers, two or three times 60,000 seals were killed. The decrease of the seal herd through this process was rapid and disastrous, and we came to the conclusion that unless we could get some agreement to stop it we might as well give up the idea of continuing the herd.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think the Senator from New York quite understood my question.

Mr. ROOT. I am going to answer the Senator's question. In 1904, I think it was, a committee of the Senate went to Alaska and they made a very full and elaborate report. In that report they recommended the offering of an inducement to Great Britain to do what she had theretofore always refused to do; that is, make some more effective arrangement for the prevention of pelagic sealing. Coming into the office of Secretary of State in the summer of 1905, I found this report, and I made to Great Britain the offer which that report recommended, which was to give to her an interest in the land killing in consideration of her stopping pelagic killing. The report, I think, recommended an offer of 25 per cent, and I believe the offer made to Great Britain was 20 per cent. That began the negotiations. They hung for a considerable time. In the meantime the Japanese came into the pelagic sealing business, and they came in in a more disastrous way even than the Canadians, for the Canadians were subject to certain regulations established by the Bering Sea tribunal. There was a closed season and there was a limit within which they were not to come and kill seals; but the Japanese were not subject to such restrictions, and they sent their ships right up to the 3-mile limit and surrounded the Pribilof Islands, so that they were shooting the seals when they were near together, before they had diverged out in the great spread of ocean to which they went for their food. When the Japanese through their superior facility and freedom from restrictive regulations began to take away the profits of the restricted Canadian sealers, then we came to an agreement between Canada and the United States, in a treaty that was made and confirmed by the Senate, and under which we were to give 20 per cent—that is, a one-fifth interest in the land killing—to Canada in consideration of her stopping pelagic sealing. That treaty had a clause, however, which looked to the making of a broader agreement between the United States and Russia and Japan, in order that all four nations surrounding the North Pacific and engaged in any way in the fur-seal business, either on land or on sea, might unite. Accordingly, we entered upon negotiations for the broader treaty, and that broader treaty was finally agreed upon and was signed on the 7th of July, 1911. The Senate advised its ratification on the 24th of July, 1911, and ratifications were exchanged at Washington December 12, 1911. Under that treaty we made Great Britain and Japan partners in the business of taking and selling sealskins. We gave to each of them, in consideration of their stopping pelagic sealing, 15 per cent; a little taken off from Canada's share, you perceive, and a little more added on to Japan's share. So that we have got to consider the conduct of this business not as a business which we are carrying on ourselves without obligations to anyone else, but we have got to consider it with reference to the rights of our partners.

The agreement between us reserves to us the right to determine a very important question of fact. After agreeing to give this 15 per cent of the land killing, the treaty provided:

Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall restrict the right of the United States at any time and from time to time to suspend altogether the taking of sealskins on such islands or shores subject to its jurisdiction, and to impose such restrictions and regulations upon the total number of skins to be taken in any season, and the manner and times and places of taking them, as may seem necessary to protect and preserve the seal herd or to increase its number.

That vests in us the power; but, Mr. President, that is a power which we are bound to exercise in good faith for the benefit of the partnership, and we are bound to exercise it so that we can show to our partners that we have exercised it for their benefit as well as for our own.

The length of the treaty is 15 years. At the end of 14 years either party can terminate it. Fourteen years from next December is the limit of the fixed period of the treaty. Consider the situation that we are in toward our copartners. We have said to them: "If you will give up pelagic sealing and prohibit your people from engaging in it, we will give you for 15 years an interest in the land killing more valuable than the pelagic killing—15 per cent to Canada and 15 per cent to Japan of this valuable business on land—in compensation for keeping your citizens away from the pelagic killing." Now, Mr. President, it is proposed that for two-thirds of that time we should take away from them all the profits except $10,000 a year, in order that after the expiration of the time we may have a great herd for our own benefit.

The treaty also contains a provision regarding the payment of a percentage of interest upon the Japanese seal islands to the United States and Canada, and the payment of an interest in the seal business on the Russian islands to Japan and Canada, and in each of those there is reserved the right to regulate and, if necessary, to stop the killing; but it is provided that during the last 10 years of the term of this convention not less than 5 per cent of the total number of seals will be killed annually, "provided that said 5 per cent does not exceed 85 per cent of the 3-year-old male seals hauling in such year."

That was what was provided as between Russia and Japan and Canada. They gave this power to limit when it was necessary; but they prohibited the exercise of this power for the last 10 years beyond a certain proportion.

When it came to the United States, they relied entirely upon our good faith. They relied upon our sense of honorable obligation not to stop the killing that was to give to them the consideration for their contract, not to stop, unless it was necessary, the killing which was to give to them the profit we held up to them as of more value than pelagic sealing.

Every sense of honorable obligation, every sense of self-respect, requires that we shall not stop this killing—cut off this profit from these copartners of ours, who trusted in our honor and good faith—unless we are ready to prove by a demonstration that it is necessary. We can not prove it, for every officer of the United States who has ever had anything to do with this business is on record to the effect that it is not necessary. Every head of a scientific institution in the United States who has studied the subject, every man who for the last 20 years has been upon the Pribilof Islands, has lived there and studied the subject, is against it. Our Fisheries Commissioner has declared against it; our House of Representatives has declared against it; our Secretary of Commerce and Labor has declared against it——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. ROOT. Not yet; and we can not maintain that contention which is essential to the preservation of our self-respect and our good name among the peoples of the earth in stopping this killing now for two-thirds of the time of this treaty, because we can not prove that it is necessary for the preservation of the seal herd.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ROOT. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does not the treaty in Article X state specifically that we reserve the right to stop the killing for the purpose of increasing the herd?

Mr. ROOT. I just read that to the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No. The Senator stated that we could not stop the killing unless it was necessary, and unless we could demonstrate that it was necessary, to preserve the herd.

Mr. ROOT. Oh, well.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask the Senator if Article X does not state specifically that we have the right to stop the killing for the purpose of increasing the herd?

Mr. ROOT. What we have to show is that the stopping of the killing is necessary to protect and preserve the seal herd or to increase its number; and I read those words to the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We have the absolute right, reserved under the treaty, to put a stop to the killing, not merely for the purpose of preserving the herd but for the purpose of increasing it.

Mr. ROOT. Of course we have.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Whatever our interest is in increasing it is the interest of Canada and Japan, who are the beneficiaries of the increase to the same extent.

Mr. ROOT. Suppose we stop the killing for 15 years?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This treaty is not a 15-year treaty. It is intended to be a treaty in perpetuity. Only the parties have a right to discontinue it at the end of 15 years, and unless they do discontinue it it will continue.

Mr. ROOT. How do we know, and how do they know? We have a right to give notice at the end of 14 years to discontinue the treaty. Any party has that right. It is a treaty that lasts 15 years, and only so much longer as all the parties are willing to make it last.

Now, Mr. President, we must have something more than sentiment to allege when we are charged with taking away from our copartners during this limited period their profit for two-thirds of the time. We can not do it. We can not maintain our position by talking about butchers. We can not maintain our position by saying that we have had bad administration there. We can not go before the world and assert that we are incapable of maintaining honest administration there. If the men who have been there have killed smaller pups than they ought to have killed, if they have transgressed the regulations imposed by Congress in the law, then they should be removed and punished. What position would we be in if we were to say, "We have stopped this killing because we can not find Americans who will obey the law in following the restrictions necessary for preservation"? I dare say there has been bad administration; I know nothing about it; I know it is disputed and has been the subject of excited controversy; I dare say there has been, and I dare say also there has been great exaggeration of it.

But that is neither here nor there. We have this business to conduct, and we are under obligations to our copartners to conduct it and to conduct it honestly, to impose reasonable regulations, but not to stop the killing unless we can show it is for the preservation or increase of the herd; and we can not show it.

There is one other consideration which we ought to keep in mind, and that is the consideration of historic consistency. We have been contending for 25 years that it was the pelagic sealing which was depleting the herd and not the land killing, and upon that contention we have secured a treaty with three of the great nations of the earth. And can we now, with credit, turn around and say, "It is the land killing that is depleting the herd; we can not regulate the land killing so that it will not deplete the herd"? It would be a complete reversal of the national attitude, a declaration to the world that we were wrong or insincere in all the contentions which we have waged; that we were wrong; that Mr. Carter and Mr. Edward J. Phelps and Mr. Frederick Coudert and those great Americans who pleaded before the international tribunal in Paris in 1892 were endeavoring to fool and deceive the tribunal.

How can we with self-respect abandon that historic attitude in which our Nation has stood for so many years at the very instant when through our contention we have secured this treaty to accomplish our desires?

Mr. President, I feel keenly upon this subject for the reason that relying upon the report of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], whose words I always trust, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], than whom no safer guide lives, I made the offer to substitute an interest in this valuable business in the place of the profits of pelagic sealing, and I should be humiliated to see the Congress of the United States, without justice, without being able to support itself by demonstrating the fact, which we have the power to decide, without being able to show that we do decide it in good faith, withdraw the greater part of those profits from the nations which have entered into contract with us.

Let me say one other thing, in answer to the question by the Senator from Iowa. That was about other nations. It is true that the contracts which we now have are incomplete. We have brought in all the great maritime nations which surround the north Pacific—Canada, the United States, Russia, and Japan—and under the treaty not only do those nations prohibit their citizens from pelagic sealing, but the benefit of their ports is to be denied to all persons who engage in pelagic sealing. But something more was needed, and we have relied upon the good will, upon the comity of other nations not to enter into this trade or rather not to give the benefit of their flag to allow recreant Americans, Canadians, or Japanese, who are willing by device to frustrate the policy and the laws of their own country, to engage in this traffic.

We have relied, I say, upon the comity and good will of other countries; and, sir, if instead of proceeding in good faith and friendship to carry out this treaty in accordance with its spirit, as well as with its letter, we have become involved in dissatisfaction and discord, that reliance will fail and, of course, these agreements will not be continued, even if they are not now denounced, pelagic sealing will be revived, the seal herd will be destroyed, and this effort which has been made now and has been brought so near to successful conclusion can never be repeated. It is the last effort. If it fails the seal herd will go, and, Mr. President, it is not within the power of man to draft an agreement, it is not within the power of man by signature and seal, by acknowledgment and affidavit, to hold nations or men together in contract relations that will be successful unless they have the spirit of fairness and good faith in carrying them out.

Mr. President, we are now to determine whether this quarter of a century of effort to save the seal herd and this supply of utility to mankind is to succeed or to fail. Success depends upon following the mature and wise conclusions of the House. Failure would, in my judgment, be certain if we adopt the amendment proposed.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, before I proceed to discuss this matter—and I shall discuss it only in a brief and perfunctory way and more in the form of a narrative than of argument—I merely wish to express surprise at the argument of the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], which implied that if we had a closed season for ten or more years we would not be within our treaty rights.

Let me call attention to article 10 of the treaty:

Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall restrict the right of the United States at any time and from time to time to suspend altogether the taking of sealskins on such islands or shores subject to its jurisdiction.

That is a part of and is incorporated in the treaty, and the same condition holds in respect to Japan and Canada or Great Britain. All these nations, these three nations, that were thus interested in the fur-seal matter, did expressly reserve the right to stop land killing if they saw fit, and how can the Senator in the face of those treaty provisions say it would be a breach of good faith if we went on and stopped land killing for a limited period.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator leaves that point, I wish to call his attention to the language on page 6 of the treaty, where it is expressly provided for just exactly this contingency, and where it is expressly agreed between the parties that in case the United States shall conclude to stop the killing, the other countries shall accept during the year during which the killing has been stopped the sum of $10,000 apiece as satisfaction.

If the Senator will permit me, I will read it so that it may go in his speech right here:

> The United States further agrees that the British and Japanese share, respectively, of the sealskins taken from the American herd under the terms of this convention shall be not less than 1,000 each in any year, even if such number is more than 15 per cent of the number to which the authorized killing is restricted in such year, unless the killing of seals in such year or years shall have been absolutely prohibited by the United States for all purposes except to supply food, clothing, and boat skins for the natives on the islands, in which case the United States agrees to pay to Great Britain and to Japan each the sum of $10,000 annually in lieu of any share of skins during the years when no killing is allowed.

That is on the next page of the treaty, after what the Senator from Minnesota read.

Mr. NELSON. I thank the Senator from Mississippi for bringing in those paragraphs of the treaty, in addition to what I read. For the sake of saving time I quoted only one paragraph, a paragraph that is similar to these paragraphs, both in respect to the Japanese and Canada or Great Britain.

So that it is inscrutable to me how any Senator in the face of those treaty provisions can contend for a moment that we would violate our sacred obligations by having a closed season of 5 or 10 or more years.

But, Mr. President, I intend to give a brief narrative, and to speak more in the form of a narrative than of argument, of what has come to my knowledge in connection with this matter and of the condition of the fur-seal herd on those islands.

The Pribilof Islands were discovered in 1786 or 1787. Within a year or two after that the Russians began to kill the seals. They at first limited the killing to land killing. Afterwards they did some pelagic killing, but to a very slight extent. Nearly all of it was land killing. They found, to their sad experience, that as they went on killing the herd it kept growing less and less.

In 1805 the herd had become so depleted that they failed to catch more than a limited number, and they resorted to a closed season practically for about four or five years. But the time was too limited, and in spite of that the herd did not increase. They tried the same thing in 1805 to 1807. They suspended killing for a time, but still the herd did not increase much. Finally, the herd kept on diminishing and diminishing until it was palpable and plain to the Russians that there would be nothing left of the herd unless they absolutely stopped all killing.

So in 1834 the decree went forth, the order was made, and it was lived up to, that there should be no killing for the next 10 years. And what was the result? During that closed season of 10 years the herd kept on growing and growing until it became almost as good as it was at the time they first discovered it. And that seal herd, when we got possession of the islands, while there are various estimates as to the number, was probably in the neighborhood of 4,000,000 head. As I say, there are various estimates. When the lessees first took possession of the islands under contract with the United States it was estimated by those who examined into the question that there were from four million to four million and a half seals on the islands, and the lessees continued to operate the islands, to catch and kill seals until 1910, and by that time the herd had been reduced to about 150,000 head—from four million and a half, during the period of the lessees.

Now, when the Russians had the closed season, and during the Russian régime, there was no such a thing as pelagic sealing. Pelagic sealing of any consequence did not come in until after the beginning of the eighties, and I might say in connection with pelagic sealing, it was the opinion of some out in the West—and there is some evidence in the RECORD to show it—that while pelagic sealing was carried on under the Japanese and the British flags, yet really American capital and Americans were at the bottom of it, and the evidence shows that the lessees were interested in it at that time and no one knows how much longer.

In 1903 a subcommittee of the Committee on Territories went up to investigate conditions in Alaska. That committee consisted of the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], as chairman, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM], the Senator from Colorado, Mr. Patterson, and myself. We were at the Pribilof Islands. We examined the herd. We took pains to ascertain the methods of operation and killing, and on our return from those islands, after investigating conditions there, in our report, a very able report, prepared by the Senator from Vermont, but, by one of those anomalies that happen at certain times in legislation, made by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Indiana, Mr. Beveridge, although it was really the report of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] the conclusion of the committee is thus stated:

> The committee therefore recommend that a suspension of all killing by the lessees of the seal islands be made at once and indefinitely, and that the Government of the United States shall attempt to reopen and conclude negotiations with the Government of Great Britain looking to a revision of existing rules and regulations which govern the taking of seals in the open waters of the north Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea, and to enter upon negotiations with the Governments of Russia and Japan, to the end that all pelagic sealing may be stopped; and if after a reasonable length of time the Government fails to secure a proper revision and enforcement of such rules and to conclude such negotiations, then the Secretary of Commerce may, with the approval of the President, reduce the surplus female life of the herd on the Pribilof Islands to 10,000.

The idea of our committee was that the only way to preserve the herd was to stop, absolutely, land and pelagic killing; that it was the duty of our Government to try to negotiate by treaty with Russia, Japan, and Canada, or Great Britain, so as to stop pelagic sealing, and if we could not succeed in doing that, as a last resort and in order to drive those other countries into it, to kill off everything except 10,000, so that there would not be much, either on land or sea, for anybody.

After we made our report, so far as I know, no efforts were made in the department to negotiate a treaty. There had been negotiations before that, but no effort was then made. I am not aware that when we made our report of 1904 any negotiations were at that time pending with any of the nations to stop pelagic sealing. Finally three of our committee addressed a letter to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, under whose jurisdiction the seal industry had been placed by the act of 1903, establishing a Department of Commerce and Labor, and here is what we said:

DEAR SIR:——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think this is an important matter, and we ought to have a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cullom	McCumber	Sanders
Bacon	Curtis	McLean	Shively
Bailey	Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	du Pont	Massey	Smith, Ga.
Bourne	Fall	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Bradley	Fletcher	Nelson	Smoot
Briggs	Gallinger	O'Gorman	Stone
Bryan	Guggenheim	Oliver	Sutherland
Burnham	Hitchcock	Overman	Tillman
Catron	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Townsend
Chamberlain	La Follette	Penrose	Warren
Clapp	Lippitt	Perkins	Williams
Crane	Lodge	Root	Works

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state that the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is detained on official business. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, when my remarks were interrupted by a roll call I was proceeding to state that it was on the initiation of this subcommittee that the negotiations for a treaty were again opened. If there had been any earlier negotiation years before in respect to pelagic sealing, those negotiations had actually collapsed and were dead. At the time our committee returned from Alaska there was nothing done or attempted to be done by the State Department.

In the report of the committee, to which I have called attention and from which I quoted, we recommended the actual stoppage of all land killing. We recommended the negotiation of treaties with these countries for the purpose of stopping pelagic sealing, and in case we failed in that, that then we should reduce the herd to 10,000 in order that there might be left for the pelagic sealers nothing to expect from the continuance of the herd. Nothing seemed to have been done. Nothing was done that I know of, either by the State Department or the legislative department. In our report, the report prepared by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], there is a statement which I shall read. After giving the total of the catch of fur seals on the Pribilof Islands from 1870 down to 1901, the report states:

Under the Russian management hunting the seal was systematically carried on annually from 1817 down to 1834. It appears that the number taken by them in 1817 was 60,188, but that the number taken by them thereafter annually decreased year by year, until in 1834 only 100 young males and some 3,000 pups for the natives' food were taken, for, in order to prevent the complete extermination of the herd, the Russians were compelled to stop all commercial slaughter. It is said in the Russian Record "that only 8,000 young seals, male and female, were left alive to breed on the island of St. Paul" at the close of the season of 1834. The slaughter having ceased—

And, mind you, there was no Prof. Jordan around in those days—

The slaughter having ceased the herd then increased rapidly and to such an extent that after the islands were acquired by the United States in 1867, and as late as 1874, it appears that a survey of the herds was ordered by Congress, and it was found that there were then on the Pribilof Islands 4,700,000 fur seals of all ages—bulls, cows, and pups.

Senators can see that there is no stronger argument than this object lesson of the result of the experiment of the Russians. They carried on sealing on those islands from the time they were discovered in 1787 down to 1834, with two slight intervals of recuperation, until the herd was literally exterminated and then closed it for 10 years. They had none of these scientists to kill off the males, but after closing it the herd grew until it was a herd of over four and a half million. Then after we leased it to these lessees killing went on year by year until in 1910, when the final lease terminated, there were not over 150,000 seal left of the 4,700,000.

During the period of Russian control, when the herd was being exterminated, from 1800 down to 1834, pelagic sealing as it afterwards occurred did not exist, so that the herd was literally destroyed by land killing.

Mr. President, as I said, so far as I know the State Department took no steps in this matter for a good many years until our committee suggested a plan to them. I find in the hearings before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, January 3, a letter from our committee. I was about to read it. It is a letter to the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, under whose jurisdiction the Alaska seal fisheries have been placed. It is a letter to him inclosing a memorandum and suggesting the form of the negotiation and the form of a treaty. I want to say to Senators that the treaty as afterwards negotiated was in substance and in form, with two slight modifications, exactly what we suggested to the department at that time. But the negotiations went on by such a slow process that during the pendency of the negotiations through indirect sources I found that the Canadian Government were ready to negotiate on the basis of what we recommended. But nothing was done.

No treaty appeared in the daylight until the year after the lease had expired. Our recommendation, which was afterwards incorporated in the treaty, was made in 1905. No treaty saw the daylight until the year following the termination of the lease in 1910.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think the Senator has overlooked one fact. By a joint resolution of Congress—a joint resolution introduced by myself—which was approved April 8, 1904, the President was requested to begin such negotiations.

Mr. NELSON. I thank the Senator very much for calling my attention to it. It is a long time ago, but what he states, of course, is absolutely true. We tried in various ways as high privates in the Senate here to bring these negotiations to a focus and to stop land killing. But killing went on. Finally Dr. Hornaday, of New York, the head of a club—I forget the name of it—a naturalist who used to be here in the city in charge of the Museum—I know him very well—a first-class man, took up this subject in an endeavor to stop this slaughter of the seal, this extermination of the herd. He called the attention of the committee of this body to it, and then the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON], after holding hearings and investigating the subject and after hearing Dr. Hornaday, introduced a bill here to stop as far as could be done in that way this land killing, to protect the herd and to terminate the lease.

When that bill was first brought up for consideration we were told on the floor of the Senate—I do not quote the language—that this is a sacred matter of diplomacy; that you would stop negotiations; that the bill should be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. That was the cry set up at that time. If my memory does not fail me, I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was one of the gentlemen who at that time urged that this was such a sacred subject that we must refer the bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations and get their indorsement before we could do anything.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota whether there had been, prior to the time he is now referring to, negotiations between our State Department and Great Britain looking to a treaty to put a stop to pelagic sealing.

Mr. NELSON. Prior to 1910?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand the Senator was referring to an earlier date.

Mr. NELSON. There had been some negotiations along prior to that, but until the time our committee returned from Alaska and made its report, and for some time back, no negotiations were pending.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator state what became of the negotiations that were pending between Great Britain and the United States at the time of the death of Secretary of State Hay? It seems that there were some negotiations prior to that time. I notice that in the Canadian Parliament they were discussing something of that sort; but after Secretary of State Hay died all the negotiations between the two countries seem to have been abandoned.

Mr. NELSON. That is true, as I understand it.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I understand the plan suggested by the subcommittee of the Committee on Territories, in their report to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, was transmitted to the State Department and became the subject of Secretary Hay's contention, and that he was engaged along that line of work. I do not know how far he had carried it, but I know he was engaged to quite a considerable extent in consultation with gentlemen interested in the matter previous to his death.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator state whether after that time the State Department carried on these negotiations or what became of them?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am unable to state in detail what became of them. We have the statement of the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] this morning that after he assumed that office he took up the work, and he himself made the proposition to Great Britain which eventually took the form of a treaty; but as to when he took it up or how he took it up I am not informed.

Mr. NELSON. What the Senator from Vermont stated a moment ago has refreshed my memory. He is absolutely correct. Our recommendation for treaty negotiations, in fact the plan that was outlined by us and sent to the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, was sent to the Secretary of State and he was engaged in the negotiations. I remember distinctly, since the Senator has called my attention to it, that upon one occasion I conferred with Secretary Hay orally on the subject. But before the negotiations had proceeded far, Secretary Hay died, and what was done in the meantime I do not know. I knew nothing about it until the treaty emerged here in 1911.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I find the matter was referred to, for instance, in the Canadian Parliament in the year 1908, and at that time Canada seemed to be perfectly willing to proceed with a treaty with the United States for the purpose of putting a stop to pelagic sealing.

Mr. NELSON. I understand, Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will permit me, I will quote from what appears in the Toronto Globe of February 22, 1908:

Hon. Mr. Scott said that Canada was ready to take the matter up whenever there was a proposition from the United States. There had been no such proposal up to the present.

It looks as though there must have been a number of years following the death of Secretary Hay when for some reason or other the United States made no effort to put a stop to pelagic sealing by such a treaty as has been recently negotiated.

Mr. NELSON. I am not prepared to charge that that is so, but I have a suspicion that the matter was in suspense for some reason. I was informed at the same time through indirect sources that the British minister here at that time was favorable substantially to the plan as suggested by the House committee. I think that even at that early day, when Secretary Hay took up the matter, and immediately subsequent there was no serious objection from the British Government or from the Canadians to the plan outlined by the committee, because our plan contemplated a provision for paying the pelagic sealers to get them out of the way.

As to the negotiations, I am not familiar with the slow progress of diplomacy. Gentlemen who have served with me here and who have sometimes noted the hot and riotous character of my remarks can readily see that I would not be suitable for a place in the diplomatic service. But the negotiation went along its slow and dilatory way. A queer thing about it, and I say it without intending to reflect upon anybody, was that the treaty never saw the daylight, never was sent here to the Senate, until a year following the expiration of the lease to the fur sealers. Our subcommittee had started it in 1905. We did all we could.

Now, coming back to where I stopped a moment ago, when the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] introduced his bill here and attempted to bring it up for consideration, as I said, we were met with the holy cry that this was a dangerous thing; that the bill ought to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; that we were treading on holy ground, the ground of diplomacy; and it was sought to sidetrack the bill, like many other measures before that. On that occasion, I recollect now distinctly, I made a few plain remarks in my rural style. The bill went over until the next morning, and the idea of referring that bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations was abandoned. We finally passed the bill. At the time we passed the bill we were given to understand by the executive officers of the Government who had charge of its administration that it was their design to stop substantially all land killing except what was needed as food for the natives. They asked us for a special appropriation to take care of the natives, and if Senators will look up the record, they will find that we appropriated $150,000 to make provision for the natives on account of the suspension of land killing. But what was the result? The last year the lessees had the lease they killed about 14,000 seals. The next year, in 1910, after we had passed this law and supposed we had given the poor fur seal a little rest, they killed over 12,000.

I wish the American people could know all the ins and outs of this fur-seal business. There is another curious incident in this connection, and I will show it by the record. It is that when the lease was about expiring an effort was made in the Bureau of Fisheries through officials of that bureau to get the lease renewed. Let me read from the record of the hearings. Here is a gentleman by the name of Barton W. Evermann. He writes to the Commissioner of the Bureau of Fisheries what I shall read. I may say that while the Bureau of Fisheries was not put into full charge of the fur-seal business until 1908, yet as early as 1906 they were directed by the Secretary to investigate and send experts to Alaska. In the meantime they had appointed a sort of advisory committee, consisting of these skilled scientists we hear so much about, among whom was the gentleman named by the Senator from Massachusetts yesterday, Mr. Townsend. I will read this correspondence and Senators can see how anxious they were to have the lease renewed:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
BUREAU OF FISHERIES,
Washington, December 16, 1909.

The COMMISSIONER—

That is, the Commissioner of Fisheries—

The Washington Star of December 10 last announced that the Campfire Club of New York had inaugurated a campaign to save the fur-seal herd through legislation designed to prevent the re-leasing of the sealing right, the cessation of all killing on the islands for 10 years except for natives' food, and to secure the opening of negotiations with Great Britain to revise the regulations of the Paris tribunal. As the result—

Now listen—

As the result of this movement, on December 7, three resolutions were introduced by Senator DIXON, of Montana, one of which embodies the provisions before mentioned, the other two calling for the publication of fur-seal correspondence and reports since 1904.

As the object of this movement is at variance with the program of this bureau and of the recommendations of the advisory fur-seal board, notably in the plan to prevent killing and the renewal of the seal-island lease, the advisability is suggested of having Messrs. Townsend, Lucas, and Stanley-Brown use—

Those are the experts, the scientists, if you please—their influence with such members of the Campfire Club as they may be acquainted with, with the object of correctly informing the club as to the exact present status of the seal question and of securing its cooperation to effect the adoption of the measures advocated by this bureau.

The attached letter is prepared, having in view the object stated.

BARTON W. EVERMANN.

Here is a letter from Mr. Townsend, one of the scientists referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts yesterday:

NEW YORK AQUARIUM,
Battery Park, New York, January 31, 1910.

Hon. GEORGE M. BOWERS,
Commissioner Bureau of Fisheries,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As a member of the fur-seal advisory board of your department and one always interested in matters pertaining to the fur-seal industry, I wish to call your attention to an important letter received from Mr. Alfred Fraser, which is inclosed herewith.

I have known Mr. Fraser for many years and have every confidence in his knowledge of this subject, as well as his entire sincerity. During the many years that the subject of the fur-seal fishery has been before our Government authorities he has supplied freely important statistics of the fur-seal trade. He has been the principal American buyer of sealskins in this country, and has been in the business for a lifetime.

There can be no doubt—

Now, listen to this—

There can be no doubt that a reduction in the number of sealskins now coming from the Pribilofs would be most injurious to the sealskin trade.

Then, further:

It is to be hoped that the Pribilof Islands will be re-leased this year, and that a small supply of skins will be kept available to the fur trade. The reasons for this are strongly set forth in Mr. Fraser's letter.

It is also important that the Treasury Department be requested to reconsider the matter of duty on sealskins.

There are some other matters not germane, a brief paragraph, which I shall not stop to read. This is signed by Chief Scientist C. H. Townsend, and is dated January 31, 1910. The correspondence which I have quoted shows what an effort these gentlemen were then making—who are now the brothers and dear friends of the fur seal—to have the lease continued to the lessees in order that they might keep on depleting and destroying the herd. If that lease had been renewed for only five years, at the rate the lessees were going on with the killing, there would not have been as many seals left as the Russians had in 1834 when they quit sealing.

Here is another argument in connection with that. Here is Mr. Fraser's letter to which Mr. Townsend referred, and I want to read it to you. This letter is written to Mr. Townsend. You can see on what holy grounds they put this question. This is Fraser's letter, dated January 28, 1910:

OFFICE OF ALFRED FRASER,
New York, January 28, 1910.

Dr. CHAS. H. TOWNSEND,
New York Aquarium, Battery Park.

He was evidently around where aquatic animals prevail—

DEAR SIR: Referring to our conversation of the 12th instant, and in reply to your inquiries, I beg to state that I deem it of the greatest importance that the taking of fur-seal skins on the Pribilof Islands should not be discontinued—

Now, listen to this:

for unless a supply of skins from these and the Commander Islands—

Those are Russian islands—

can be kept up, I am of the opinion that the sale of sealskin garments will be greatly reduced or will cease. The number of skins taken off Cape Horn, the Cape of Good Hope, and Lobos Island has decreased very materially of late years.

What worried them about this matter was that Mr Fraser, Mr. Townsend, and the Bureau of Fisheries coincided in the opinion that the use of fur-seal garments would cease, which would be a deplorable calamity, and therefore the killing should go on. I will read a little further from this scientist. It is interesting, and when I approach him I want to say to my colleagues that I do so with all the due humility as an old farmer ought to proceed in these matters:

In the sales of December last no Lobos Island skins were offered, nor had any advice been received of last year's catch.

Within the last two years a considerable number of seal has been taken in the Southern Ocean, but it is fair to suppose that this supply will soon be exhausted. Should the supply of sealskins of fine quality, say, Alaskas, Copper Island, and South Sea, be exhausted or stopped temporarily, the workmen engaged in the unhairing, shaving, etc., of the skins, which require skilled labor, would be driven to take up other work and lost sight of, and in the event of a renewal of the supply it would be difficult, if not impossible, to find men capable of doing the necessary work on them, and the education of unskilled workmen would result in the spoiling of a great many skins.

In other words, two important grounds were advanced by Mr. Fraser. One was that if we did not let the killing and butchery go on the use of fur-seal garments would go into a decline and we would have to use the skins of raccoons, minks, and muskrats. The other was that the men who were engaged in the dressing of sealskins might have to abandon it and dress the skins of minks, muskrats, and other fur-bearing animals. Notwithstanding that desperate effort to get the lease renewed, they went on killing. We supposed when we passed the law of 1910 that, except for food purposes for the natives—and for that purpose they generally kill yearlings or 2-year-olds—after we had appropriated $50,000 the killing would cease, but it did not cease.

Those men were saturated with the gospel of Fraser and Townsend, and so they proceeded to kill nearly as many seals in 1910 and in the following year as they had during the time of the lessees, for it would never do to have the American people grow unaccustomed to wearing sealskins.

Mr. President, this was a clear violation of the law of 1910, which, through the efforts of the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] and the Camp Fire Club, under the lead of Dr. Hornaday, we succeeded in passing. That law was perfectly plain. In the first section of it is the following proviso:

And provided further, That male seals only shall be killed and that not more than 95 per cent of 3-year-old male seals shall be killed in any one year.

That was the limitation—that nothing but 3-year-olds should be killed. The Senator from New York quoted from another paragraph of the law, and I will quote that, and you will see what there is in it. It is as follows:

It shall be unlawful to kill any female seal or any seal less than 1 year old at any season of the year, except as above provided—

The words "above provided" refer to the paragraph in section 1 which I have read—and it shall also be unlawful to kill any seal in the waters adjacent to the Pribilof Islands, or on the beaches, cliffs, or rocks where they haul up from the sea to remain.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] showed in his argument yesterday that of this number of twelve thousand and odd seals killed, over half of them—and if I am mistaken the Senator from Nebraska will correct me—over half of them, or over 7,000, were below 3 years old; that they were yearlings.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They were merely yearlings.

Mr. NELSON. They were yearlings.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To be exact, if the Senator will pardon me, the number was 7,733.

Mr. NELSON. That is correct. Out of over 12,000 killed, in their zeal to provide fur for the American people, so that furs would not go out of fashion, they had the audacity, in the face of this law, to go on and kill over 7,000—nearly 8,000—of the young fur-seal pups not more than a year old.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think the Senator may go further, and I think he can fairly say that it was not possible, by reason of the greatly depleted herd, to get as many as 12,000 seals without taking babies.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator is correct. There is no limit to this iniquity; I can not go far enough in that matter.

In the face of such a law, what is the use of passing other laws? These people are perfectly lawless. There are somewhere in the neighborhood of 200 natives on the island of St. Paul, the main island, and I think somewhere around 100, though I am not entirely sure, on the island of St. George. I do not think on the two islands together there are over 300 natives to be taken care of. It has been the practice in the fall, the latter part of the season, after the general killing season for commercial purposes is over, to drive up young seals and have them killed for the purpose of food for the natives. The natives will salt the seal meat down, make corned beef of those young seals, and keep it for the winter.

When we visited the islands they were very anxious to show us their method of killing. So they were kind enough to drive up a herd of young pups, yearlings, and 2-year-olds, if I am correct. They grow slowly, slower than those famous hogs that were driven into the sea. You can imagine how difficult it is to separate one class of sheep from another in a bunch of many thousands. As I was saying, however, they went down, rounded up a little group, and slowly drove them up at a snail's pace to the killing grounds. Then they proceeded to kill, in order to give a demonstration to the great committee of the United States Senate. The killing is done by a big, heavy, wooden club small at one end like a fork handle with a big chunk at the other. They knock the seal on the head and stun him. After he is stunned, they stick him as one would stick a hog. I stood by and noticed particularly that there were two females in the lot. The men were supposed to kill nothing but males; but when I called their attention to it, they denied it; they shook their heads at first, but I made them turn the beast over and made it so plain to them that they could not ignore it. In that little bunch there were only two females, but I cite the instance for the purpose of showing how difficult it is to distinguish among young seals when you drive them up to where you separate the males from the females, and that you are just as apt to kill those of one sex as those of the other. I venture to say that of the 7,000 or more young seal pups, to which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] have referred, in view of our experience and what I saw there, half of them were female seals instead of being male seals.

In this connection, let me quote some testimony relative to this matter and bearing upon it. Mr. Lembkey has been the chief—vulgar people might say "the chief cook and bottle washer"—up there, but I would say the representative of the Government up there looking after the seal question. I read from the hearings in the House:

The CHAIRMAN. How many did you kill last year?
Mr. LEMBKEY—

He is a Government employee—

Mr. LEMBKEY. We killed 12,920.
Q. How many had the old fur company killed the year before?—A. They killed 14,000 and something.
Q. What was the youngest seal you killed—what age?—A. Two years old.
Q. The statement has been made that it is hardly possible to distinguish the male and the female at that age?—A. At 2 years old?
Q. Yes. What is your opinion?—A. There is considerable difficulty in distinguishing the young males and females. There is considerable difficulty in distinguishing the male and the female yearling. They are both of the same size and general formation. It is almost impossible for anybody not an expert to pick them out and distinguish between them, and it is rather difficult even for an expert; but of the 2-year-olds the females are not on the hauling grounds; they are on the breeding rookeries for their initial impregnation. The 2-year-old males, on the other hand, are on the hauling-out grounds.

And so forth.

That corroborates what I have said, and that is why this killing is so dangerous. I am not criticizing the head of the Department of Commerce and Labor, because I think he was misled into this attitude and action by his subordinates, the head of the Bureau of Fisheries, and the corps of scientists who surrounded him; but in the face of the legislation which we adopted in 1910, after a struggle and a hard fight, what do you think of a bureau of Government officials who have the audacity, in the face of that law, to kill not only 3-year-old males, which the law authorized, but to go on and slaughter yearlings and 2-year-olds to the number of over 7,000? At that rate, unless we intervene and stop it, those scientific gentlemen will soon have the herd exterminated.

These scientists apparently think they are wiser than the laws of nature. Before we had these scientists, buffalo, in countless thousands, roamed over the plains of my State, the State of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and all of the Western States. The herds were exterminated by reckless killing; but before that extermination set in those herds grew and wandered over the plains, there being then no Jordans and no Townsends to protect those herds against undue growth. Now, these gentlemen tell us about the fur seal in Alaska, and they say that fur-seal herds can never grow unless you kill 95 per cent of the males. [Laughter.] Before we knew these scientists, before their doctrine became the gospel of the Bureau of Fisheries, that herd, under the laws of nature, protected by a closed season under the Russians, had grown to be a herd of between four and five million seals. Just think of a herd attaining that size without the aid of these scientists! [Laughter.]

I am afraid I am taking up too much time, and though this subject is most interesting, I desire to be brief. These negotiations have pursued a peculiar and sinuous course. The attitude of the Bureau of Fisheries, as you have seen from what I have said, has been hostile and adverse. We who believe in restoring that herd as it ought to be, we who believe in that gospel, have been met at all points for the last eight or nine years with obstruction in one form or another. Senators will pardon me for being somewhat emphatic in this matter, but it comes near to my heart, and when I see Government officials, such as we have in the Bureau of Fisheries, bid defiance to the laws of Congress and ignore the legislation that we have passed I can not help feeling resentment.

What occasion was there for killing those young pups after we had appropriated $50,000 extra to take care of the natives of those islands, and did it at the instance and on the recommendation of the department, because they said if you stop all this killing you will have to make provision for taking care of the natives? We did make provision for them, but of what avail was it? Nearly 13,000 seals were killed the ensuing year, almost as many as were killed under the lessees and with a more disastrous result than under the lessees, because more than half of them were yearlings, immature pups, that never ought to have been killed for any purpose, except, perhaps, a limited number for food for the natives.

If you ask me why I believe in a closed season, I say I believe in it, first, because the Russians demonstrated its value. They were compelled, when the herd was nearly exterminated, to resort to a 10-year period of closed season, and we know the result of that. The result of that experiment on the part of Russia was to restore and replenish that herd, so that when we came into possession of Alaska we had over 4,000,000 seal there.

Another reason why I am in favor of a closed season is this: If you will allow this killing to go on, it is utterly useless, from what I saw at the islands, to provide that they shall separate one class from the other and preserve them. If they resort to killing the 2-year-olds and yearlings, it is utterly impossible in any efficient manner to segregate the two sexes and kill the one and preserve the other. It is futile.

Why should we have such intense zeal here against the closed season? What is the object of continuing the killing? Why not have a closed season? We have reserved that right in the treaty, in spite of what the Senator from New York has said; Russia reserved it in respect to the Commander Islands. Japan reserved it; and Canada and Great Britain reserved the right to stop land killing; we have all reserved it, and provision is made for compensation in case land killing is suspended. How, in the face of those provisions in the treaty, can any Senator say that it would be a violation of treaty rights and our plighted faith to adopt a closed season? Mr. President, it is inscrutable to me, but the ways of Providence are sometimes difficult to fathom.

Mr. President, there is much more that I might say on this subject, for, as I have said, it is near to my heart; but I am aware that there are other Senators who desire to be heard and I think the Senate has been very patient with me. I want to say, in conclusion, to my colleagues in the Senate, that if you believe in restoring the seal herd to what it once was, in preserving it, in avoiding its extermination, as the buffalo has been exterminated in this country, then vote for the Senate amendment providing for the 10-year closed season. Let us try the experiment. It will prove, Senators, that we can restore that herd; and when it is restored, if we then resort to judicious killing, we will have an income that will be a profit and advantage to the United States, and I might say to these professors, that policy will probably restore the use of seal fur in this country.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, the general aspects of the pending legislation have been thoroughly canvassed by the Senators who have spoken. My purpose is to direct emphasis to certain questions of fact which have become distinctly material to the issue presented by the bill before the Senate. The history of the seal life in our northwestern waters is a long story. It is a pathetic story. Suffice it to say that now, for the second time in the known vicissitudes of that seal life, the question is squarely presented whether the remnant of the once numerous herd shall be rescued from extinction and the herd restored, or shall the process of killing be permitted to go on to the swift and certain extermination of what is left of it.

Before entering on the merits of this question I must be allowed to protest against the bringing into this controversy of a feature that manifestly does not belong here. I refer to the suggestion, or rather the assertion, made by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], that the closed season for the seal herd provided by the Senate amendment to the House bill is not regarded with favor by the foreign-contracting parties to the treaty, and that the adoption of such closed season will endanger the treaty itself. The Senator volunteered the information that this intelligence was a matter of "unofficial communication," or of "unofficial information." Occasionally we hear it whispered about this Chamber that in the event this bill or that bill passes, the President will veto it. This is done either out of a spirit of mere idle conjecture and gossip, or for the purpose of influencing votes on this floor. Whether one or the other, neither is creditable to the Senate, and certainly the Senate should never be influenced in its action by such predictions.

Now, for the manifest purpose of influencing the vote on this bill, the practice is extended, and we are openly asked to believe that by an unofficial communication, by unofficial information, unofficial notice, or some form of unofficial ultimatum it has been made known that unless we forego the closed-season period prescribed in the Senate amendment the other high contracting parties will renounce the treaty and that all the labor leading up to that important convention will have been in vain. This suggestion, made to the Senate in the last hours before the vote is to be taken, is entitled to no weight whatever. It does not come to us in the way that commends it on questions of our international relations to serious consideration; and especially is this true when the suggestion itself is directly in the face of the plain provisions of the treaty. The treaty speaks for itself, and the situation should remain clear from confusing factors which are not in it and do not belong to it.

The Committee on Foreign Relations had this bill before it for weeks. It was given careful consideration. By a large majority the committee adopted the amendment now under discussion and reported the bill with this amendment. The situation has not changed since that time, unless it be that the urgency for the enactment of the amendment into law has increased. I shall not go into the terms of the treaty at this point further than to ask, How could Great Britain complain of a closed season when by the words of the treaty payment of so much per year to her on behalf of Canada is expressly provided for in the event of a closed season? Why should Japan complain when by the treaty like payment to that Government is provided in the event of a closed season? What ground of objection could any of the parties to the treaty have to a closed season when each has subscribed to it in palpable contemplation of a closed season as a means of saving and increasing the herd? And yet the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] imports into this debate the specter of violated treaty obligations to terrify us from adopting the provision for a closed season.

The bill before us is a measure to give full force and effect to the provisions of the treaty. What was the fundamental purpose of the treaty? To stop the destruction and to conserve and increase seal life in the northwestern seas. This destruction of the seal herd is due to commercial killing for the profit there is in seal fur. For many years the herd was decimated by both pelagic or sea killing and killing on land. By the covenants of the treaty Great Britain, Russia, Japan, and the United States expressly prohibit pelagic killing. These provisions have gone into effect. They have nobly accomplished the purpose of these four Governments which control the sea situation with reference to seal life. There is to-day no such thing as pelagic sealing. This being accomplished, the remaining question is that of so carrying out the other provisions of the treaty as to save the respective treaty interests in the herd from extinction by killing on land.

Right at this point in the controversy the opponents of a closed season magnify the wickedness and superior importance of pelagic killing as a factor in the problem and belittle the consequence of land killing. Pelagic killing does mean a maximum loss of seal life with a minimum of profit and is indefensible. But it is killing that reduces the herd, whether the killing is done at sea or on land. Twice in the history of the herd has the herd come near the vanishing point. The first time was in 1834 and the second is at this hour. Prior to 1880 there was no such thing known as pelagic killing. Through all the years of the domination of the herd by the Russian Government the killing was done on the land, and only on the land. Of the millions composing the seal herd when first discovered, only a few thousand were left in 1834. That there was no pelagic sealing in those times is not disputed, but admitted on all sides, and settles the question whether the herd may be exterminated by killing on land as well as by killing at sea.

But no sooner is the decimation of the herd prior to 1834 by killing on land admitted by the opponents of the closed season than they vehemently assert that it was the indiscriminate killing of female seals that destroyed the herd and not the killing of the male. Here again they are mistaken. The official literature of the Russian Government and lay testimony on the subject disprove the contention.

I read from a review by Dr. Elliott of Yanovsky's official report to the Russian Government in 1820, this review having been called forth by one of the reports of Dr. Jordan in which the latter ignored this Russian official report in accounting for the diminution of the Russian herd:

> I bring this period in to show that the present loss of life on the fur-seal rookeries of the seal islands of Alaska is not the first experience of the kind which has been recorded by white men, or rather since this life came into the supervision and control of white men in 1786–87; prior to that date these breeding grounds had been undiscovered by either savage or civilized men.
> The Russian records show that from 1817 down to 1834 the supply of choice young male seals was constantly growing less and less as each year followed the other; they show that no such method of killing these seals at sea, now so well known to us as "pelagic sealing," was known to white men or practiced by them or by the Alaskan natives during the entire period of Russian ownership and control, ending in 1867; they show that this remarkable shrinkage of the herd from 1817 down to 1834 was due entirely to overdriving and culling of young male seals; they show that 14 years before the utter collapse of the herd took place this result of ruin was announced by an official investigator, who urged in 1820 that steps be taken then to avert the disaster; and they show that in spite of this clear note of warning and remonstrance the greed and the avarice of a Russian board of directors overruled Yanovsky's appeal; then they show that the end was reached in 1834, just as he had predicted under date of February 25, 1820, saying:
> "* * * that every year the young bachelor seals are killed and that only the cows, 'seecatchie' and 'polseecatchie,' are left to propagate the species. It follows that only the old seals are left, while if any of the bachelors are left alive in the autumn they are sure to be killed next spring. The consequence is that the number of seals obtained diminishes every year, and it is certain that the species will, in time, become extinct."

This review closes with these words:

Veniaminov, with all the records of the work in his possession, and living at the time, says deliberately that this collapse of the fur-seal herd on the Pribilof Islands, culminating in 1834, was due entirely to "excessive" and "wicked killing" of the young male life ("Zapieska," etc., vol. 2, p. 568, St. Petersburg, 1842); and Yanovsky predicted it, in 1820, as certain to come unless the culling and killing of choice young males was stopped.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana at some point in his reference to the report to give the date when it was made.

Mr. SHIVELY. The commentary on the report from which I have been reading appears in full on pages 1614 and 1615 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of 1903, in the proceedings of February 2 of that year.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Does that relate to the report of the investigation made by Jordan and Thompson?

Mr. SHIVELY. It manifestly relates to a report or reports made prior to 1903.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In that year, I think, the census was taken of the seals on the islands, and it showed that there were only about 450,000 out of 4,700,000 on the islands in 1870.

Mr. SHIVELY. Yes; 450,000. And since that time the herd has been reduced to less than one-third of that number. The Jordan report referred to was of date 1898. The review of that report from which I read was made in 1899.

No, Mr. President, the persistent assertion that it was the killing of females that was the primary and principal cause of the destruction of the Russian herd is without substance. It was not the killing of females but the killing of seals, and especially the killing of the males, that was alleged as the destructive agency. The pretense that you can kill 95 per cent of the males and not destroy the herd has no support in the history of seal life. All the evidence available from that history is to the contrary. Little is said in the historical literature of the herd about the killing of females. The Russian sealers had an almost superstitious respect for the mother seals. In their operations they scrupulously avoided the breeding grounds. The killing of the males is the loud note in the accounts of the loss of seal life. Prior to 1834 the Russian Government devised all sorts of regulations. Every expedient was resorted to to so regulate and control the killing as to preserve and recover the herd. The commercial beneficiaries of the slaughter were then, as now, prolific of expedients to prevent a closed season. But all other resources failed, and the Russian Government was confronted by a direct choice between the practically total extinction of the herd and a closed season.

In 1834 a closed period of 10 years was ordained. It was established and enforced. Nature was allowed a free course. The herd rapidly revived and multiplied. Having been permitted to increase into the millions, the Russian Government then allowed killing in some years, even from 60,000 to 75,000 per year. When once restored to its ancient strength, the taking of this number seems to have had no decimating effect on the herd from year to year. From the remnant of the herd left in 1834, its numbers, when we came into possession of the islands in 1867, or rather when our first census of the herd was taken, between 1872 and 1874, had risen to 4,700,000. The destruction of the herd was not due to pelagic sealing, as in that day there was no such sealing. It was not primarily due to the killing of females, but to the improvident killing of the males. The restoration was not due to efforts at regulating the killing, but to the total cessation of killing for a period of years. With the herd at its present low state, the closed period is the only remedy that gives any promise of preservation or recovery.

There is another contention put forward against a closed season that merits some attention. This is the claim that unless a large percentage of the bachelor seals are killed the bull seals become so numerous and crowded on the rookeries that in their terrific fighting among themselves they "tear the cows to pieces and trample the pups to death." This contention has been seriously insisted on by every Senator who has spoken against the closed season. I challenge any one of them to make good on that claim. In all the inquiry and investigation into the causes of the decline of the herd when under Russian domination, no one ever made such a discovery. Nor is it justified by the official literature of our own Government on the subject since we came into possession of the herd—unless it be since this immediate controversy began. The notion that destruction of the female seals or the pups results from such alleged cause is a myth. The thing does not exist as a fact. It is a part of the cloud of fiction that has been made to envelop this controversy to confuse the real issue.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SHIVELY. I do.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator mean to say that there can be no proof advanced or presented that the contention which has been made in that respect is true?

Mr. SHIVELY. I do not know what has been conjured up within the last two years on the question. What I do say is that the history of seal life, the evidence in regard to its vicissitudes, will not disclose that the fighting upon the islands is a serious cause of the depletion of the herd through death of the cows or the pups.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I quote from Mr. Elliott, who has been before committees many times, and who has been here advocating this matter? He says in his monograph, on page 38—it is very brief, and I should like to read it.

Mr. SHIVELY. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Prof. Elliott says:

I have seen two bulls dash at each other with all the energy of furious rage, meeting right in the midst of a small pod of 40 or 50 pups, tramp over them with all their crushing weight, bowling them out right and left in every direction by the impetus of their movements.

That is the statement he makes in his monograph, at page 38.

Mr. SHIVELY. That was an instance of fighting in the immediate presence of the pups so rare and exceptional as to attract special attention. But while that was an exceptional instance of fighting among the bull seals in the presence of the pups, where is the evidence even in that instance of injury to the pups? In the monograph itself and in concluding the last sentence of the paragraph just quoted, and as a part of that sentence, Prof. Elliott adds these words:

without injury to a single one, so far as I could see.

Of course, there is furious fighting among the bull seals, but it is seldom that this takes place in the presence of the mother seals or pups, and even then not to their serious injury.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SHIVELY. Certainly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think I can explain the matter. Anybody who is acquainted with the habits of the seals knows that in the spring of the year these large males, the leaders, the six-year olds, come first to the island. They take their places on the rookeries—mark out the boundaries of their possessions as clearly as you would mark out the yard in front of your house. The young males go off by themselves in another part of the island. They are called the bachelor herd. The females come after the males have taken their places on the rookeries, and when they come the males capture them as they approach the shore. They make up families of 25 or 50, who belong to their harems, so to speak.

Occasionally a fight does take place between the great leaders. When it does, then some of the older males who are out in the bachelor quarters get into the fight, and the old fellow's place is taken by the seal who becomes the victor.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator has been on the islands. He visited the islands as a Senator, to look into the seal situation and other questions connected with our northwestern possessions. Now, I ask the Senator if it is not the fact that the male seals arrive at the islands first, that the lines of the harems are marked out and possession of them contested for before the female seals arrive, and that it is this period that constitutes the real fighting season?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That is the real fighting season.

Mr. SHIVELY. The real fighting season is between the time of the early arrival of the male herds at the islands and the later arrival of the schools of female seals.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think that is true, and yet it is between the leaders of the herds.

Mr. SHIVELY. Moreover, Mr. President, many of the scientists whose names have been invoked in this debate in favor of open killing seasons testified at the hearings before the House committee in 1911 on this bill. Were the claim true that crowding and fighting among the bull seals on the islands destroy the cows and the pups, there was the time and place to submit clear and convincing proofs of so vital and important a fact. Where in all the pages of those hearings does Dr. C. Hart Merriam, who visited the islands in an official capacity, support the contention? Dr. F. A. Lucas went officially to the islands in 1896 and 1897 expressly to investigate the causes of mortality among the pups, and at the hearings before the committee in 1911 testifies that he never "saw a pup trampled to death by a bull." Dr. C. H. Townsend was officially associated with that seal life for 15 years. He made 10 trips to the islands and filed many reports with the Treasury Department. He is no longer in the service, but is showing a lively interest, manifestly from the commercial side, in preserving without interruption the right to kill. Where does he or Dr. Stejneger or Dr. Evermann or any of the other scientists who appeared before the committee submit a word of testimony in support of the claim? Then there is Lembkey. He is the "practical man" on the islands. For 13 years he has been the agent of the Government in active supervision of the killing. Neither in his testimony before the committee nor in any of his reports to the Government in all these years does he in a single instance give credit to this contention, and in his report of 1905 he expressly discredits it.

But aside from the absence of direct evidence in support of this claim is the incurable weakness inherent in the claim itself. The millions of bulls in the herd of 4,700,000 on the islands when we came into possession had been pups themselves. The millions of cows had been pups. The herd had risen to these millions from a few thousand in 1834. How about the decimating slaughter of cows and pups from crowding and fighting among the bulls in all those years of increase and multiplication? For every seal coming to the islands in 1834 there were 40 seals crowding the islands in 1872. Did the tearing and trampling process reduce the proportions of the herd from 1 in 1834 to 40 in 1872? The whole contention is too spurious to mislead anyone who prefers not to be misled.

Of course, this contention is invented and pressed to justify the continued killing of what is glibly called "surplus males," on the theory that we can thus make profit from the herd and increase it at the same time. There is nothing new in this theory. The whole policy of Russia prior to 1834 with reference to this seal life was woven about it, to the continued depletion and threatened extinction of the herd. Even closed seasons of from one year to one instance, I believe, of four years, were intermittently resorted to, which, by reason of their brevity, failed of results. It was the 10-year closed period that revolutionized the situation and started the herd to its later magnificent proportions.

The law of seal life has not changed. The seal is no more a domestic animal now than when the herd was first discovered in the eighteenth century. The seal now, as then, is absolutely independent of man in its food, shelter, and in all its movements, habits, and habitations. For many months of the year the herd is at sea thousands of miles from the Pribilof Islands and beyond any possible control by man now, just as it was then. After these months at sea the male herds return to the islands now, just as they did then. Some weeks later the female herds arrive now, just as they did then. Between the times of these arrivals the male seals 6 years old or over struggle for places on the breeding ground now just as they did then. The fighting means the "survival of the fittest" now just as it did then, and as no other test can mean. The infirm, the defective, the cowardly retire. The strong, the virile, the courageous remain. If that seal life is to be preserved and increased it will not be done by ignoring the law of its existence. With the present depleted state of the herd, to permit the opponents of a closed season to call the seals they want to kill "surplus males" and then proceed to kill them is to extinguish what remains of the herd.

I shall not stop to quarrel with the scientists who have given countenance to the theory of killing the "surplus males." I have defended them from some of the stupid follies wrongfully ascribed to them in this Chamber. Their theory is only a theory. It is a theory in this Chamber, a theory around these lobbies, a theory in the Department of Commerce and Labor, a theory on the Pribilof Islands, and never aught but a theory on the islands. Despite the fact that the Department of Commerce and Labor asked for and received an appropriation of $50,000 to take care of the natives on the islands on the termination of the lease in 1910 on the theory that all killing was to cease for a time, that department in that year proceeded to kill and did kill 12,920 of the little remnant of the herd left. By the official statement sent from London, where the skins were marketed, 7,733 of these seals were "small pups and extra small pups." The following year 12,008 more were killed. The theory of killing "surplus males," even if sound, has nothing to do with the case. The evidence is convincing that if, under present conditions, killing at all is allowed it means killing without regard to age or sex or numbers or the merciless depletion and destruction of the herd.

The closed season is the only remedy—not one year, as proposed by the bill as it came from the House. The one, two, or three year closed season is only temporizing and trifling with the question. The ravenous desire to kill, to kill, and to kill, so apparent in the frantic efforts by those in charge of this seal life to retain the right to kill, could await the termination of a short period. Sever the commercial influence, that presses in on this legislation from London by way of New York and the Department of Commerce and Labor, from the life of the herd and recovery will be swift. Dissolve this entirely sordid connection and give the herd a rest. At the end of 10 years you can begin with a clean slate. The atmosphere will have cleared, the clamor to kill will have ceased, and you can then adopt and enforce reasonable regulations under which profit may be realized from the herd without reducing its numbers or menacing its life.

In opposition to the closed season the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] makes an eloquent appeal to the Senate in behalf of the scrupulous observance of our treaty obligations. Faithful observance of treaty obligations should always be a good theme to conjure with. I apprehend that no Senator in this Chamber will allow the Senator from New York to go before him in recognizing the sacred character of treaty obligations. But no lurid picture of the fate that befalls nations which do not faithfully observe treaties should be permitted to terrify the Senate into seeing things in this treaty that plainly are not in it or into not seeing things in the treaty that plainly are in it.

Article 1 of the treaty prohibits pelagic sealing. The Senator says this longed-for triumph will be seriously menaced, if not hopelessly lost, by legislation in favor of a closed season. Why, article 10 of the treaty expressly provides that nothing in the treaty "contained shall restrict the right of the United States at any time and from time to time to suspend altogether the taking of sealskins on such islands." But the Senator contends that this right can be only exercised when "it may seem necessary," and that we must first find that it is necessary. Does anyone doubt that each of the other high contracting parties had full and complete knowledge of the depleted condition and rapid disappearance of the herd? Can there be any question that the great purpose in the mind of each party to the treaty was to save and restore the herd?

Think you that, having in mind the Russian experience at a time when there was no such thing as pelagic killing, they did not fully understand and appreciate that prohibition of killing at sea must be reenforced by prohibition for a time of killing on land if the rapid disappearance of the herd is to be arrested and increase of the herd accomplished? Is it not obvious that it was the present and immediate necessities of the situation that caused the negotiators of the treaty to supplement the article against pelagic sealing by the provision in Article X in favor of a closed season to prevent for a time all commercial killing on land?

Were any doubt left on this question, it is settled by the provision in article 11, in which it is agreed that the United States shall pay to "Great Britain and to Japan each the sum of $10,000 annually in lieu of any share of skins during the years when no killing is allowed." The article further provides that "the United States shall be entitled to reimburse itself for any annual payments" therein required, with 4 per cent interest thereon on all advance payments out of skins taken "in any subsequent year or years when killing is again resumed." The treaty in express terms allows the "United States at any time and from time to time to suspend altogether the taking of sealskins." It provides what shall be done in the period or periods when the killing of seals "shall have been absolutely prohibited by the United States." It provides the manner in which the United States shall be entitled to reimburse itself "in any subsequent year or years when killing is again resumed."

It is plain that this treaty requires no construction or interpretation. Its terms are not indefinite, uncertain, or ambiguous. The closed season is in full accord with it in both letter and spirit. The makers of the treaty knew that the only other great crisis in the life of the seal herd was due to land killing, and to land killing alone. They knew that in the present crisis to prohibit sea killing and stop there was to do a vain thing, and to at best postpone a few years the total extinction of the herd. While the control of the question is given to us by the treaty, there can be no mistake either as to its purpose or the means of attaining that purpose. The closed season means fidelity to our treaty obligations. In the present condition of the herd, the open season means temporizing and trifling with our treaty obligations, and utter failure of all the objects for which the treaty was made. The amendment should be adopted. It will give the herd a period of years for rest and recovery. It will take the present shortsighted influence of the Government from the commercial side of the question and separate the herd from the interests so clamorous to kill. When the herd shall have recovered something of its ancient numbers, you can commence, under new auspices and careful guardianship, to realize substantial gains without menace to that wonderful life in our northwestern waters.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, my only apology for taking the time of the Senate this afternoon is the fact that since the year 1903 I have been looking, often with hope deferred, to the accomplishment of a purpose then formed by the members of a subcommittee of the Committee on Territories who, under the direction of the Senate, made an investigation of the conditions in Alaska, to secure the adoption of a treaty with other interested nations under the terms of which pelagic sealing should be abandoned by them, and that land killing by the United States should also be suspended for such a period as might be required for the rehabilitation of the seal herd on Pribilof Islands. The committee consisted of Mr. DILLINGHAM (chairman), Mr. NELSON, Mr. BURNHAM, and Mr. Patterson. They visited the islands, witnessed the killing of seals, and, so far as able, acquainted themselves with the conditions of seal life.

It should be remembered that the Pribilof Islands become the home of the seal herd during the summer months. They select these islands as their breeding grounds, because they lie in Bering Sea at a point where the warm Japanese current, passing up through the Aleutian Islands, meets the cold current from the Arctic Ocean, from which meeting dense fogs are produced. The result is that these islands are almost constantly enveloped in the atmosphere of fog, which makes them an ideal place for seal life. The herd instinctively seeks them for breeding purposes, as, with their heavy coat of fur, they are unable to bear the heat which comes from the bright sunlight. When the committee visited the islands in 1903 the fog was so dense that they sailed past, and only found them a few hours later after retracing their course.

The seal herd comes to the islands in the springtime, first the leaders of the herd, great, massive males, weighing 500 or 600 pounds, each of which takes his place on the rookeries, marks out the ground, which he appropriates individually, and there awaits the coming of the cows. The latter arrive a few weeks later, and are claimed by and brought into the harems of the different leaders. There the young are born and reared, the females going to sea to secure their food, but returning to suckle their young.

The bachelor herd, as it is known, consists of the young males, those that are not old enough and strong enough to fight their way to the breeding grounds. Upon their arrival they go to a different part of the islands and constitute a herd by themselves. It is from that herd that the seals are taken for their fur, but unfortunately, under the system adopted by our Government, the killing has been so extensive that not a sufficient number of males were spared to reach maturity and eventually to fight their way to the breeding grounds.

Allusion has already been made in debate to the fact that in 1835, when the Russian killings ceased, there were, according to the Russian report, only 8,000 young seals, males and females, on St. Paul Island, but under a system of full protection then adopted the herd rapidly multiplied, and in 1870, when the first count was made after the acquisition of Alaska by the United States, the seal herd had so enormously multiplied that it was found to number 4,700,000.

The Government of the United States adopted the policy of leasing the islands to a private corporation, with the right to take and kill seals under certain restrictions and regulations, but experience proves that this system was most destructive to the herd and, in 1890, there were less than 1,000,000 seals remaining in the herd, and three years later, in 1893, when the Jordan-Thompson Commission visited the islands, there remained, by their count, less than 500,000 seals in the herd.

I find from an examination of the records that, during the period of 19 years, from 1871 to 1890, the lessees took upon an average 102,840 annually, while the pelagic sealers, during the same period, took upon an average only 14,184 annually; in round numbers, 14,000 seals were annually taken at sea as against 102,000 annually killed on the islands under the leasing system. But after 1890, the conditions changed and, while the killing upon the land diminished, the pelagic sealing rapidly increased. The reason for this may be found in the fact that, when the breeding season has closed upon the islands and the young have become accustomed to the water, the herd goes to sea and does not return until the following season. It moves south through the Aleutian Islands and through the North Pacific Ocean until it reaches a point perhaps as far south as San Francisco, turns to the east, and strikes the coast of California, traveling slowly north along the coast of Oregon, Washington, and Alaska, to the Aleutian Islands and in the spring are back again at the breeding grounds on the Pribilof Islands.

As pelagic sealing became more profitable, and the owners of fleets became better informed as to the habits of the seals, their fleets were increased in number and their work was more intelligently and distinctively accomplished. They knew just where to meet the herd at almost any season of the year, and the result was that pelagic sealing by the Canadian and Japanese fleets increased year by year. Not only that, these fleets entered Bering Sea, surrounded the Pribilof Islands, and, although the herd was protected by the 3-mile rule, they made depredations upon the female portion of the herd which are compelled to go to sea for their food. The females often go 20 miles to sea for this purpose, sometimes 30 miles, and sometimes 50 miles. Experience has also shown that there are favored locations adjacent to the islands to which they resort for fish food. Learning which fact, the pelagic sealers visit these spots, and the seal mothers are taken in sight of the islands. And every time the mother is killed her young left on the shores die of starvation, because no mother seal will suckle the young of another. This explanation will perhaps serve to account for the vast increase in pelagic sealing.

By reference to the table before referred to, I find that in 1890 the pelagic catch amounted to 40,000, in 1891 to 59,000—I am giving round numbers—in 1892 to 46,000, in 1893 to 30,000, in 1894 to 61,000, in 1895 to 56,000, and in the following years, respectively, 43,000, 24,000, 28,000, 34,000, 35,000, and 24,000.

On the other hand, the number taken on the islands decreased and became vastly less. Without giving the number taken by years, I will say that from 1890 down to 1901 the average number taken annually on the islands under the leasing system was 18,391, while the average number of those taken under the pelagic system was 40,514. The most disastrous feature of the pelagic system was that those taken were mostly pregnant females.

The committee, after visiting the islands and studying conditions, were very much impressed by what they learned and in reporting to the Senate said:

> We are thus brought face to face with the fact that the killing of young seals on the islands since 1896 has been so close that no young male life has been permitted to pass over the slaughter fields onto the breeding grounds. This occasions the rapid falling off in numbers (42 per cent in the last two years) of the breeding males from old age, their places not being filled by the accession of fresh male life. In order to prevent a total collapse of the birth rate in the next two or three years it is imperative that all killing of all seal life on the islands be stopped next season. This will enable the choicest of the young males to grow up and reach the breeding grounds in the next four years and there take their places, which must be taken by them or the seal life will be extinguished.

I want to read just what our recommendation was at that time, because it expresses my individual opinion. It was then thought to be somewhat drastic, but the committee recommended—> that a suspension of all killing by the lessees of the seal islands be made at once and indefinitely, and that the Government of the United States shall attempt to reopen and conclude negotiations with the Government of Great Britain looking to a revision of existing rules and regulations which govern the taking of seals in the open waters of the North Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea, and to enter upon negotiations with the Governments of Russia and Japan to the end that all pelagic sealing may be stopped; and if, after a reasonable length of time, the Government fails to secure a proper revision and enforcement of such rules and to conclude such negotiations, then the Secretary of Commerce may, with the approval of the President, reduce the surplus female life of the herd on the Pribilof Islands to 10,000.

A pretty drastic recommendation, but the committee say further:

> With the herd so reduced in numbers pelagic sealing will not be profitable as an industry, and the herd will be permitted to increase and multiply slowly at first, afterwards more rapidly, until again proper regulations may be adopted for killing.

The recommendation was that if no agreement to save the herd could be reached, the President be authorized to kill the herd down to 10,000, that there would then be little profit in pelagic sealing, and it would cease for that reason until further steps could then be taken to secure the desired cooperation.

At the next session Congress adopted a joint resolution providing:

> SEC. 2. That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to negotiate and, if possible, conclude negotiations with the Governments of Russia and Japan and other maritime nations to the end of securing their adherence to and a common agreement with the terms of any satisfactory revision of the rules and regulations specified in section 1 of this resolution which may be agreed upon by the Governments of Great Britain and the United States.

In 1904 and 1905 this matter was a good deal agitated by members of the committee, and many consultations were held with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor regarding the improvement of methods for the preservation of the herd. In 1905, after a good deal of consultation with others who were interested in the matter, members of that committee then in the Senate addressed a letter to Secretary Metcalf, of the Department of Commerce and Labor, suggesting substantially the plan that has been incorporated in the treaty, as was stated by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] this morning. I will not stop to read that letter, but I ask permission to insert it in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, permission to do so will be granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., March 17, 1905.

Hon. V. H. METCALF,
Secretary Department Commerce and Labor.

DEAR SIR: After a careful survey and study of the condition of affairs on the seal islands of Alaska during the past two years we have come to the conclusion that any steps which we may take to restore the Pribilof fur-seal herd so as to be of any economic value to our Government will fail unless we have the cooperation of the Canadian Government.

With that cooperation we can succeed, to the great mutual advantage of both Governments. To secure this cooperation it is evident to us now that we must make certain concessions to the Canadian Government in return for certain concessions to be made on its part to us.

We respectfully submit a memorandum which embodies our ideas with regard to these mutual concessions which should be made in the premises, and which we believe will receive favorable attention at Ottawa if placed in the hands of the British ambassador by the President, with a full descriptive text illustrating the great natural power of recuperation possessed by the fur-seal herd if properly managed by man.

Very respectfully, yours,

W. P. DILLINGHAM.
KNUTE NELSON.
HENRY E. BURNHAM.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Accompanying that letter were memoranda Nos. 1 and 2, indicating the reasons that might be suggested both on the part of our Government and on the part of the Government of Great Britain bearing upon that question and which was substantially part of the letter. I ask to have those also inserted in the RECORD as a part of the history of the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The memoranda referred to are as follows:

[Memorandum No. 1.]

FROM THE AMERICAN POINT OF VIEW.—AS TO AN ANGLO-AMERICAN JOINT CONTROL OF THE KILLING OF THE PRIBILOF FUR-SEAL HERD, WITH SPECIAL REGARD FOR ITS RESTORATION AND PRESERVATION.

I. Under existing law and regulations the Pribilof fur-seal herd will be so diminished by 1906 that its care and maintenance thereafter will constitute an annual charge and burden upon the Public Treasury, and also include the support of some 300 natives of the said Pribilof Islands.

II. Without the cooperation of Canada this fur-seal herd can not be restored to its natural full form and number. Unless it is so restored it is of no value to us. The seal islands of Alaska are barren of all agriculture and of mineral lands, with no fish or fisheries, and are far out of the path of commerce.

III. We can not reasonably expect the Canadian Government to unite with us unless we make certain concessions. These concessions must be of a character which the Canadian Government can accept as a positive gain to it over existing conditions, and so publish that fact to its own people.

IV. We can not buy the rights of British subjects vested in pelagic sealing, but we can share our rights with their rights in a joint control of the killing of this fur-seal life on the land and in the sea.

V. We can have this joint control without a waiver of our sovereignty on the Pribilof Islands. We can arrange it as specified in Articles II and III of the following memorandum (No. 2).

FROM THE BRITISH POINT OF VIEW.—AS TO AN ANGLO-AMERICAN JOINT CONTROL OF THE KILLING OF THE PRIBILOF FUR-SEAL HERD, WITH SPECIAL REGARD FOR ITS RESTORATION AND PRESERVATION.

I. Under existing rules and regulations the Pribilof fur-seal herd will be so diminished in numbers that the pelagic hunting of that herd in 1906 will cease to be profitable for the fleet now engaged in its prosecution, and its importance as an industry will cease. Four or five vessels will continue to hang on the flanks of the remnant of the herd annually and secure only a small annual catch of a few thousand seals into the indefinite future.

II. If the Canadian Government will unite with that of the United States in a joint control of the killing of this Pribilof fur-seal herd on the land and in the sea, then the small nucleus of it not existing can be restored to its natural fine form and number in 10 or 12 years from date, if all killing on the islands and in the sea is suspended by the joint agreement to that end by the two Governments aforesaid. Then when the killing of the surplus male life is resumed, as it can be in 10 or 12 years, it should be done entirely on the islands, and only by agents of the Government of the United States. A Canadian inspector should be resident on the islands, and his certificate as to the work done and of the number of skins taken shall go with those of the American agents from the islands annually and be of equal official warrant and record value. The skins shall be sold at public auction in the best market of the world and in strict accordance with the established usage of the fur trade.

III. The Canadian Government should bear, say, 25 per cent of the annual cost of maintenance of the care and conservation of the herd, including support of the natives, etc., and it should receive, say, 25 per cent of the net proceeds annually from the sale of the skins taken on the islands.

This cost of maintenance will not exceed $50,000 annually. The entire cost of the transshipment of the skins to London from the islands will not exceed $2.50 per skin.

When the herd is restored between 75,000 and 80,000 young male seals can be annually taken without any injury to its full natural birth rate on the islands. These skins will be worth at the lowest figures $1,500,000, and at the figures of prosperous trade $2,500,000 to $3,000,000, as they are to-day.

Therefore the Canadian treasury would receive at least $300,000 annually in seasons of dull trade and some $600,000 in the seasons of prosperity.

IV. Unless the Canadian Government unites in this manner with the United States Government it will never receive anything from this industry. It never has derived a single cent from it for its public treasury up to date.

NOTE.—This memorandum was printed and appended, as above, to the treaty as sent in to the Senate February 8, 1911, by the Secretary of State and ratified by the Senate February 15, 1911, these terms of mutual concessions and joint control being kept secret until Japan and Russia, came into agreement with Canada and the United States on the terms as above stated.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In the suggestions made in memorandum No. 2 is found this language:

II. If the Canadian Government will unite with that of the United States in a joint control of the killing of this Pribilof fur-seal herd on the land and in the sea, then the small nucleus of it now existing can be restored to its natural fine form and number in 10 or 12 years from date, if all killing on the islands and in the sea is suspended by the joint agreement to that end by the two Governments aforesaid. Then, when the killing of the surplus male life is resumed, as it can be in 10 or 12 years, it should be done entirely on the islands, and only by agents of the Government of the United States.

That was the inducement that we thought might be held out to Great Britain. It was then firmly our belief that in 10 years that herd might be rehabilitated, and that if Great Britain could be brought to see that fact and could have a share of the proceeds of the herd when killed by the United States it would be an inducement for her to enter into this treaty; but I only cite it at this particular time to show what was in the mind of the committee after a pretty full investigation of the question, namely, that a total cessation of killing for a certain period was the principle which ought to be adopted. Taking that as a basis for the operations by the Department of State, as has been so very clearly stated by the Senator from New York this morning, the present treaty has been secured.

In that treaty provision is made for every contingency which I thought existed then and which I think exists now. The question comes to us as a practical question, What is the best policy for all four nations who are parties to this treaty?

I want to say at this point, before I take up the question of what will constitute a reasonable regulation under the terms of the treaty, that I am so pleased with the success of the Department of State in securing this agreement, I am so pleased with the accomplishment of our purpose in securing a treaty by which pelagic sealing will cease, and that we now have the power in some form in some measure to rehabilitate the seal herd, that I would vote for almost any measure calculated to carry out in a fair spirit the terms of that treaty.

I have my individual opinion as to what is best. I never have wavered in my opinion that a closed season for some period to be agreed upon should be adopted in the first instance. I would not insist that it should be the longest period that has been mentioned, but I do think that it is better for Russia, that it is better for Great Britain, that it is better for Japan, and that it is better for the Unied States to have the seal herd firmly established and considerably increased before we permit any killing except for the purpose of food for the natives, those who are the inhabitants of those islands, who must have it.

The proposition adopted by the House to carry out the terms of the treaty without the adoption of the closed season is to me a new element in the problem. I do not know that I ever heard it discussed until after the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, under authority of the law of 1910, authorized the taking of seals by the Government last year. Up to that time I had supposed that most people having knowledge of the question believed that a closed season was required. I find that in 1909 the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] introduced resolutions into the Senate providing for such a policy upon the expiration of the leases then in operation. The 20-year lease, under the terms of which, and by pelagic sealing, the herd had been so badly depleted was to expire in the spring of 1910. It was the desire of all who had given attention to the subject that there should be no renewal of the same, and the resolutions I have referred to were offered, I think, to secure an expression of Congress upon that subject.

What was the attitude of the Department of Commerce and Labor? What was the attitude of the Bureau of Fisheries at that time upon this question? It was clearly in favor of a closed period "to allow the herd to recuperate." I find that on December 15, 1909, Barton E. Evermann, assistant in charge of scientific inquiry, addressed a letter to Commissioner Bowers as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
BUREAU OF FISHERIES,
Washington, December 15, 1909.

Mr. COMMISSIONER: There is handed you herewith for your consideration a draft of lease of the seal islands. This has been prepared by Mr. Lembkey and myself in compliance with your request—

Mr. Lembkey had been the Government agent in the islands for 15 years and was supposed to know all about seal life—

We have endeavored to make the form of the lease agree with the recommendations recently made by the advisory board, fur-seal service, in conference with the fur-seal board. For your convenience a number of references and citations have been indicated. It is believed that an examination of this tentative draft will enable the Secretary to arrive at the exact form desired.

Respectfully,

BARTON W. EVERMANN,
Assistant in Charge Scientific Inquiry.

I want to say here that I am not criticizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor for the preparation he was making to again lease the islands for the purposes which I have mentioned and to take seal, because the law required him to do it. No one can criticize him for what the law required him to do. But many were anxious to have that law repealed, and a movement had been inaugurated to that end.

Accompanying the draft of a proposed lease, which had been prepared by his subordinates, a memorandum was attached by Messrs. Evermann and Lembkey in which this language was used:

The lease should be renewed. It is foolish to abolish killing on land while seals are being killed in the water. Cessation of killing on land means encouragement to pelagic sealing.

But, mark what follows:

Should pelagic or sea killing be abolished, it might be well to have a closed season on land as well, to allow the herd to recuperate.

There was the opinion and the suggestion of the Bureau of Fisheries at the time the change was made in the policy of the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What is the date of that?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That was December 15, 1909.

But that on the following day, December 16, the movement mentioned by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] in his speech had been inaugurated, and we find that Mr. Barton W. Evermann, assistant in charge of scientific inquiry, addressed another letter to the commissioner, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
BUREAU OF FISHERIES,
Washington, December 16, 1909.

The COMMISSIONER:

The Washington Star of December 10 last announced that the Campfire Club, of New York, had inaugurated a campaign to save the fur-seal herd through legislation designed to prevent the re-leasing of the sealing right, the cessation of all killing on the islands for 10 years, except for natives' food, and to secure the opening of negotiations with Great Britain to revise the regulations of the Paris tribunal. As the result of this movement, on December 7 three resolutions were introduced by Senator DIXON, of Montana, one of which embodies the provisions before mentioned, the other two calling for the publication of fur-seal correspondence and reports since 1904.

He proceeds:

As the object of this movement is at variance with the program of this bureau and of the recommendations of the advisory fur-seal board, notably in the plan to prevent killing and the renewal of the seal-island lease, the advisability is suggested of having Messrs. Townsend, Lucas, and Stanley-Brown use their influence with such members of the Campfire Club as they may be acquainted with with the object of correctly informing the club as to the exact present status of the seal question and of securing its cooperation to effect the adoption of the measures advocated by this bureau.

The attached letter is prepared, having in view the object stated.

BARTON W. EVERMANN.

At that point and in the manner indicated the purpose of the bureau was disclosed, and soon thereafter some of the forces in Congress came face to face with the bureau.

A meeting of the Committee on Conservation of National Resources, of which the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] was chairman, was held, at which time his resolutions were brought up for action. The members of the committee were, I think, unanimous in the opinion that it would be very unwise to carry out what now appears to have been the policy of the Bureau of Fisheries, to further extend through the leasing system the right to take seals on the Pribilof Islands. As a result of the consultation the chairman was authorized to have an interview with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and to advise him of the opinion of the committee in respect of that matter, which was done.

The result of that was that the Secretary said in substance: "There must be law for it; I am compelled, unless the law is repealed or changed, to make new leases." Thereupon by conference between the chairman of the committee and the Secretary, as I now remember—and I am speaking purely from memory—a draft of the present law was prepared by the Secretary. When that bill had been introduced in the Senate and had been referred to the committee another meeting was held and the whole question was discussed. The Secretary was present, and when he knew that it was the mind of the committee that there should be a closed season, stated that he wanted the law to give him discretionary authority to kill, placing his request upon the ground that he was very much in earnest in his cooperation with the Department of State in securing the treaty which we have been discussing to-day, and that, in order to secure the agreement of the three other nations to that treaty, he did not know what policy it might be necessary to pursue with reference to the islands. The subject was very fully discussed, and his request was acceded to. The Secretary stated that he might want to exercise the right to kill, and he might not want to do so; that he would be governed by circumstances as they developed. I remember distinctly that it was suggested that if the United States were generous and suspended killing upon the land, we might go to other nations engaged in pelagic sealing with greater strength than otherwise; but that it was the mind of the committee, as a matter of policy, that any general killing of seals upon the land should be suspended is shown by the discussion which then took place regarding the amount to be appropriated for the purchase of the lessees' property upon the islands—their dwellings, salt houses, boats, and so forth. It was thought that the sum of $100,000 mentioned in the draft of the bill would be sufficient, but that if the killing was suspended and the revenues from that source stopped, the Secretary would need a larger appropriation to make the purchase and to administer the affairs of the islands, and as a result the appropriation was increased to $150,000.

An unfortunate misunderstanding has arisen as the result of that meeting. Some who were present understood that the Secretary would not permit any further killing of seals. I did not so understand, and I do not stand here to-day to criticize him for his action in permitting it to be done. I assume he had reason for so doing. If there have been indiscretions committed in taking seals younger than ought to have been taken, I do not attach the responsibility to him. It has been an error in judgment or an error in purpose on the part of those charged with carrying out the work. I have great respect for the Secretary and admire the candor with which he met the situation when these questions were under consideration. Since that time a warm controversy has been waged between the Bureau of Fisheries and others as to the policy which should be adopted in the future, and this leads us to the question now pending.

We now have to come back to this inquiry: What method shall we adopt to best carry into effect the purposes of the nations in the adoption of this treaty? In answering this question I want to repeat the statement already made, that I am so satisfied with our success in securing a treaty, under the terms of which pelagic sealing is to become a thing of the past, that, if necessary, I would make any sacrifice of personal views as to the policy to be adopted to secure the maintenance of these treaty obligations and to make them effective.

On the other hand, I never have wavered in the opinion that a closed season for some fixed period would be the very best policy for the United States, the very best policy for Great Britain, and the very best policy for the two other nations who are parties to this agreement. If they were willing, I would favor even a longer closed period than I have suggested, and think it would ultimately prove better for all. But because it is suggested that some of the parties to the treaty are restive, I am willing to sacrifice my individual judgment and favor a shorter closed period.

I think under the terms of the treaty we have a perfect right, if in our judgment it is necessary, either for the preservation of the life of the herd or to increase the number, to ordain a closed season. On the other hand, I would go to the outside limit of courtesy to those nations if they think they do not want to wait until the end of 10 years before receiving their distributive share, although I believe they would greatly profit by larger income which they would receive at the end of that time.

When we made our report——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Just a moment, and I will yield. When we made our recommendations to the department, accompanied by the memoranda before referred to, we were of the opinion, and so expressed it, that in 10 years the herd would be so rehabilitated that we would be able to kill about 60,000 annually, which would provide a very handsome revenue for all the countries parties to the treaty. I think so now. But, on the other hand, as I have said, if the other nations are sensitive about it and do not want a closed season for 10 years, I will accept a shorter period.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In view of the intimation of the Senator as to the attitude of other nations with respect to the closed season, I wish to call attention to the fact that the treaty, by express provision, contemplates the inauguration of a closed season, and provides that in that event the United States shall pay to Great Britain and to Japan each the sum of $10,000 annually in lieu of any share of skins during the years when no killing is allowed.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. What I intended to say was, substantially, that if such foreign nations, without the knowledge of the situation which we think we have here to-day, think it would not be right for us to maintain a longer closed season, I should be willing to accept a shorter period.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If we exercise the right to have a closed season, the measure of damages is fixed at $10,000 a year.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think if the necessity appears to us to do this, we have the authority.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the first clause which has been read there occurs the phrase "if necessary." In the second clause it does not. It not only expressly contemplates a closed season, but it fixes the measure of damages to Japan and Great Britain in the event we do have a closed season. This is the clause to which I refer. It goes on to talk about 15 per cent of the killing, and then says:

Unless the killing of seals in such year or years shall have been absolutely prohibited by the United States for all purposes except to supply food, clothing, and boat skins for the natives on the islands, in which case the United States agrees to pay to Great Britain and to Japan each the sum of $10,000 annually in lieu of any share of skins during the years when no killing is allowed.

Taking the place of the 15 per cent. In other words, they agree upon the identical measure of damages. The argument of the Senator from New York was that the nations would be damaged by not allowing any killing at all. They contemplated that and provided that in that event, they would take $10,000 a year apiece in lieu of the 15 per cent.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think the Senator is right in his construction of the treaty, but my thought has been that if we have a longer closed season their profit would be so much larger at the end of the season that it would pay them to wait.

But if they are restive under this proposition, I would exercise the greatest courtesy toward them, particularly as the United States is acting as trustee for others; and with that thought in view my purpose is when the proper time comes to offer an amendment reducing the length of the closed season recommended by the committee from 10 to 5 years, in the hope that that may be a ground upon which those holding different views, who are all equally anxious to do what is right toward all the parties, may agree.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I yield the floor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I notice the intimation on the part of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] that he proposes to offer an amendment reducing the closed season from 10 to 5 years, and I want to suggest to him that if he sincerely desires, as I have no doubt he does, to secure a 5-year period, in view of the condition of the bill as it came from the House, it would certainly be wiser to adopt the amendment reported favorably by the Senate committee, so as to leave an opportunity for the conferees to get together on some such period as five or six years.

Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has read a few lines from the monograph of Mr. Elliott, published some 40 years ago, and conveyed the idea by that that fighting between the male seals occurs after the females have arrived, I desire to read something from that same monograph which shows that he has not in his brief extract conveyed the correct impression of what Elliott set forth. I will not take up the time remaining here to read all of the paragraph, which is very interesting, but he says:

Many of those bulls exhibit wonderful strength and desperate courage. I marked one veteran at Gorbatch, who was the first to take up his position early in May, and that position, as usual, directly at the water line. This male seal had fought at least 40 or 50 desperate battles and fought off his assailants every time—perhaps nearly as many different seals which coveted his position—and when the fighting season was over—after the cows are mostly all hauled up—I saw him still there, covered with scars and frightfully gashed; raw, festering, and bloody, one eye gouged out, but lording it bravely over his harem of 15 or 20 females, who were all huddled together on the same spot of his first location and around him.

I say without any fear of contradiction that no man who has been upon the islands from the time the seals arrived till the close has stated or will state that the fighting between the bulls continues after the females arrive and give birth to their young. The fighting is all over then. The fighting is for possession of a spot upon the breeding grounds, and after that is secured and the females arrive—several weeks after the bulls—peace prevails absolutely; and it is the same as in a well-regulated city—each man is master of his own house.

This much for the statement that it is desired to prevent the destruction of the seal herd by cutting off the lives of these bulls. There is nothing in it. Left to itself the herd will increase, and it always has increased. The Russian experience from 1834 to 1844 demonstrated it. If we can have a closed season of 10 years, or even 8 years, or possibly even 6 years, the herd will restore itself by those provisions of nature which alone can bring about a restoration.

I think the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] has very thoroughly covered the issue as to whether or not we are entitled under this treaty to put a stop to the killing of seals upon those islands. The very purpose of the treaty was to permit the herd not only to be preserved but to be increased; and it was specifically stated in article 10 that the United States should have the right to put a stop to all killing, not for the purpose of protecting the herd, but for the purpose of increasing it. We are under no obligations to any of these countries, either Japan or Russia or England, to demonstrate to them that there is any necessity for doing this. It is a matter for us to judge, and we can judge by the testimony we have. That testimony is that at the present time the herd is so depleted that in order to get 12,000 in 1910 it was necessary to kill nearly 8,000 yearlings—the best possible testimony that the herd is in a depleted condition.

It may not be exactly proper or the necessary thing to do to refer to it, but I think it is a deplorable fact that our State Department neglected as long as it did to bring about the negotiation of a treaty between these countries to put a stop to pelagic sealing. I believe if Secretary Hay had lived such a treaty would have been negotiated.

I have here before me extracts from the Toronto Globe, published in February, 1908, which set forth a speech delivered by the Hon. Mr. Scott, then secretary of state in Canada. Now, mark you, this was in 1908, several years before this present treaty was carried out, and Mr. Scott is quoted as follows:

Hon. Mr. Scott said that Canada was ready to take the matter up whenever there was a proposition from the United States. There had been no such proposal up to the present. His remarks were inspired by the existing conditions of the sealeries, which did not reflect favorably on the intelligence of the nations interested. Unless nations like Russia, Japan, the United States, and Canada could agree upon a policy of protection there would be no seals within 10 years. Canada was quite willing to do her share and be a party to any arrangement that will protect seal life and preserve all the seals but males.

Mr. President, I do not care to go into the matter further. In fact, there is no time. But I believe it is a fact that our State Department was negligent in not earlier bringing the matter to the attention of and making a definite proposal to the British Government. I believe that failure was due to the premature death of Secretary Hay, and I believe if the State Department had carried out the plans which he had, we would have had this treaty in force a number of years ago.

That representations of an unofficial character have been made at Washington from Japan and Russia or from Great Britain that the closed season of 10 years would not be favorably regarded, is a matter of which the Senate of the United States certainly can not take cognizance. No official representations have been made, and, as far as I am concerned, I do not know unofficial representations could have been made. If we adopt this amendment, recommended by the committee for a period of 10 years, there will still be time for those nations interested, after a period of one or two or three or four or five years, if they desire to do so, to make not unofficial representations to certain Members of the Senate or others, but there will be time for them to make official representations to the United States, and then it will be time enough for the Congress of the United States to modify the law. But until they do so I think we can assume, as has been said upon the floor of the Senate this afternoon, that Japan and Great Britain and Russia have the same interest that the United States has in the development and increase of this valuable industry.

Mr. President, I am advised that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] desires some time. The hour for a vote is about at hand, and I will therefore conclude.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is very kind.

I yesterday made certain statements in regard to when the seal fisheries came under the Fish Commissioner, and those statements were questioned. The Fish Commissioner, Mr. Bowers, was also very severely reflected upon. He has addressed to me a letter, which I think in justice to him should be read so that his side may appear in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
BUREAU OF FISHERIES,
Washington, August 15, 1912.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate.

SIR: In the discussion in the Senate yesterday of the bill giving effect to the fur-seal convention between the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia, Mr. HITCHCOCK, of Nebraska, makes a number of wholly erroneous statements, having for their purpose an attempt to connect me with the affairs of the North American Commercial Co. and to show that I have not been in favor of the preservation of the seal herd. He has depended for his information not on the easily obtained official records but on spurious data presumably furnished by a notorious falsifier of records. The charge that since 1903 I have been lobbying against the protection of the seal herd is absolutely false. My relations with the fur-seal service date from January 2, 1909, when the Bureau of Fisheries assumed control of the seal islands. The only lobbying I have done has been during the present year in the interests of the bill giving effect to the fur-seal treaty, which owes its existence largely to the initiative of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

It is a matter of official record that the transfer of the fur-seal service to the Department of Commerce and Labor and to the Bureau of Fisheries was strongly opposed by the North American Commercial Co., but was insisted on by President Roosevelt. During the single season when I had any relations with the lessees of the seal islands, there was a small and restricted take of sealskins in strict conformity with the law and regulations. Any statement to the contrary, from whatever source, is false.

The charge that the protection and preservation of the fur-seal herd have not been and are not sought by the Department of Commerce and Labor, the Bureau of Fisheries, or the Commissioner of Fisheries can not be based on any reliable evidence. The one object that has been continually in view has been the restoration and increase of the seal herd, and to this end the department has had the counsel of every fur-seal authority and expert in the United States, with one doubtful exception. Language can hardly be more direct or emphatic than the following extract from my report to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year 1909:

"The fur-seal service has come under the jurisdiction of the bureau at a time when the condition of the seal herd is worse than ever before, when the outlook is most discouraging, and when the contract for the lease of the islands for a period of 20 years must, under the law, be renewed. Under the existing circumstances the value of the franchise is greatly diminished, large financial losses may be sustained by the Government, and the perpetuity of the herd is seriously menaced. For many years the precarious condition of the fur-seal herd has been constantly brought to the attention of the Government by various persons well qualified to present the matter, and every authority has forcefully pointed out the immediate necessity of the Government's concluding some arrangement by which the slaughter of seals when away from the islands in search of food should be prevented. The net outcome of the work, arguments, recommendations, and pleas of a long procession of special commissioners, experts, and agents has been (1) the passage of a law by which American fishermen are prohibited from engaging in pelagic sealing while fishermen of all other nationalities are permitted to do so, and (2) the steady and rapid decimation of the herd, which has occurred entirely independently of the legitimate operations on the islands.

"If pelagic sealing could have been stopped in 1897, the seal herd to-day would contain 300,000 breeding cows (as against 50,000, the number for the season of 1909), and the product of the hauling grounds would have risen to 50,000 skins, yielding a Government revenue of $500,000, as against less than 15,000 skins and a Government revenue of $143,000 for the present year. Without the drain of pelagic sealing the herd would continue to increase almost indefinitely.

"The Alaskan fur seals constitute the most valuable fishery resource that any Government in the world ever possessed. It is little less than a national disgrace that the herd of four to six million seals which came into our possession when Alaska was acquired from Russia and has been under our charge ever since should have been allowed to dwindle until to-day it numbers less than 150,000 of all ages. The mildest way in which to characterize the dissipation of this great source of wealth to our people and of revenue to our Government is that it is a serious indictment of our business capacity. The extent of our loss may be partially seen when it is stated that the failure to maintain the seal herd has during the last 13 years resulted in a net loss of revenue of not less than $1,600,000, has permitted nearly 300,000 fur seals, having a market value of over $5,700,000, to be appropriated by aliens, and has encouraged those nefarious pelagic operations by which additional fur seals having a value of at least $5,000,000 have been killed at sea but not recovered; while through the slaughter of breeding females their pups—on the islands, unborn, and prospective—with a potential value of fully $20,000,000, have been sacrificed and wasted.

"It is most essential to the interests of this Government and the welfare of the fur-seal herd that appropriate action be taken at once looking to the prohibition of pelagic sealing by subjects of the countries most concerned; and recommendations to this end already submitted to the department are now renewed and strongly urged."

I inclose a memorandum giving an outline of our relations with the fur-seal service and the North American Commercial Co.

Respectfully, yours,

GEO. M. BOWERS, Commissioner.

Memorandum showing the relations of the Department of Commerce and Labor, the Bureau of Fisheries, and the present Commissioner of Fisheries with the North American Commercial Co., lessees of the seal islands.

Lease of the North American Commercial Co. began May 1, 1890, and expired April 30, 1910.

Fur-seal service transferred to the Department of Commerce and Labor, July 1, 1903.

Fur-seal service placed under custody of Bureau of Fisheries, Department of Commerce and Labor, December 28, 1908.

Present Commissioner of Fisheries appointed, February 16, 1898.

Period of time the operations of the North American Commercial Co. were concurrent with the custody of the Bureau of Fisheries and the term of the present Commissioner of Fisheries, one and one-third years.

Number of sealing seasons covered by this period, one.

Number of surplus male seals killed by the lessees during that season, 14,336.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, but a moment remains. I only desire to say that my one wish—and I believe that of every other Senator—is to do what is best for the preservation of the seal herd. Whether the closed season is placed at 1, 3, 5, 8, or 10 years, if it is not found that the herd is increasing it can easily be extended by law. But we can not overlook the fact that to do so without trial is regarded by other nations as a virtual infringement of the spirit of the treaty, and I believe that better than all arbitration treaties for the preservation of the world's peace is a strict observance of the obligations of treaties that exist. It seems to me that what we can do best for the preservation of these seals is to see to it that those treaties are not lost. We are already in default on the payment of the money. Let us maintain those treaties both in letter and in spirit, and then we shall be able to make them permanent and preserve for all time, I hope, the seal herd.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (at 4 o'clock p. m.). The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the amendment of the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont did not offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I understood that he had offered it.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest that the amendment for the longest time be put first.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment is in order to strike out "ten" and insert "five."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Crawford	McCumber	Shively
Bacon	Culberson	McLean	Simmons
Bailey	Cullom	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Curtis	Massey	Smith, Md.
Bourne	Dillingham	Myers	Smith, Mich.
Bradley	Fall	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Fletcher	Oliver	Smoot
Bristow	Gallinger	Overman	Stone
Bryan	Hitchcock	Page	Sutherland
Burnham	Johnson, Me.	Penrose	Thornton
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Townsend
Chilton	Kenyon	Pomerene	Warren
Clapp	Lippitt	Root	Williams
Crane	Lodge	Sanders	Works

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I move, on page 10, line 10, in the amendment of the committee, before the word "years," that the word "ten" be stricken out and "five" inserted. I will make the same motion to amend as to the word "ten" before "years," in line 22, if this is adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 10, before the word "years," strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu the word "five," so that if amended it will read:

Shall be suspended for a period of five years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BANKHEAD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], and withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when Mr. JONES's name was called). The senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], which I transfer to the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE]. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MASSEY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I understand if he were present, he would vote "nay." I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I do not know how he would vote, but I think I can safely transfer my pair, which I do, to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and vote "yea."

Mr. BRANDEGEE (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted, but I notice that the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] did not vote. So I withdraw my vote. I have a pair with that Senator.

Mr. SHIVELY. My colleague [Mr. KERN] is unavoidably absent from the city. He is paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. THORNTON. I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. LIPPITT. I announce that my colleague [Mr. WETMORE] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. DU PONT. I announce that my colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] is absent and is paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—27.

Bourne	Dillingham	Lodge	Sanders
Briggs	du Pont	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Chilton	Fall	Oliver	Smoot
Crane	Fletcher	Page	Townsend
Crawford	Gallinger	Perkins	Warren
Cullom	Johnson, Me.	Pomerene	Works
Curtis	Lippitt	Root

NAYS—32.

Ashurst	Clapp	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Bacon	Culberson	Myers	Smith, Md.
Borah	Cummins	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Bristow	Hitchcock	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Johnston, Ala.	Penrose	Stone
Burnham	Kenyon	Poindexter	Thornton
Catron	La Follette	Shively	Tillman
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Williams

NOT VOTING—35.

Bailey	Dixon	Kern	Rayner
Bankhead	Foster	Lea	Reed
Bradley	Gamble	McCumber	Richardson
Brandegee	Gardner	Massey	Stephenson
Brown	Gore	Newlands	Sutherland
Burton	Gronna	O'Gorman	Swanson
Clark, Wyo.	Guggenheim	Owen	Watson
Clarke, Ark.	Heyburn	Paynter	Wetmore
Davis	Jones	Percy

So Mr. DILLINGHAM's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when Mr. JONES's name was called). I again announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. I will state that if he were present he would vote "nay" on this proposition.

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE]. I vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY], and withhold my vote.

Mr. MASSEY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON] and its transfer to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]. I vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I again transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], and on account of his absence withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

I announce these pairs for all votes to-day.

Mr. BRIGGS. I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and vote. I make this announcement for the day. I vote "nay."

Mr. BRANDEGEE (after having voted in the negative). I must withdraw my vote. I notice that the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], with whom I am paired, did not vote.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—42.

Ashurst	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Bacon	Curtis	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Dillingham	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Bristow	Fall	Overman	Smith, Mich.
Bryan	Hitchcock	Page	Smith, S. C.
Burnham	Johnson, Me.	Penrose	Stone
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Thornton
Catron	Kenyon	Poindexter	Williams
Chamberlain	La Follette	Sanders	Works
Clapp	McLean	Shively
Culberson	Martin, Va.	Simmons

NAYS—18.

Bourne	Cullom	Lodge	Tillman
Briggs	du Pont	Oliver	Townsend
Chilton	Fletcher	Pomerene	Warren
Crane	Gallinger	Root
Crawford	Lippitt	Smoot

NOT VOTING—34.

Bailey	Foster	Lea	Reed
Bankhead	Gamble	McCumber	Richardson
Bradley	Gardner	Massey	Stephenson
Brandegee	Gore	Newlands	Sutherland
Brown	Gronna	O'Gorman	Swanson
Clark, Wyo.	Guggenheim	Owen	Watson
Clarke, Ark.	Heyburn	Paynter	Wetmore
Davis	Jones	Percy
Dixon	Kern	Rayner

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. CUMMINS. In accordance with a notice given some days ago, I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 78, being the joint resolution respecting an amendment to the Constitution as to the election of President.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I should like to know whether the joint resolution has been called up. I want to ask the Senator from Iowa to yield to me for the consideration of a joint resolution which will take but a moment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have just moved to take up the joint resolution to which I have referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to be heard on that motion before it is decided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to know what the motion is—whether it is to take up the joint resolution and to dispose of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. The motion is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Which is not a debatable motion.

Mr. CUMMINS. What the Senate will do thereafter depends upon its own will.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to take up the joint resolution named by him. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to have the proposition stated. I did not hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the joint resolution which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] moves be now taken up will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. JONES was called). I again desire to announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] on official business. I desire that this announcement shall stand for the rest of the day.

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE]. I will let the announcement stand for the day. I vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY] and withhold my vote.

Mr. MASSEY (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON], and transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and shall vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], and withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 41, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—41.

Ashurst	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Bacon	Curtis	Myers	Smith, Md.
Bourne	Dillingham	Nelson	Smoot
Briggs	du Pont	Oliver	Sutherland
Bryan	Fall	Overman	Thornton
Burnham	Fletcher	Page	Tillman
Burton	Johnson, Me.	Penrose	Williams
Chamberlain	Johnston, Ala	Perkins	Works
Chilton	Kenyon	Pomerene
Crane	La Follette	Shively
Culberson	Martin, Va.	Simmons

NAYS—17.

Borah	Cullom	Poindexter	Smith, S. C.
Bristow	Gallinger	Root	Townsend
Catron	Lippitt	Sanders
Clapp	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.
Crawford	McLean	Smith, Mich.

NOT VOTING—36.

Bailey	Foster	Kern	Rayner
Bankhead	Gamble	Lea	Reed
Bradley	Gardner	McCumber	Richardson
Brandegee	Gore	Massey	Stephenson
Brown	Gronna	Newlands	Stone
Clark, Wyo.	Guggenheim	O'Gorman	Swanson
Clarke, Ark.	Heyburn	Owen	Warren
Davis	Hitchcock	Paynter	Watson
Dixon	Jones	Percy	Wetmore

So the motion of Mr. CUMMINS was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have been informed that there are some others who desire to speak upon this joint resolution, but that they are not prepared to proceed this afternoon. I know also the very great anxiety of some Senators that we shall take up the calendar. In view of those circumstances, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BACON. Before that is done I wish to offer an amendment to the joint resolution in order that it may be stated, and then I shall make no objection to the request.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he has any reason for delaying the matter, except that some Senator wants to speak? Is there any other reason?

Mr. CUMMINS. I gave two reasons. One is that there are Senators here who desire to speak and who have told me that they are not ready, and the other is that there is a great desire upon the part of Senators to take up some of the bills on the calendar that are not objected to, and which it is very necessary that we shall pass if they are to be considered by the House. I have yielded to those two considerations. I expect to-morrow to insist upon the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in view of the second reason I shall not object. We are getting pretty near the end of the session now, and I shall object to any unanimous-consent agreement hereafter to postpone business simply upon the ground that some Senator wants to speak and is not ready to do so; but the second request, it seems to me, is a very good one, and I shall not object.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I did not yield the floor——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has not yielded the floor.

Mr. BACON. Though I acquiesced, I simply wish to ask that the amendment which I offer——

Mr. CUMMINS. My request is before the Senate to be dealt with as the Senator desires.

Mr. BACON. I simply wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I withhold the request a moment until the Senator from Georgia may present his amendment.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to offer an amendment, and I will ask the Secretary to take it down. It is on the sixth line on the second page, to strike out the word "six" and to insert the word "four." I do not ask to do anything more now than to have that entered.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to say to the Senator from Iowa—of course I do not know how many Senators have signified their desire to speak—that I had expected to speak on this question, but I shall very cheerfully waive the privilege if a vote can be taken now upon the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa that the joint resolution be laid aside temporarily? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 356) to further continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 1, 1912, entitled "Joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies," to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes that the provisions of a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies," approved July 1, 1912, be further extended and continued in full force and effect for and during the last half of the month of August, 1912.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COOSA RIVER DAM, ALA.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to ask unanimous consent that on Friday morning, being to-morrow, immediately after the routine morning business, the Senate will consider Calendar No. 899, being the bill (S. 7343) to authorize the building of a dam across the Coosa River, Ala., at the place selected for Lock No. 18 on said river.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning with Calendar No. 824.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is that where we left off?

Mr. SMOOT. That is where we left off this morning.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask the Senator from Utah to allow the consideration of Calendar No. 800, instead of starting at 824, which would shut that out. It will provoke no discussion. All the parties who are affected by it are unanimously in favor of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if that be allowed, there are other Senators who will ask that we go back to the beginning of the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is; I object.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not asked——

Mr. CRAWFORD. I object to going down in some other place in the calendar and picking out a bill here and another there.

Mr. SMOOT. I myself objected to that, and asked that we begin with Calendar No. 824.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I object.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning with Calendar No. 824.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bills on the Calendar under Rule VIII, beginning with Order of Business 824. The question is on that motion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is not the point where we left off considering the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. That is where we left off this morning, considering the calendar.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was not here this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I intended in the motion made by me to include only bills to which there is no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DONATION OF FRAME BUILDING.

The bill (H. R. 1248) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey a certain frame building was announced as the first bill in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to convey to Company I, Oklahoma National Guard, the frame building formerly used for the United States land office in Alva, Okla.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN NEW MEXICO.

The bill (H. R. 2875) to provide for the exchange of national forest timber in New Mexico for private lands lying within the exterior limits of the Zuni National Forest was announced as the next business in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN subsequently said: I ask permission of the Senate to return to House bill 2875. I understand the Senator from North Dakota will withdraw his objection. It is a very short bill. I happened to be out of the Chamber, and so did the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will withdraw the objection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANT TO LUTHER BURBANK.

The bill (H. R. 23043) to patent certain semiarid lands to Luther Burbank, under certain conditions, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to hear some good reason why we should, in a special bill, make a special grant of 12 sections of land to Mr. Luther Burbank any more than we should make it to any other individual. I can not understand why, if the purpose is for an investigation, the Agricultural Department can not carry on that investigation. That department is to-day carrying on the same character of investigation, as I understand, in the State of California, and appropriations have been made for that purpose. Why should we single out one individual and make him a present of 12 full sections of land, one-third of a township, if he shall be successful, as I understand, in bringing about certain results?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, to begin with, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] is mistaken in the supposition that we propose to give away this land. The bill simply provides that Mr. Burbank may have the use of the land for his experiment for the term of five years, and if, at the end of that time, he has been successful, he is given the privilege of buying it, at the same price that anybody else would have to pay for it. The provision relates entirely to semiarid land——

Mr. McCUMBER. Could anyone buy that land now for $1.25 an acre? Is it open for sale?

Mr. WORKS. It is nonirrigable, nonagricultural, nonmineral land; in other words, absolutely worthless for any other purpose unless the cacti can be grown upon it, and I think I need not explain to the Senate what has been accomplished by Mr. Burbank in the way of developing what is known as the spineless cacti, which is expected to be the finest of animal food, upon arid lands of this country, and to be grown upon land worthless for any other purpose.

This bill simply allows him the use of the land for the purpose of determining definitely whether that kind of cacti can be successfully raised and successfully used as animal food, and if that is developed it will be a matter of vast importance to this country.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask the Senator from California whether the Committee on Agriculture has not reported favorably on this bill in the interest of agriculture?

Mr. WORKS. The report comes from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WORKS. The matter was very thoroughly investigated there. It has also been investigated by the House committee, and the bill has passed the House and is now here for disposition by the Senate.

It seems to me it is just the sort of effort on the part of Mr. Burbank which Congress ought to encourage; and there is no possibility of the Government losing anything by it, while vast benefits may result from it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And the Government will be saved the expense of this experimental work?

Mr. WORKS. Entirely. It is at his own expense. He is asking nothing from the Government. He can only get the land after he has demonstrated the fact that the land can be used in that way and then by paying the price prescribed in the bill.

Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the Senator from California to explain how Mr. Burbank expects to dispose of the growth on the land; what he expects to do with it? Is it not a fact that Mr. Burbank's cacti business is done by a corporation?

Mr. WORKS. That I do not know, but I think it is entirely immaterial so far as the public interests are concerned.

Mr. FALL. We have tried in New Mexico to get some of the specimens of the spineless cactus for the purpose of propagating it and using it; and we found, so far as our experience has gone—and it has been limited—that it was impossible to secure it, as some one claims to have the right to handle the spineless cactus under propagation by Mr. Burbank; and we can get it only by paying a royalty of so much a year. If that is the truth, I certainly should not favor the passage of a bill giving Mr. Burbank the land.

Mr. WORKS. The proposition is not to give Mr. Burbank the land at all, I will remind the Senator.

Mr. FALL. It grants its use for five years and then there is to be a deed to him, as I understand.

Mr. WORKS. Upon the payment of $2.50 an acre. I do not understand how it can make any difference whether it is a corporation that supplies the money to demonstrate the feasibility of growing the cactus or whether it is done by a private individual. I do not know what the facts are. But certainly it is important that this industry should be developed, if it can be, and there can be no loss to the Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think we ought to understand a little something about this measure before we vote upon it. We ought to know what the investigation has been, what the reports are, what evidence has been taken.

I have been informed by officials of the Agricultural Department that the experimentation which has been carried on by Mr. Burbank has been carried on in connection with the work of the Agricultural Department, and what has been obtained, for the most part—and I understand this includes the spineless cacti—has been accomplished through the efforts of the Agricultural Department in work with Mr. Burbank. If that be true, I do not see, personally, upon any knowledge I have, why we should grant 12 sections of land to a corporation, to be organized by Mr. Burbank, for this purpose, when we have paid for the experimentation, and the results of which should be public property.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHOOL SECTIONS WITHIN RESERVATIONS.

The bill (S. 5068) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange lands for school sections within an Indian, military, national forest, or other reservation, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I simply wish to inquire if this is the bill on that subject which was up for debate in the Senate some months ago?

Mr. WORKS. This bill has never been under debate here at all. It is to be enacted especially in the interest of conditions in California, although some other States are named. Some were omitted because they did not care to be included in the legislation.

The necessity for this bill results from the fact that decisions have been rendered by the Federal courts in California that these transfers can not be made, and it has embarrassed the authorities in California. The Interior Department has always held they could be made. The bill is only for the purpose of removing that uncertainty.

Mr. BACON. I had no reference to the particular bill as the Senator now describes it, but thought it was another bill, which had in it some features of this kind to which I did object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments proposed by the Committee on Public Lands will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 4, after the word "authorized," to insert "in his discretion"; on page 2, line 6, after the word "hereafter," to strike out "made" and insert "approved"; in line 7, after the word "land," to strike out "upon approval of such exchange"; and in line 9, after the word "State," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That upon completion of the exchange the lands relinquished, reconveyed, or assigned as base lands shall immediately become a part of the reservation within which they are situate, and in case the same shall be found within the exterior limits of more than one reservation they shall become a part of that reservation which was first established: Provided further, That this act shall not be construed to authorize the approval of selections embracing lands withdrawn as mineral under the act of June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawals of public lands in certain cases" (36 Stat. L., 847–848) until such lands have been found to be nonmineral and for that reason restored, but nothing herein contained shall prevent a limited approval when the lands are within only a coal withdrawal, excluding from the approval coal deposits: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the State of Idaho.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to make exchange of lands with the several States for those portions of the lands granted in aid of common schools, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, which lie within the exterior limits of any Indian, military, national forest, or other reservation, the said exchange to be made in the manner and form and subject to the limitations and conditions of sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes as amended by act of February 28, 1891 (26 Stat., 796), and any such exchange whether heretofore or hereafter approved shall restore full title in the United States to the base land without formal conveyance thereof by the State: Provided, That upon completion of the exchange, etc.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY BEAL.

The bill (H. R. 4512) for the relief of Mary Beal was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Mary Beal, of Portsmouth, Va., $1,000 for injuries sustained by her while in charge of laundry work in the United States Navy Hospital at Portsmouth, Va.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to ask what are the provisions of the unanimous-consent agreement under which we are operating? Does it cover only unobjected bills?

Mr. SMOOT. That was the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unobjected bills under Rule VIII.

EASTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE.

The bill (S. 7252) to amend section 107 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, the bill (H. R. 25520) to amend section 107 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, which is identical with the bill the title of which has just been announced, was received some days ago from the House and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee having reported an identical Senate bill for this purpose, I move that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the House bill, and that it be put upon its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 25520) to amend section 107 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SANDERS. I move that the Senate bill 7252 on the same subject be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

FORT COVINGTON, N. Y.

The bill (H. R. 21963) to make Fort Covington, N. Y., a subport of entry was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SULPHUR SPRINGS, TEX.

The bill (H. R. 11149) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the city of Sulphur Springs, Tex., certain land for street purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUREAU OF MINES.

The bill (H. R. 17260) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish in the Department of the Interior a Bureau of Mines," approved May 16, 1910, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

E. ROSENWALD & BRO.

The bill (H. R. 20124) for the relief of E. Rosenwald & Bro. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to E. Rosenwald & Bro. $4,922.85 unlawfully collected from E. Rosenwald & Bro. upon an entry covering 186 bales of unstemmed wrapper tobacco, made upon June 1, 1909, and liquidated upon October 4, 1909.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE IN INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

The bill (S. 4043) to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors in certain cases was announced as next in order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Let the bill go over.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to inquire if it is in order to try and get unanimous consent for that bill for the next session. I think it is a very important measure, and I realize that it will involve a great deal of discussion. There will probably be no opportunity to pass it at the present session, but it is a bill of such importance that I think there should be unanimous consent given to take it up and make it the unfinished business at a date fixed in the next session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement that can not be done. The bill goes over under objection.

Mr. KENYON. Then I ask that it be made the special order for December 12.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that under the unanimous-consent agreement no consent of that kind can be entertained.

Mr. KENYON. A parliamentary inquiry. Is no motion of any kind in order to take it up?

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask if the parliamentary status is not this: The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] moved to proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning at a certain number. The Senator from Iowa is entitled, I think, to move to take up the bill notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. SMOOT. The motion was to consider under Rule VIII bills on the calendar to which there was no objection.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think not.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will remember that the first request was to proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII. Then there was some discussion, and after that I said it was understood that it would apply to bills to which there would be no objection, and the RECORD will so show.

Mr. CULBERSON. We are proceeding under unanimous consent, as I understand it, to take up the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning at a certain number, and the Senator from Iowa is entitled under Rule VIII to move to take up the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that the unanimous-consent agreement was coupled with the agreement that only unobjected bills should be considered.

Mr. BACON. Is it not true that it was on motion that the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was.

Mr. BACON. Not by unanimous consent, but on motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was a motion.

Mr. BACON. I may be in error, and of course I yield to a recollection of the Chair if he differs from me, but I think a reference to the reporter's notes will show that the Chair put the question upon the motion whether we should proceed to the calendar under Rule VIII. I think the reporter's notes will show that. I may be in error, but I suggest that as my recollection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has a very distinct recollection of the fact that coupled with the motion was the suggestion that unobjected cases only should be considered. The Chair is clear in that view. The Secretary will proceed with the calendar.

SANTIAM NATIONAL FOREST.

The bill (S. 7237) to reserve certain lands and to incorporate the same and make them a part of the Santiam National Forest was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that that bill may go over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

IMPORTATION OF NURSERY STOCK.

The bill (H. R. 24119) to regulate the importation of nursery stock and other plants and plant products; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts for plant diseases and insect pests; to permit and regulate the movement of fruits, plants, and vegetables therefrom, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The bill has been read.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the bill has been already read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read twice, and unless a request is made the reading will be dispensed with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BACON. I should like to hear the bill read if it is not too long. Without the bill being read, the Senator from Oregon may state its purpose.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I can state that the bill was reported from the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry after a hearing on it. It was recommitted to the committee and made to conform to the objections of one of the Senators to the bill. A similar bill was pending in the House, where they had hearings, and the House bill was made to conform exactly to the second bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The bill has received attentive consideration.

Mr. BACON. It is simply providing against infected stock?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Against the importation of infected stock.

Mr. BACON. Then I have no objection to it.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRED WHITE.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) for the relief of Fred White was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that there was a mistake in the acceptance by the officials of the land office at Lewiston, Idaho, of the homestead application of Fred White, who located upon land included within the Nez Perce Indian Reservation and made improvements thereon to the extent of $1,500 before the mistake was discovered.

The joint resolution proposes to pay to Fred White, of Kooskia, Idaho, $600.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

PECOS NATIONAL GAME REFUGE.

The bill (S. 6942) to establish the Pecos National Game Refuge, in the State of New Mexico, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. FALL. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over under objection.

Mr. FALL subsequently said: I withdraw my objection to the consideration of Senate bill 6942.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOE COOK.

The bill (H. R. 25060) for the relief of Joe Cook was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $422.25 to Joe Cook, of Manhattan, Nev., found and held to be due him by the Secretary of Agriculture under contract of February 8, 1911, for the construction of a rangers' headquarters on the Toiyabe National Forest Reserve, Kingston Canyon, Nev.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK WENZEL.

The bill (H. R. 16621) for the indemnification of Frank Wenzel was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Frank Wenzel, former employee of the Treasury Department, the sum of $750, to indemnify him for permanent personal injuries received by him December 6, 1895, by reason of the defective condition and management of the passenger elevator in the Government building in the city of Toledo, county of Lucas, and State of Ohio.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M. OAK.

The bill (H. R. 17709) for the relief of John M. Oak was announced as next in order, and the Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of John M. Oak, postmaster at Bangor, Me., in the sum of $132,311.12, due to the United States on account of postal funds, key-deposit funds, money-order funds, postage stamps, and other stamped paper on account of losses resulting from fire April 30, 1911.

Mr. CULBERSON. Did the Secretary read the amount at $132,000? If the amount is so large, I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I hope the Senator from Texas will not make that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the amount named in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I hope the Senator from Texas will withdraw his objection. This bill seems to be for a large sum; $90,000 was for stock in the post office at Bangor, Me., which was destroyed in a disastrous fire about a year ago. An examination by the Post Office Department discloses the fact that he should be credited with the sum of $132,000, mentioned in the bill as the amount lost in that fire, and for which he was in no way responsible. The payment of this sum is recommended by the department and also by the Committee on Claims.

I therefore hope that the Senator from Texas will withdraw his objection.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to state to the Senator from Texas that this is the amount which the department, after accounting, has found was destroyed by the fire. The whole business portion of Bangor, Me., was destroyed—the post-office building, among other business buildings—and the postmaster lost this much by the fire.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is this a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. BRISTOW. Of the committee, and based on the findings of the department. It was thoroughly examined.

Mr. CULBERSON. I withdraw the objection to its consideration.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOURTEENTH STREET NE., DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 22648) to authorize a change in the location of Fourteenth Street NE., in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 21524) for the relief of Frederick H. Ferris was announced as next in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 6812) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the allotments of land in severalty," etc., approved February 28, 1891, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] were present, he would object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection has been made

Mr. ASHURST. I beg pardon, but I should like to finish my statement. I desire to say that if the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] were present, he would object to the bill, and I promised him, even though it was my own bill, that I would object to its consideration in his absence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over on objection.

The next business on the calendar was Senate resolution 362, for an investigation into the expenditures of the Forest Service and the appointment of a committee for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over.

The next business on the calendar was Senate resolution 365, authorizing the Committee on the Library to employ a stenographer to report hearings on bills or other matters pending before the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over.

ALLEN EDWARD O'TOOLE.

The bill (S. 324) for the relief of Allen Edward O'Toole and others, who sustained damage by reason of accident at Rock Island Arsenal, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 10, after the name "Allen Edward O'Toole," to strike out "$1,666.67" and insert "$500"; at the top of page 2, to strike out "$1,666.67" and insert "$500"; and, in line 2, after the name "Clifford O'Toole," to strike out "$1,666.66" and insert "$500," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the relief of Allen Edward O'Toole, Bessie O'Toole, and Clifford O'Toole, whose father, Edward O'Toole, was fatally injured by an accident at the Rock Island Arsenal, February 24, 1905, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums, namely: To Allen Edward O'Toole, $500; to Bessie O'Toole, $500; to Clifford O'Toole, $500: Provided, That in case any of the beneficiaries herein named are minors the amount appropriated shall be paid to his or her duly appointed guardian.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 22913) to create a department of labor was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 7089) to remove the charge of desertion against Charlie Meyers was announced as next in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2058) for the relief of William Wentworth was announced as next in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let that go over also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 25304) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 24602) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "fifty," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Frank E. Lyman, jr., late first lieutenant, Signal Corps, United States Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to inquire why that pension is increased to $50 per month.

Mr. McCUMBER. The reasons are set forth in the report.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know that; but I have not had time to read the report. Why should this pension be increased more than others?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not a member of the committee, but I know about that man.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have the report here, if the Senator desires to have it read.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I merely want a statement of the facts; that is all.

Mr. McCUMBER. They are quite lengthy, but I can give them.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Iowa knows the facts.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, Mr. Lyman was an officer in the Signal Corps in the Spanish War. He incurred disabilities which have resulted in the entire destruction of his health and strength. Practically he is not able to do anything. He was examined once for promotion, but on account of the condition in which the service had left him it was impossible for him to secure it, and therefore he resigned, as I remember, or received a discharge on account of his condition.

Mr. OVERMAN. On account of injuries received in the service during the Spanish War?

Mr. CUMMINS. His disabilities are due to exposure in the service.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Are they clearly of service origin?

Mr. CUMMINS. I knew him before he went to the war, and he was one of the strongest and most capable young men we had in our community. He is now a wreck on account of the work that he did for his country during that war. He is a man who was earning a very considerable salary at that time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question before the other items are passed upon. Are these cases where injuries were of service origin?

Mr. McCUMBER. It was held upon further examination that they were of service origin.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. These Spanish-American War pensions are all based upon injuries in service origin?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 12, before the word "mother," to insert "dependent," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Eliza T. Henderson, dependent mother of Jesse H. Henderson, late of Company C, Forty-first Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 24996) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment was, at the top of page 2, to strike out:

The name of Elizabeth L. Bayless, widow of James M. Bayless, late of Troop E, Eighth Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, with an additional allowance of $2 per month on account of each of four minor children of the soldier until they, respectively, reach the age of 16 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 15, after the words "late of," to strike out "the" and insert "U. S. S. Benicia," so as to make the clause read:

The name of John H. Brogan, late of U. S. S. Benicia, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 24796) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 24322) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 1, after line 5, to strike out:

The name of Anna J. Meilstrup, dependent mother of Elmer M. Meilstrup, late ordinary seaman, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 7, to strike out:

The name of John H. Brown, late of the U. S. S. Worden, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 3, to strike out:

The name of George C. Rimes, late of Company E, Thirty-fifth Regiment, United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 4, to strike out:

The name of William Ramsey, late of Troop B, United States Mounted Riflemen, War with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILTON. I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the report, and I think it is a mistake. The House report was very conclusive on the subject. I think, and from other investigations which I have made I feel justified in asking the chairman of the committee not to insist upon the committee amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. This is one of the cases in which the House report is rather meager, but the evidence which the Senator from West Virginia has since given to the committee justifies me in consenting, so far as I am concerned, that the amendment of the committee shall be rejected.

The name of Margaret E. Carrick, former widow of Daniel Fisher, jr., late of Company I, One hundred and forty-fifth Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, and widow of Charles W. Carrick, late of Company G, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, after line 12, to strike out:

The name of Mary E. Sprayberry, widow of Jerry D. Sprayberry, late of Company B, Tenth Regiment, and Company G, Second Regiment, Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 20, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Mary H. Atkinson, widow of John M. Atkinson, late of Company B, Fourteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 23, before the word "Volunteer," to strike out "Mounted," and in the same line, after the word "Infantry," to insert "Mounted," so as to make the clause read:

The name of John Howell, late of Company H, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 25, line 17, I move to strike out the letter "D," where it appears as designating the company, and in lieu thereof to insert "I," so as to read "Company I" and not "D."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

NORTH DAKOTA AVENUE.

The bill (S. 7165) to authorize the elimination of part of North Dakota Avenue from the permanent system of highways plan was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL HISTORY SOCIETY.

The bill (H. R. 24026) to incorporate the Naval History Society was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADULTERATED SEEDS, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 22340) to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated seeds and seeds unfit for seeding purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRIGGS. Let the bill go over.

Mr. LODGE. There are some differences in regard to one of the provisions in the bill, and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] before he left the Senate told me he would not wish to ask to take it up before the next session of Congress.

So I ask, in order to avoid its being taken up in the absence of those interested in it, that it be passed over under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over under Rule IX.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS ENLISTED UNDER ASSUMED NAMES.

The bill (H. R. 13566) for the relief of soldiers and sailors who enlisted or served under assumed names, while minors or otherwise, in the Army or Navy of the United States during any war with any foreign nation or people was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretaries of War and Navy to issue certificates of discharge or orders of acceptance of resignation, upon application and proof of identity, in the true name of such persons as enlisted or served under assumed names, while minors or otherwise, in the Army or Navy during any war between the United States and any other nation or people and were honorably discharged therefrom.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF GRAIN.

The bill (S. 223) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURTON. I ask that the bill go over. There is in my own State very strenuous objection to that measure. I should like to know if there is any desire to bring it up at this session.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is very much interested in that bill, and his colleague also. It is a bill which will provoke a great deal of discussion. My own judgment is it is hardly worth while to attempt to do anything with it at this session.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like very much to have the bill disposed of at this session, and if there was any chance to have it considered at this session, I should certainly ask for its consideration. I am, however, very doubtful whether we can reach it under the present condition of appropriation bills.

Mr. LODGE. There is much opposition to the bill from my own State.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I also want to protest against that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The bill (S. 6100) appropriating $100,000 for the use of the Interstate Commerce Commission in addition to the sum or sums already appropriated for their use was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. CUMMINS. That bill——

Mr. OVERMAN. Does not the Senator think the bill ought to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. CUMMINS. The bill was reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I do not intend to call it up at this session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CLASSIFICATION OF FREIGHT.

The bill (S. 6099) to amend section 15 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended June 29, 1906, and June 18, 1910, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. CUMMINS. The bill, the title of which has just been read, is, by unanimous consent, to be taken up at 4 o'clock to-morrow. I am perfectly willing to take it up now. It does not make any difference to me——

Mr. McCUMBER. Let it go over.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it will have to go over under the unanimous-consent agreement.

LIMIT OF VISITATORIAL POWERS.

The bill (H. R. 24153) to amend and reenact section 5241 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Lee the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ANNA LAGUEE.

The bill (S. 2637) for the relief of Anna Laguee was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "one," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Anna Laguee, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, in full settlement of her claim against the Government of the United States for personal injuries sustained growing out of work of the Forest Service in the construction of a telephone line from Chelan to Stehek, in Chelan County, Wash.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOULDER AND CANON CITY, COLO.

The bill (H. R. 19339) granting public lands to the cities of Boulder and Canon City, in the State of Colorado, for public park purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN NEBRASKA HOMESTEADERS.

The bill (H. R. 20498) for the relief of certain homesteaders in Nebraska was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the qualifications of a former homestead entryman who has heretofore been permitted to make an additional or another entry under the act entitled "An act to amend the homestead laws as to certain unappropriated and unreserved public lands in Nebraska," approved April 28, 1904, shall be determined by the qualifications, except as to citizenship, possessed on the date of his first entry in all cases where the rights of third persons shall not have intervened and the additional or second entry has not been canceled.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

JOHN JOHNSON.

The bill (H. R. 14333) for the relief of John Johnson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to John Johnson $1,000 for permanent injuries sustained by him at White Shoals Light Station, Lake Michigan, on June 29, 1909.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM S. M'COLLAM.

The bill (S. 5775) for the relief of William S. McCollam was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to William S. McCollam, late gunnery sergeant, United States Marine Corps, $850 extra-duty pay.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PEARL HARBOR TRACTION CO., HAWAII.

The bill (S. 7377) granting a right of way through the Fort Shafter Military Reservation, Territory of Hawaii, to the Pearl Harbor Traction Co. (Ltd.), and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill as section 3 the following:

SEC. 3. That the powers herein granted are limited to a period of 50 years, unless sooner altered, amended, or repealed by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LESTER A. ROCKWELL.

The bill (S. 6655) for the relief of Lester A. Rockwell was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the pension laws and laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Lester A. Rockwell, who was a private of Company G, First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 29th day of April, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

The bill (H. R. 23451) to pay certain employees of the Government for injuries received while in the discharge of their duties, and other claims for damages to and loss of private property, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask that the formal reading be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the committee be acted upon as they are reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The first amendment of the Committee on Claims was, on page 1, line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-nine thousand six hundred and three" and insert "fifteen thousand eight hundred and sixty-three," so as to make the clause read:

That $15,863.98 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay certain employees of the United States Government for personal injuries received while in discharge of their duties, without any fault on their part, and to pay certain other claims for damages to, and loss of private property by, the various departments of the Government, as hereinafter stated, the same being in full, and the receipt of the same being taken in each case as full and final release and discharge of the respective claims.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask that the first amendment of the committee be passed over, because the total there will have to be changed on account of some amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment will be passed over and the next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

To pay $1,000 to Elizabeth Riley, widow of Edward M. Riley, who was killed while in the discharge of his duties in the United States post office in the city of New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 22, to strike out:

To pay $52.50 to Albert W. Phelps for loss of time and injuries received in the United States armory at Springfield, Mass.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 1, after the word "pay," to strike out "eight hundred and ninety-six dollars and eighty-five cents" and insert "five hundred dollars," so as to make the clause read:

To pay $500 to Peter W. Wigginton for the crushing of his ankle joint while in the discharge of his duty on the Isthmus of Panama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will ask in the next two cases that the amendment be not agreed to. They were amendments made with the idea of putting the matter into conference, but since the subcommittee passed upon it I have received some documents which make it entirely proper, when they are compared with the other claims, that they should remain just as they are.

Mr. OVERMAN. Those are the cases where the committee did not have proper evidence.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes. So I ask that in those two cases the amendment be not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 14, to strike out:

To pay $1,500 to Charles T. Hanson for loss of his right foot while in the employ of the War Department in the Quartermaster's Department, at Boston, Mass.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 3, to strike out lines 19 to 21, inclusive, in the following words:

To pay $1,500 to Emil Spongberg as compensation for loss of his left leg while in discharge of his duties at the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one thousand" and insert "five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

To pay $500 to D. M. Rowland, father of Robert Blain Rowland, late a seaman of the United States Navy, who was killed in the discharge of his duty in the Manila Harbor during target practice.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "four hundred and thirty-eight" and insert "two hundred," so as to make the clause read:

To pay $200 to E. J. Older for injuries received to his left leg in the discharge of his duty in the improvement of the Mississippi River, under the War Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 11, to strike out the following, down to and including line 11 on page 8:

To pay $5,000 to C. H. Ingraham for damages to his property at Fort Baldwin, Me., by heavy gun firing.

To pay Pennsylvania Engineering Co., of the city of Philadelphia, $1,079.60 for extra work under the Department of Agriculture.

To pay $46.15 to Mrs. Charles H. Benson, of San Antonio, Tex., for damages to her phaeton by United States Field Artillery.

To pay $75 to Henry Fink for the loss of a horse killed by United States soldiers while at target practice at Leon Springs, Tex.

To pay $15 to Andrew Blank for damages to fences during Army maneuvers at Leon Springs, Tex.

To pay $15 to Hermann Boges and Henry Eikman for damages to fences by United States soldiers at Leon Springs, Tex.

To pay $149.50 to the legal representatives of Robert B. Pearce, amount due him for carrying the mail from Fulton to Rocky Comfort, Ark.

To pay $434.30 to William A. Avis, New York City, amount of duty incorrectly collected on importation of wild celery seed.

To pay $838.40 to the owners of the schooner Dorothy B. Barrett for damages to said schooner by the U. S. S. Mayrant.

To pay $2,427.88 to J. Kennard and Sons' Carpet Co., St. Louis, Mo., for penalties assessed against and collected from said firm erroneously.

To pay $439.09 to W. W. Blood, of Greenville, Cal., for labor and construction work at the Greenville Indian school, at Greenville, Cal.

To pay $500 to Thomas Haycock, said sum having been paid by him to the Government in excess of the amount he was surety for on the bond of the late postmaster at Tropic, Utah.

To pay $500 to Preston B. C. Lucas, for improvements on entered lands in Tillamook County, Oreg., which land and improvements under a resurvey he was dispossessed of.

To pay $275 to H. A. Shirkey, of Sissonsville, W. Va., for extra screen-wagon service required of him by postmaster at Charleston, W. Va.

To pay $550.91 to First Lieut. Saunderford Jarman, United States Army, this being an amount misappropriated from Government funds by Sergt. Hunt, and which said Jarman was required to make good out of his own personal funds.

To pay $135 to Wickliff Fry for the loss of a horse while being used by the United States Geological Survey.

To pay $169.45 to Thomas Mason for carrying the mail on route No. 9683.

To pay $320 to the estate of William D. Allen for work performed in the rescue of lighthouse tender Hayes, off Galloo Island Shoal.

To pay $1,912.40 to James Stanton for extra work performed under the War Department at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

To pay $250 to Mrs. L. A. Royster for purchase price of 40 acres of land in Hamilton County, Iowa, under recommendation of the Department of the Interior.

To pay $500 to Amanda Honert for loss of wearing apparel and other personal property by fire at the Cheyenne and Arapahoe school, at Caddo Springs, Okla.

To pay $209.40 to John Streckfus for damage to his boat, the J. S., by U. S. S. Mississippi.

To pay $144 to James A. Showen, father of Corpl. Arthur J. Showen, Company F, United States Infantry, being the amount of six months' gratuity pay under act of May 13, 1908.

To pay $226.31 to W. W. Wall, of Henry County, Mo., this being the amount stolen from him while postmaster at Prairie Home, Mo., and paid back to the Government from his private funds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 11, to insert:

To pay $1,500 to Thomas Mooney, late an employee in the service of the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, for the loss of a leg and other physical disability incurred while in the discharge of his duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I move to add as amendments two cases which I will send to the desk. I wish to say that in these cases action has been taken by the House. It is too late now to send them to the committee, which will not hold any more meetings at this session. The cases have been fully sustained. I have the evidence which is submitted with the report from the department recommending each case.

One case is for the loss of an eye and other personal injuries received from the explosion of a percussion cap, where the employee was in the service of the Government and where the inspector found that there was negligence in not properly marking the box. The man who was handling it did not know the contents; it exploded, and he lost his eye and was in other ways severely injured. The compensation is about a year's salary.

In the other case, which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has presented to me to-day, there was a finding by the Court of Claims of the man's injury and the extent of the damage, and the fact of negligence was shown.

The clause was put in on account of its going through the Court of Claims that no part of it should be paid to attorneys. It is a personal-injury claim. This man's leg was broken in three different places in falling 40 or 50 feet from a scaffolding, and it was clearly shown that there was negligence in not furnishing him a safe place to work.

In the first case, that of Frank Klein, the amount for the loss of his eye and personal injuries is $500. In the second case, the one the Senator from Wisconsin referred to me, the amount awarded is $1,500. Certainly it is not too much, because the Court of Claims found an injury damage to the extent of about $5,000, and following the rule that we adopt generally he will be awarded $1,500.

I ask that these two claims be added as additional paragraphs after line 16, page 8, at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

To pay Frank Klein, of San Francisco, Cal., the sum of $500 on account of the loss of an eye caused by the explosion of a box of percussion caps while loading the United States Army transport Sherman in San Francisco Harbor on the 22d day of September, 1899.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add after the amendment just agreed to the following:

To pay to Hans Peter Guttormsen, of the city of Kenosha, State of Wisconsin, $1,500, having been allowed him by the Court of Claims on the 4th day of December, A. D. 1905, as set forth in House Document No. 174 of the Fifty-ninth Congress, first session: Provided, That no agent, attorney, firm of attorneys, or any person engaged heretofore or hereafter in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting this claim shall directly or indirectly receive or retain for such service in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim, or for any act whatsoever in connection with this claim any fee or compensation whatsoever.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, I want to change the total. On page 1, line 3, I move to strike out "$39,603" and insert "$20,863."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to pay certain employees of the Government for injuries received while in the discharge of their duties."

CELEBRATION OF TREATY OF GHENT.

The bill (S. 4256) to approve of the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of Ghent was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROOT. There are minority views upon the bill. I notice that the Senator who filed them is not present. I think it had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

ELDREDGE BROS. LIVE STOCK CO.

The bill (S. 3757) for the relief of the Eldredge Bros. Live Stock Co., a corporation, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to refund to the Eldredge Bros. Live Stock Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Utah, $2,738.73, being duties collected from that corporation on cattle temporarily driven into the United States from Canada.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 7318) to accept the cession by the State of Montana of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Glacier National Park, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in section 10, on page 7, line 24, to strike out "10" and insert "11," and in line 25, after "and," to strike out "11" and insert "12," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. That the commissioner provided for in this act shall be paid an annual salary of $1,500, payable quarterly: Provided, That the said commissioner shall reside within the exterior boundaries of said Glacier National Park, at a place to be designated by the court making such appointment: And provided further, That all fees, costs, and expenses collected by the commissioner shall be disposed of as provided in sections 11 and 12 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES E. C. COVEL.

The bill (S. 7378) for the relief of James E. C. Covel was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

WILLIAM K. HARVEY.

The bill (H. R. 5763) for the relief of William K. Harvey, alias William K. Hall, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let the bill go over.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Georgia withhold his objection for a moment that I may explain the bill? I know the beneficiary personally.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will withdraw the objection for that purpose.

Mr. WARREN. This is what happened: He enlisted and found that his regiment was not going to battle. He deserted in order to find one that did go, and he served all through and received an honorable discharge.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I withdraw the objection to the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN TREFFEISEN.

The bill (H. R. 606) for the relief of John Treffeisen was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BRISTOW. I hope the Senator from Georgia will withdraw his objection. This man served in the Army, and he had a good record. He was taken sick in the city of Washington when away from his regiment on leave. He returned to his regiment as soon as he was able, but because he did not have a certificate in the proper form he was disciplined for it, and was then given an honorable discharge. He was attended while sick by a medical officer of the Army. The bill comes from the House. He is now 91 years old. The bill was introduced in the House by an old Confederate soldier who is especially interested in its going through. I have not the slightest interest in it except the desire that what I believe is a meritorious case should be passed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not insist on the objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, lines 3 and 4, to strike out the words "That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged officers," and insert "That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof," and at the end of the bill to add the following proviso: "Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pensions laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, John Treffeisen, who was captain of Company C, Fifty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 24th day of October, 1862: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

JOHN P. RISLEY.

The bill (H. R. 19190) for the relief of John P. Risley, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "sixty-five," to insert, "Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws John P. Risley, late of Battery D, First Regiment United States Artillery, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on September 11, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

POLITICAL CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

The bill (S. 3315) to prohibit corporations from making contributions in connection with political elections and to limit the amount of such contributions by individuals or persons was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I object to the consideration of that bill now. I have not had time to examine it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Of course, the objection will carry the bill over; but a motion is pending, which will come up automatically to-morrow morning, to consider this bill on Saturday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over for the present.

JOHN J. TROXELL.

The bill (H. R. 5135) for the relief of John J. Troxell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, John J. Troxell shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a lieutenant of Company H, Fifty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, on the 23d of October, 1863, but no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SYLVESTER W. BARNES.

The bill (S. 4030) for the relief of Sylvester W. Barnes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to hear something about that bill. It is nearly 50 years since the close of the war.

Mr. BURTON. There is a very full report on that bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has the Senator looked into it?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; and I think it is a deserving bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. BURTON. There is one singular error or disagreement in the blue print as it comes from the House. In the fourth line it reads, "Soldiers' Home for Disabled Volunteers," while in the Senate print of the House bill, as it appears here, it is "National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers." It should be "National Home." I suggest, to make that accurate beyond peradventure, that the word "Soldiers'" in the House bill be stricken out and "National" inserted instead. The Senate print, as it appears, reads "National," but in the form in which it seems to have been transmitted by the House it reads "Soldiers'."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is "National" in the bill that is being considered. The change will be made upon the request of the Senator.

Mr. SANDERS. Is that an adverse or a favorable report?

Mr. BURTON. It is a favorable report by the Senator himself.

Mr. SANDERS. I merely wished to inquire as to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATRICK HOWE.

The bill (H. R. 7434) for the relief of Patrick Howe was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "company," to strike out "B" and insert "G," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Patrick Howe shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private in Company G, Fifty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, on the 1st day of February, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

QUARANTINE FACILITIES AT PORTLAND, ME.

The bill (S. 7317) to provide increased quarantine facilities at the port of Portland, Me., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to provide increased quarantine facilities at the port of Portland, Me., to cost not exceeding $43,880.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OREGON TRAIL.

The bill (S. 5009) authorizing the President to appoint a commissioner to supervise the erection of monuments and markers and locate the general route of the Oregon trail was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not make the objection. The senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is much interested in the bill. I can state in a moment, I think, the amendments proposed by the committee, which will relieve the bill of all objections. The bill originally contemplated an appropriation. The bill as reported does not contemplate an appropriation. It authorizes the Secretary of War to appoint a retired Army officer to act as a commissioner to receive voluntary contributions which may be made for this purpose, and to mark the Oregon trail and expend the money so contributed in erecting markers.

Mr. OVERMAN. I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Library, with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Library was, in section 1, page 1, line 4, before the word "commissioner," to strike out "appoint a," and insert "detail a retired Army officer as"; in line 6, after the word "War," to insert "receive such contributions as are made for the purpose and"; and in line 11, before the word "the," to strike out "the left bank of," so as to make the section read:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to detail a retired Army officer as commissioner who shall, under the direction of the Secretary of War, receive such contributions as are made for the purpose and erect such monuments and markers, of granite and other material, as will designate and locate the general route of the Oregon trail, and fittingly commemorate the valorous deeds of those who established and traveled said trail, from the Missouri River to Puget Sound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 2, line 9, after the word "That," to strike out "the compensation of"; in line 10, after the word "commissioner," to strike out "shall be fixed by the President, but not to exceed the sum of $2,500 per annum," and insert "shall receive no other compensation than his pay as such retired officer," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That said commissioner shall receive no other compensation than his pay as such retired officer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 12, to strike out:

SEC. 5. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act $50,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no part of the sum herein authorized to be appropriated shall be expended until the Secretary of War is satisfied that sufficient additional money is available to complete the work authorized by this act without further appropriations by Congress.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 5. That said commissioner shall make report to the Secretary of War of all money received by him for the purpose aforesaid and the manner of its expenditure, and if a dispute arises respecting the location of the "trail" at any point or points the Secretary of War shall have authority to organize a commission of not more than three Army officers, of whom the said commissioner shall be one, to settle the matter; and if it be found that there were two trails between certain points equally entitled to be known as the "Oregon trail," both may be monumented and marked hereunder.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COOSA RIVER DAM, ALA.

The bill (S. 7343) to authorize the building of a dam across the Coosa River, Ala., at the place selected for Lock No. 18 on said river was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I do not desire to object to the consideration of that bill. There are amendments proposed to it. Those proposed by the committee, I believe, have been adopted. There is an amendment which I proposed yesterday, on which I addressed the Senate at some length. I desire a vote on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of section 1, the following proviso:

Provided, That the rights here conferred shall not be assigned or transferred except upon the written consent of the Secretary of War: And provided, That the Federal Government reserve the right to control the charges for service to consumers in the event that the public interest may so require.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, it is likely that this bill will provoke some discussion. I do not desire by a discussion of this matter to-night to stand in the way of other Senators who have bills on the calendar which they are anxious to have considered, and if the Senate will kindly give me unanimous consent to consider this bill to-morrow morning immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business, and agree that after a debate of one hour, if that much is necessary, the Senate will vote on the bill, I will consent for it to go over.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I have pending, entered this morning, a motion which would come up automatically immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow, to take up Senate bill 3315. I will ask the Senator from Alabama if he will not make his request for unanimous consent subject to that motion, which was entered before I knew the Senator contemplated anything of this kind.

Mr. LODGE. Is that the bill for prohibiting contributions by corporations in connection with political campaigns?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes; and a limitation upon the right of individuals to contribute.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator said a few moments ago that he was going to take that up on Saturday.

Mr. CULBERSON. The motion is to take up the bill on Saturday, and the motion itself will come up to-morrow.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not suppose a motion to take up a bill will provoke any discussion. I only want a vote on the motion to take up the bill on Saturday. The motion itself comes up to-morrow morning automatically, and if the Senator from Alabama will make his request subject to that motion I shall have no objection to it. I will be glad if he will accept my suggestion.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I think we can now have a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and dispose of the bill. I do not think it will lead to any debate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I had in mind the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], who insists, I understand, that he must discuss this question. I do not know how long he desires to occupy. Could we get an agreement with the Senator from Washington on this measure?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no desire, Mr. President, to prevent the disposition of the bill, but I do not think it ought to be taken up now. So far as I am concerned, a very brief time is all that I shall require to present the amendment which I have submitted, and to make some remarks on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio, in addition to those which he has already made in support of that amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then, Mr. President, if there is no objection to the consideration of the bill, I think the Senate may as well consider it now.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I said that I did not believe the calling of bills on the calendar ought to be stopped to take up the discussion of the amendments to this bill now. I have, however, no objection to the request which the Senator from Alabama made a moment ago.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, Mr. President, I have no objection in the world to the suggestion of the Senator from Texas; but if that motion should provoke discussion that would extend beyond the morning hour, where would we be? What I want is a vote.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that what the Senator from Texas asks for to-morrow is a special order.

Mr. CULBERSON. No; I do not ask for a special order. I simply entered a motion, which went over, under my own suggestion until to-morrow, to take up Senate bill 3315 on Saturday morning. It is a mere motion to take up the bill on Saturday morning immediately after the routine morning business.

Mr. LODGE. That is in the nature of a special order, if the motion is to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. If it is considered a motion for a special order, it is not subject to debate.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely. That is the point I was going to make; it is not subject to debate. It would be settled at once, without interfering with anything else.

Mr. CULBERSON. I was going to suggest that to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then it is all right.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator from Alabama will allow me, this bill was made a special order the other day and, as I understand the rule, it remains the special order until it is disposed of.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Unfortunately the presiding officer held to the contrary.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Rule X of the Senate provides that:

1. Any subject may, by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present, be made a special order; and when the time so fixed for its consideration arrives the Presiding Officer shall lay it before the Senate, unless there be unfinished business of the preceding day, and if it is not finally disposed of on that day it shall take its place on the Calendar of Special Orders in the order of time at which it was made special, unless it shall become by adjournment the unfinished business.

Mr. LODGE. That is where it is now—on the Calendar of Special Orders.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It took its place on the calendar, and that is where it is now.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why does not the Senator call it up as a special order from that calendar during the morning hour?

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator from Alabama will get on faster if he secures unanimous consent rather than to rely on the special order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to renew my request that to-morrow morning, immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill, and, after one hour's debate, if that much may be desired, a vote shall be taken. I make that request subject to the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. CUMMINS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. If that bill should not be disposed of before 12 o'clock, would it displace the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. SANDERS. I wish to inquire if the presiding officer did not rule a little while ago, on Calendar No. 838, Senate bill 4043, that no special order could be made under the present proceedings?

Mr. LODGE. This is not a request for a special order that the Senator from Alabama is making. It is a request for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FIRE DEPARTMENT BUILDING, HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

The bill (H. R. 5145) authorizing the city of Hot Springs, Ark., to occupy and construct buildings for the use of the fire department of said city on lot No. 3, block No. 115, in the city of Hot Springs, Ark., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BEQUEST OF GERTRUDE M. HUBBARD.

The bill (H. R. 9833) to accept and fund the bequest of Gertrude M. Hubbard was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not wish to interfere in any manner with the execution of this trust, but I should like to inquire of some Senator who may have personal knowledge in regard to the matter, whether in any instance the United States Government has ever accepted a trust. I think it is entirely proper that there should be a trustee to hold that fund, and I repeat that my inquiry is not in any manner hostile to the purpose. I simply think it has never been done in the Senate. It may be a serious question whether we should undertake a matter of that kind.

Mr. ROOT. It was done in the case of the Smithsonian Institute.

Mr. BACON. That is true.

Mr. ROOT. This is a little matter. There is a very fine selection of prints in the library which is a source of very great pleasure to a great many people who can not afford to buy paintings. This little trust is too small for anybody to take care of it by itself. It might just as well be in the Treasury and have the income paid for this purpose.

Mr. BACON. I am in entire sympathy and accord with the desire that the trust shall be carried out in its spirit, and the only suggestion in my mind was as to embarking upon the matter of holding these funds in trust. I certainly should have remembered the fact that the United States did hold the funds of the Smithsonian Institution in trust, as I am one of the Regents. But the matter did not occur to me at the moment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT.

The bill (S. 3345) to amend the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies" was announced as next in order.

Mr. OLIVER. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

PLEASURE YACHTS.

The bill (H. R. 22650) to amend sections 4214 and 4218 of the Revised Statutes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to make an inquiry about this bill.

Mr. NELSON. It relates only to little yachts.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to know whether it relieves vessels from the taxation which we reimpose in the canal act.

Mr. NELSON. I do not think so.

Mr. LODGE. It does not affect the tax?

Mr. NELSON. I do not think so. It is a bill which was suggested by the Department of Commerce and Labor from the Bureau of Navigation. It is a House bill.

Mr. LODGE. It would not take off the tax?

Mr. BACON. What is the section to be amended?

Mr. LODGE. I do not myself understand the bill at all, and I got up to make an inquiry about it. I think the Senator in charge of the bill not being here, it had better go over.

Mr. NELSON. It simply relates to yachts proceeding from one port to another.

Mr. LODGE. If that is all, I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Yes; it merely relates to small yachts—not requiring them to clear like other vessels.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANT OF LANDS TO WISCONSIN.

The bill (H. R. 13417) granting unsurveyed and unattached islands to the State of Wisconsin for forestry purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARKANSAS & MEMPHIS RAILWAY CO.

The bill (S. 7424) to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled "An act to authorize Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANT OF LANDS TO YUMA, ARIZ.

The bill (H. R. 19409) granting certain lands to the town of Yuma, Ariz., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHEBOYGAN, MICH.

The bill (S. 7106) providing the sum of $80,000 for the erection of a public building at Cheboygan, Mich., was announced as next in order and was read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan rose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I looked around and did not see the Senator from Michigan. What is the size of this town?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I did not think it necessary to show myself on this bill, because it provides for a very thrifty city of about ten thousand people entirely worthy of this improvement.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not object.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building for the use and accommodation of the post office and other offices of the Government at Cheboygan, Mich., the cost of said site and building not to exceed $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for a public building at Cheboygan, Mich."

MONUMENT TO REAR ADMIRAL WILKES.

The bill (S. 1774) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to erect a suitable monument over the remains of Rear Admiral Charles Wilkes, United States Navy, in the national cemetery at Arlington, Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $1,500 for the purpose named.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENTRIES UNDER BOND.

The bill (H. R. 25806) to provide for the entry under bond of exhibits of arts, sciences, and industries was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM P. CLARK.

The bill (S. 2666) granting an increase of pension to William P. Clark was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "lieutenant," to insert "Thirty-seventh"; in line 7, after the word "Company," to strike out "Thirty-seven"; and in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William P. Clark, late second lieutenant Thirty-seventh Company Philippine Scouts, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTIN A. L. OLSEN.

The bill (H. R. 14770) for the relief of Martin A. L. Olsen, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Martin A. L. Olsen, postmaster of the city of De Kalb, Ill., $515, to reimburse him for postal-savings funds and postal-savings stamps which were stolen when the post office at De Kalb, Ill., was burglarized.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by A. C. Johnson, assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, and 4 to the bill (H. R. 18985) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes; recedes from its adherence to its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 9, 10 and 11; and agrees to the same with an amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 356) to further continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 1, 1912, entitled "Joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies," and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 2, 3, and 4 to the bill (H. R. 18985) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, and receding from its adherence to its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 9, 10, and 11 and agreeing to the same with an amendment, which was, in lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendments, to insert the following:

SEC. 5. That in case of sickness or unavoidable absence of the disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions from his office, the Commissioner of Pensions may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, authorize the chief clerk of his office or some other clerk employed therein to temporarily act as such disbursing clerk for payment of pensions.

With the approval of the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior, the disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions may designate and authorize the necessary number of clerks to sign the name of the disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions to official checks.

The disbursing clerk shall give bond with good and sufficient surety for such amount and in such form as the Secretary of the Interior may approve, and such bond shall be held to cover and apply to the acts of the persons authorized to act in his place.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. There is a unanimous-consent agreement for an hour, and then the wool bill comes up at 2 o'clock. We shall have nothing to do. I see nothing coming up.

Mr. BRISTOW. There is a conference report now on the table that ought to be acted upon.

Mr. LODGE. That will be disposed of.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am anxious to get the conference report on the Panama Canal bill out of the way. Why not have a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on it some time to-morrow?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can not get that now. We will take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BRISTOW, Mr. BACON, and Mr. SMITH of Georgia addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BRISTOW. I wish the Senator from North Carolina would withdraw his motion. Let us meet at 10 and get through with it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I withdraw the motion.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 7 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, August 16, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 15, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, from whom cometh life, thought, and action, cleanse our minds and quicken every noble impulse that we may hallow Thy name in all our intercourse with our fellow men, and so fulfill the law and the prophets. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE JOURNAL.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I presume it was perhaps an error of the Clerk, but as the Clerk read the record giving the vote on the veto message of the President, he read the "aye" as the "nay" vote.

The SPEAKER. No; the Journal is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Then it was a mistake in the reading.

The SPEAKER. It is either because of bad hearing on the part of the gentleman or bad pronunciation on the part of the Clerk.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that I may print in the RECORD a statement as to the work of this Congress before the session closes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a résumé of this Congress. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

APPENDIX TO PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, to the veto message of the President on the metal-schedule bill (H. R. 18642) there was a short appendix, which under the custom is not printed in the RECORD, and may not have been printed with the message.

The SPEAKER. What was that?

Mr. MANN. It is in regard to the veto message of the President on the metal-schedule bill, page 10932 of the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that the appendix may be printed in the permanent RECORD in connection with the President's message, and also that the appendix may be printed in to-day's RECORD, and also, if not printed in connection with the House document carrying the President's message, that there may be a reprint of the President's message with the appendix. The message refers to the appendix.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I could not understand in the confusion what the gentleman's request was.

Mr. MANN. There is a short appendix with the President's message vetoing the metal-schedule bill. It is not the custom to print appendixes to a President's message, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD of yesterday, in the permanent RECORD in connection with the President's message, and also in to-day's RECORD that it may be read, and also, if it is not printed with House documents carrying the President's message, that there may be a reprint containing the appendix.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that is proper; the President is entitled to present his side of the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to print in to-day's RECORD the matter which he named, and also to have printed in the permanent RECORD as of yesterday, and also it be printed in the document along with the President's message. The Journal clerk says that the President's message has not been printed as a document yet and the two can go together. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 18985) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, Nos. 9, 10, and 11, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 21324. An act providing for the refund of certain duties incorrectly collected on a certain horse; and

H. J. Res. 337. Joint resolution requesting the President to cause an investigation of the Patent Office and make a report with recommendations to Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 25034. An act to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

HOUSE BILL WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, House bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

H. R. 25034. An act to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton, with amendments; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 21324. An act providing for the refund of certain duties incorrectly collected on a certain horse.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 22199. An act to extend the limits of the port of entry of Galveston, Tex., to include Port Bolivar, in that State; and

H. R. 21324. An act providing for the refund of certain duties incorrectly collected on a certain horse.

RESOLUTION EXTENDING APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 356) to further continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 1, 1912, entitled "Joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies."

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies," approved July 1, 1912, be, and the same are, further extended and continued in full force and effect for and during the last half of the month of August, 1912.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the press has been reporting during the past few days that the United States Army is without its pay. Some attempt has been made to place the responsibility for the situation upon the Democratic House of Representatives. In the last session of the last Congress the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] pointed out that the Army appropriation bill carried an insufficient sum for the pay of the Army. That has been demonstrated by what has transpired since. The Army appropriation bill passed the Congress and went to the President in the month of June and he returned it here with a veto message on the 17th of June. At that time the Senate had already agreed by unanimous consent to do no business between the 17th of June and the 30th, so that it was impossible to have any action taken upon the Army appropriation bill for the current fiscal year. The Army bill was repassed by the House on the 2d or 3d day of July, and unless it passed the Senate last night it is still there awaiting action——

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. It passed last night.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Senate, I am informed, passed it last night. The deficiency bill has already passed the House, and to make good the dereliction of the last Republican Congress, it carried $1,800,000 to provide for the pay of the Army during the latter part of the fiscal year which closed the 30th of June, 1912. So far as this House is concerned, it has done everything possible, and had equally speedy action been taken in another place all the appropriation bills could easily have been enacted into law before the 30th day of June, 1912. I ask for a vote on the question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand whether the resolution was under consideration.

The SPEAKER. Yes. There was no objection to its consideration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN. No. If it is under consideration in the Committee of the Whole I have no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection to that.

Mr. MANN. I knew the gentleman would not object. It would not make any difference if he did.

Mr. Speaker, there have always been deficiency appropriation bills and I presume there always will be, because it is impossible for Congress a year in advance to know exactly the amounts which may be required for expenditures which are provided for by law. There is a deficiency in the appropriation for the last fiscal year for the pay of the Army. The general deficiency bill, which recently passed the House, carried a deficiency appropriation to provide for that deficiency in the pay of the Army, but that deficiency bill passed the House only recently.

The veto by the President of the Army appropriation bill has nothing whatever to do with the deficiency for the last fiscal year, because it made no provision for the payment of any pay of the Army due prior to the 1st day of July. The general deficiency bill was brought into this House after the 1st of July and wandered around the House without a guardian for several weeks in the Clerk's possession, with the House acting upon other matters for at least a week. Now the gentleman, having brought in a deficiency bill very late, and not having passed it through the House, endeavors to complain because the Senate did not pass the deficiency bill.

The deficiency bill providing for a deficiency in the pay of the Army for the last fiscal year ought to have been presented to the House before the 1st of July, ought to have been passed by the House before the 1st of July, ought to have become a law before the 1st of July in order that the enlisted men in the Army might receive their pay for the month of June, and it is idle for the gentleman to say that it was the fault of a former administration of the House or the fault of the President or the fault of the Senate. The gentleman himself has been negligent in the matter. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is not accurate in his statements. The Paymaster General of the Army stated to the Committee on Appropriations that the deficiency existed largely because of the fact that, in submitting the estimates for the last fiscal year for the pay of the Army, the Secretary of War had directed, over his protest, a reduction in the estimates to be submitted. The only purpose in doing so was, first, to make a false record for economy before the country, and, secondly, to help swell the necessary appropriations to be made by the Democratic House already elected.

Never is a general deficiency bill passed until the very last in a session of Congress and until the other appropriation bills have been finished. The Army appropriation bill would have carried appropriations for the Army from the 1st of July until to-day, 46 days, and if the Republican Congress had done its duty it would have appropriated sufficient to pay the Army until the 30th of June last. There will always be deficiencies, but there will not be deficiencies to the same extent with the Democratic House in control as there were during the Republican régime. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In one moment. The general deficiency bill carried but $6,000,000. I can recall occasions when the Republicans had control of both Houses and the Executive, when the general deficiency bill ran up to $46,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. What amount did this deficiency bill carry as it passed the House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. About $6,000,000.

It would have been futile to have passed the general deficiency bill between the 17th of June and the 1st of July, because there could have been no action taken on it in another body. And more than that, in defiance of law, or as a matter of gross negligence, the administration did not submit all of its estimates to this Congress for deficiencies or for the present fiscal year until several weeks had elapsed after the 1st of July, and they are coming in yet, and they will continue to come in. This Congress at the next session will be supplying deficiencies that, for one reason or another, this administration deems it unwise to make public before the election. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman complains that the Army appropriation bill for the last fiscal year did not contain an appropriation sufficiently large to meet the expenses provided by law, and particularly the pay of the Army; and yet the Army appropriation for the last fiscal year was considerably larger than the appropriation carried in the bill passed by this House at this session of Congress for this fiscal year. If it be said that the appropriation made by a Republican Congress last year was not large enough, what shall be said of a Democratic House which, knowing that, cuts down the amount at this time, expecting to bring in a large deficiency bill after the election? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SHERLEY rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the wisdom of appropriation bills is not to be determined by their amounts. The trouble with the Republican appropriation bill for the support of the Army was that it carried too many inexcusable items for things that were not needed, and neglected to properly provide for the pay of the soldiers of the Army. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And the Democratic Party will demonstrate that it can cut appropriation bills and still provide for the proper necessary expenses of a legitimate Army of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

That was the trouble with the bill last year. It is an old habit to make appropriations insufficient for matters that must be carried on and thereby make a false showing, and then to come in and ask a deficiency appropriation that must be granted. If the economy had been shown in other items in the bill, there would have been no need of cutting the items in regard to the pay of the Army. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the deficiency bill as it passed the House, long after the close of the fiscal year, to pay deficiencies in the expenses of the Government for the last fiscal year, amounting in round numbers to $6,000,000, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] states, was one of the smallest deficiency bills that has passed the House in 20 years.

So much for the statement that the Republican House, which ceased to exist on the 4th day of March, 1911, failed to perform its duty in caring for the public service. After all, what does the country care whether this deficiency bill is smaller than the ordinary deficiency bills are—and it is smaller. But as the Army was entitled to its pay before the 1st day of July, it was the duty of Congress to have provided that deficiency appropriation before the 1st day of July last. It is true that the Senate went practically out of commission during the lifetime of both national conventions, and both Senate and House went practically out of commission during the Baltimore convention; but it was the duty of this Congress to pass this deficiency bill early in June or late in May, so that the money would have been available to pay the Army, including the enlisted men, when the payments were due. They have not been paid. That which should have been paid in June has not yet been paid. We can throw snowballs or paper balls back and forth from one side of the House to the other. You can say we failed to do it when we had power in the last Congress. We can say that we did better than almost any Congress in 20 years in providing for the public service. After all, the fact remains that the Army goes without pay. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have read from the Clerk's desk, in my time, an editorial from the Springfield Republican.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can send it up.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Springfield Republican, Aug. 11, 1912.]

ROOSEVELT AND THE KANSAS CAMPBELL.

Congressman PHILIP P. CAMPBELL, of Kansas, was nominated in the Republican primaries two years ago by a plurality of about 2,500. The figures should be borne in mind.

When Mr. Roosevelt last spring announced his belief in the recall of judicial decisions this Kansas Congressman risked his political life by denouncing the idea. He even heaped contempt upon it. In a speech at Concord, N. H., Mr. CAMPBELL aroused Mr. Roosevelt's wrath by saying that such an appeal as was proposed was like appealing from the umpire to the bleachers.

During April Mr. Roosevelt toured Kansas on a special train, and in all of his speeches he excoriated Congressman CAMPBELL. On April 19 and 20 the papers of the country printed this dispatch from Manhattan, Kans.:

"In his speeches to-day en route across Kansas Col. Roosevelt repeatedly assailed Congressman CAMPBELL. CAMPBELL, he said, had visited New Hampshire as a 'sort of perverted missionary,' and there had referred to Roosevelt's judiciary proposal as an 'appeal from the umpire to the bleachers.'

"'Mr. CAMPBELL showed he was wholly ignorant of the foundation of this Government,' he said. 'Mr. CAMPBELL felt that the attitude of the people in reference to politics ought to be that they sat on the bleachers and paid the price of admission, but had nothing to do with the game. I ask you in Kansas to stand by us because we stand by the bleachers. We have appealed in this campaign to the bleachers. We appealed to them in Illinois and Pennsylvania and the bleachers went with us.'"

Two days later Mr. CAMPBELL replied to Mr. Roosevelt from the floor of the House. It was one of the pluckiest speeches ever delivered in American political life. Besides being an acute and effective analysis of the recall of decisions, which was characterized as "an absurd proposition," the address was marked by a straight-flung defiance of the colonel. The Congressman said:

"Col. Roosevelt has been holding himself up to the people as the paragon of political virtue. He has assailed every man who ventured to disagree with him on any question. He brands every man as infamous whom he can not lash into agreeing with him. [Applause.]

"I have been told that I was taking my political life in my own hands this morning in assuming to answer the vicious attacks of the colonel on me in my own State. If I did not do so this morning I would despise myself. [Applause.] My political friends would despise me and my political foes would despise me also. [Applause.] My regard for the intelligence of the American people and of the people of Kansas is above any fear of Theodore Roosevelt." [Applause.]

Well, what happened to CAMPBELL in the Kansas Republican primaries last Tuesday? All the Roosevelt men could vote, for the Kansas laws permitted them to, and the Republican organization was in the hands of Roosevelt's friends. The expected did not happen. CAMPBELL was not annihilated because of his attacks on T. R. He did not lose his renomination because the colonel had denounced him "from morn till dewy eve" from one end of Kansas to the other only 3½ months since. The Congressman won by substantially the same majority that was given to him in that Republican district in 1910—that is to say, by about 2,500 votes.

Courage pays in politics. CAMPBELL had it. And Kansas Republicans have sustained him in spite of the angry denunciation of a man who has believed that he held Kansas in the hollow of his hand.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the conferees on the Panama Canal bill, H. R. 21969, have discovered some clerical inaccuracies in it, and the Senate have granted unanimous consent that the papers be withdrawn and corrected. I ask the House to grant the same unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to withdraw the papers in the conference matter on the Panama Canal bill to correct certain clerical errors. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ILLEGAL SALES OF MEATS IN NEW YORK AND NEW JERSEY.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was given unanimous consent to insert a statement that appeared in the New York Times of last Sunday regarding the illegal sales of meats in New York and New Jersey. The colloquy which took place in reference to the matter appears in the RECORD correctly, but the insert which I handed to the Government Printing Office messenger does not appear in this morning's RECORD. I ask that it be inserted now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to print in to-day's RECORD the New York Times article to which he refers. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

THRIVING TRAFFIC IN BAD MEAT HERE—UNFIT ANIMALS KILLED AND SOLD, ESCAPING STATE AND FEDERAL INSPECTION—CITY CAN'T CONTROL IT—SHIPMENTS SENT OUT OF THE STATE AND THEN BROUGHT BACK FOR FOOD—A GRAVE DANGER TO HEALTH—FEDERAL AUTHORITIES ADMIT FACTS, BUT SAY THEY CAN DO NOTHING, AS TRADE IS NOT BETWEEN STATES.

A traffic in diseased animals for human food involving up-State farmers, Jersey City commission men, and certain wholesale butchers in this city, has for some time past been thriving and is still carried on without interference from the city, State, or Nation. The butchers, of whom there are many in Brooklyn, are known to the Government inspectors as "unofficial"—that is, they have agreed not to sell meat outside the State—and for that reason they are not subject to the strict and wholesome Federal inspection. The facts of this traffic have been traced out by The Times by a study of every step of the business, from many small shipping points in Delaware County, N. Y., to the manufacturing rooms of the butchers here. Delaware County, while one of the largest shipping centers, is not alone in furnishing the supply by any means. But it is taken as typical. The facts of the traffic have been verified. They are not denied by the farmers who sell and rather pride themselves on driving good bargains, or by the commission men in Jersey City who dispose of the damaged animals with clear consciences, for they say they are violating no law.

The trade in tainted animals is made possible by the complete separation of Federal, State, and city inspectors. It goes back to the Constitution point of interstate and intrastate trade. The Federal Government takes the position that it has no right to inspect cattle, hogs, and other food animals where the stock originates and is to be consumed within the limits of a single State, even when such animals in course of transit pass through a neighboring State. On the other hand, the State does not greatly concern itself with shipments of cattle that are bound for points outside the State. Then this present situation is created: By sending his animals from his New York farm to a commission merchant in Jersey City, N. J., the farmer takes his stock from the none too watchful eye of the State inspector; he is then engaged in interstate commerce, and the State inspector turns over the whole duty of examination and condemnation of unfit animals to the Federal authorities. But when the animals reach Jersey City they are not sold to the houses dealing in interstate trade, but the small local butcher of Brooklyn picks up the unfortunate animals for a low price and has them shipped to his house in this State. As the animals originate in this State, and as they return here to be killed and sold by the "unofficial" houses, they are in turn lifted from the scrutiny of the Federal inspector. By a simple method of routing the shipment, both State and Nation have been evaded. There remain only the city health authorities; but, as will be shown and as Health Officer Lederle admits, the city has never been able to cope with the slaughterhouse situation. The result of this is that every day there is going into the market baskets of the city enough unfit meat to be a menace to the health of the community.

So far as can be learned this scheme originated nearly six years ago, when the Federal Government passed a law making it possible to stop the shipment of diseased meat from one State to another by establishing a system of inspection over all slaughterhouses where animals are slaughtered and the meat offered for sale in another State. Since that time the shipment of diseased cattle has been going on unchecked. Tubercular cows, pigs, and sheep, as well as bob veal and other animals suffering from such contagious diseases as lumpy jaw or actinomycosis, hog cholera, cancer, and blackleg are shipped every week to the commission merchants at the public stockyards in Jersey City, N. J., and there sold to the unofficial slaughterhouses in Brooklyn and surrounding sections, who offer the meat for sale in this State.

Carload after carload of diseased cattle is shipped from Delaware County, and the crime is made even greater by the absolute freedom with which the shipments are made. Cows have been known to die while on the way to the cattle depot, and it is not an uncommon sight to see the farmers bring their old cows—"bandboxes," as they are called—to the cattle yards in farm wagons and to hoist the animals into the cattle cars, where they often fall to the floor from exhaustion, and sometimes die before reaching their destination. Others are held up by their mates in the car, and stand coughing and bleeding. In some instances the cattle shippers have been known to kill a cow which they thought could not stand the journey and ship it to some unofficial house, where it was sold to an uninspected bologna factory.

A TYPICAL SHIPMENT.

A Times reporter, investigating conditions, saw one shipment from Walton, N. Y., where two cattle cars, whose destination was New York, were shipped on Tuesday, July 23, by a firm of that town. The cars were New York, Ontario & Western cattle cars Nos. 4026 and 4036. In car No. 4026 there were 5 bulls, 5 pigs, and 16 calves. Six of the calves were so young that they could hardly stand, and swayed back and forth. One of the pigs was lying on its knees panting and coughing. In car No. 4036 there were 20 cows. The attention of the Times reporter was called to 2 of these by their cough. Upon examination it was found that these 2 were being supported by the other animals in the car, and that a number of large swellings were noticeable under their breasts. These swellings extended along the whole under part of the animal. The flesh on the 2 cows was drawn tight over their bones, and one could see practically every bone in the body.

A more careful investigation of the carload showed another cow lying in a limp attitude in a corner of the car. When she was prodded up with a stick she began to cough and totter back and forth. The entire underpart of her body was covered with swellings.

The farmers throughout the county admit that they sell all their old and diseased cows, and say that they do so because the State pays them very poorly after it condemns and slaughters a cow for tuberculosis or any other disease, whereas the cattle dealers pay from $8 to $10 a cow, and give the farmer his money at once. This condition of affairs is not limited to any one locality, as it extends over the county, and is said to exist in nearly every portion of the State. Out of all the farmers in Delaware County interviewed by The Times reporter not one denied that he knew what was going on, and on the other hand stated that the shipments in the early spring were even worse than in summer.

The cattle dealers or their agents travel to all parts of the county buying anything that the farmer will sell, the condition or age of the animal making no difference. The price paid for old "bandboxes" and diseased cows varies, the cattle dealer as a rule offering $8 for the creature as it lies on the farm or $10 for it if it is carted to the cattle yards on shipping day. Bob veal generally brings from $1 to $5.

FARMERS ADMIT THESE FACTS.

A farmer near Delhi, N. Y., told The Times reporter that one of the cattle dealers came to his place and offered to buy some cattle. The farmer replied that he had none to sell, whereupon the cattle dealer pointed out a 5-day-old calf and, according to the farmer, said: "How much will you take for this young bull? You don't want it, do you?" The farmer replied that he did not, and said he would sell it for just what its hide was worth, which was $1. The little animal was bought and the next shipment day was loaded into a cattle car bound for this city.

A farmer living near Delancey, N. Y., said:

"Well, if you want to know the real condition of affairs in this section, I will tell you something that I know to be a fact and am willing to swear to it if necessary. I have been in the cattle business myself, and I have also conducted a slaughterhouse, and I know a diseased cow when I see it. I have seen cows with tuberculosis, lumpy jaw, and cancer shipped out of this county in the spring by the carload. All this meat goes to New York City, where the worst of it is made into bologna or canned, and for that very reason there is hardly a farmer in this county who will eat New York bologna.

"Last spring I saw a shipment from Delhi which made me sick myself. I saw three cows lying dead in the road leading to the cattle yards, while others were lying about too weak to stand on their feet. Other farmers were driving the most disreputable specimens of cows to the yards in wagons. All the cows were old and broken down, and most of them bore every evidence of disease. Little calves were being carted to the yards also, and some of them were so young they could hardly stand.

"One of the cows I saw had a cancer on its stomach. It stood swaying, and before the car pulled out fell down and I saw other cows trample it. It was taken out, though, and possibly the creature reached New York alive.

"At the same time I saw a big hog lying in the yards unconscious and breathing heavily. It was not from the heat either, as it was a cool day. One of the shippers said, 'I guess that is a bad one,' and another standing near-by said: 'Oh, it is good enough for New York bologna. Cut its throat and send it, if you think it can not live.' The hog was shoved into the car alive, however.

"Other cows had tuberculosis and were coughing, and many of them had swellings and sores, while one had lumpy jaw. When you stop to consider that this was all seen in one shipment, you can get some idea as to what is going on. Why, I have sold a cow to the cattle dealer myself which I knew was diseased in a way. Its hoof had been eaten off by a disease, but otherwise it was well except for a slight cold. When I brought her to the cattle yard the dealer asked me what was the matter with it, and I replied that its hoof had been eaten away. The cow coughed then, and the dealer said, 'I guess she has a cold, too.' I would not have shipped the cow if I had not known that the disease she had was not contagious and that it was lawful to ship her. Now, if you want proof of this just ask some other farmers."

The story was corroborated later by another farmer.

A farmer living near Hobart, N. Y., said: "Anything that can stand goes to New York, and some of it is almighty poor stuff."

Another farmer, living near Stamford, N. Y., said: "New York is the dumping place for all our old cattle, and even diseased ones go there. I know of a case not so very long ago when the shippers cut two cows' heads off, and, after skinning them, wrapped the carcasses up in burlap and sent them to the city. They did this because the animals would have died on the way otherwise."

A farmer near Andes, N. Y., said: "New York gets very poor stuff, and I would hate to eat any meat which comes from that section of the county, or from this State, for that matter. It is not only old, but diseased as well."

One near Walton said: "All you folks get is the poor trash we can't use in the dairy."

A farmer near Apex, N. Y., said: "Conditions are simply outrageous. Why, I personally don't believe there is one real good cow shipped from this county."

HOW THEY GET HERE.

Nearly all of the cattle shipped from Delaware County go to the public stockyards at Jersey City, where they are disposed of by the Kerns Commission Co. and Samuel Saunders, who sell to slaughterhouses in this city and the surrounding country. It was learned that nearly all of the meat they sell from Delaware County is received at the unofficial slaughterhouses near this city, where it is slaughtered and sent to the bologna factories.

When a times reporter visited Mr. Kerns he learned that he received cattle from 13 out of the 15 cattle dealers in Delaware County. When they are shipped from Delaware County no inspection is made by the special agent for the State, Daniel Franklin, of Delhi. The Government has occasionally made inspections and obtained convictions, but they must prove that the shipper has knowledge that the cattle had a disease before they can make any arrests. It is the agent's duty to supervise the shipments, and he should also travel about the county and inspect the live stock and condemn that which shows any traces of disease. So far as the Times reporter could learn, this was very seldom done, and when it was, it was because the farmer asked that he visit him and look over his stock.

HOW THE LAW IS EVADED—NO EXAMINATIONS WHERE THE ANIMALS GO INTO THE "UNOFFICIAL" HOUSES.

The cattle dealers, realizing that their diseased cows would come under Government inspection after the law was passed in 1906, hit upon the plan of shipping their cattle to a public stockyard where no post-mortem or ante-mortem examination can be made as long as the meat does not go to an "official" slaughterhouse or one dealing in interstate trade.

The Jersey City Stock Yards are public yards, and unless the cattle brought there are consigned to an official establishment the Government inspectors have no right to inspect it, as it goes to a slaughterhouse which deals only with State trade and comes under the State law. All cattle received at the Jersey City Stock Yards are sold off by the commission merchants, who get, as a rule, a commission of $1 for each cow sold.

Both official and unofficial slaughterhouse men buy there as they do in the West Sixtieth Street Stock Yards. After the cattle are bought all that are to be delivered at an official slaughterhouse are examined by the Government inspectors and veterinarians. Those bought by an unofficial slaughterhouse are not inspected by them, but should be inspected under the State law by the State inspectors. But as there are no New York inspectors in New Jersey, it becomes an easy matter for the unofficial slaughterhouse men to buy the cattle and take them away without interference from any inspectors.

The law which forms the basis for Federal inspection draws clear and defined distinctions between the two sets of slaughterhouses, and says:

"That for the purpose of preventing the use in interstate or foreign commerce of meat and meat food products which are unsound, unhealthful, and otherwise unfit for human food, the Secretary of Agriculture, at his discretion, may cause to be made by inspectors appointed for that purpose an examination of all cattle, sheep, swine, and goats before they shall be allowed to enter any slaughtering, packing, meat-canning, rendering, or similar establishment in which they are to be slaughtered and the meat and meat food product thereof is to be used in interstate or foreign commerce; and all cattle, swine, sheep, and goats found on such inspection to show symptoms of disease shall be set apart and slaughtered separately from all others, and when so slaughtered the carcasses of such cattle, sheep, swine, and goats shall be subject to a careful examination provided herein.

"That for the purpose hereinbefore set forth the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause to be made a post-mortem examination and inspection of the carcasses and parts thereof of all cattle, sheep, swine, and goats to be prepared for human consumption at any slaughterhouse, meat canning, salting, packing, or rendering, or similar establishment in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, for transportation or sale as articles of food for interstate or foreign commerce, and the carcasses and parts thereof of all such animals found to be sound and healthful, wholesome, and fit for human food shall be marked, stamped, tagged, or labeled 'Inspected and passed'; and said inspectors shall mark in the same manner 'Inspected and condemned' all carcasses and parts thereof of animals found to be unsound, unhealthful, unwholesome, or in any other manner unfit for human food, and all such carcasses thus inspected and condemned shall be destroyed for food purposes."

The law also provides that any inspector who fails to report and destroy such animals shall be discharged, and that if it is deemed necessary another examination can be made at any time of meat passed or condemned.

LAW EXEMPTS UNOFFICIAL HOUSES.

The Federal law makes the following exemptions, and says:

"That the provisions of this act requiring inspection to be made by the Secretary of Agriculture shall not apply to animals slaughtered by any farmer on the farm and sold and transported as intrastate trade, nor to retail butchers and retail dealers in meat and meat food products supplying their customers: Provided, That if any person shall sell or offer for sale or transportation for interstate or foreign commerce any meat or meat food products which are unfit for human food he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or one year's imprisonment, or both."

All of the slaughtering houses in Manhattan, but not all the bologna factories, are official houses, but only 13 of the slaughterhouses or other places dealing in meat in Brooklyn are under Government inspection. This makes it almost impossible for the slaughterhouses in Manhattan to buy diseased cattle, as if they do so they know they will only be condemned. One man in this city bought 27 cows from the Kerns Commission Co. in Jersey City, and out of this number 22 were condemned for tuberculosis. Mr. Kerns told the Times reporter this himself.

There is nothing in the Federal or the State law to prevent the cattle dealer from shipping calves which are under 6 weeks of age so long as they are shipped alive. If they are killed and shipped as meat, they can be condemned and the shipper can be prosecuted. There are at present 11 such cases pending in the United States district attorney's office, while there are several cases of shipping diseased cows pending in the Federal court.

It is also unlawful to ship cattle in a crate, and there have been several prosecutions for this violation of the law. The shippers of cattle from Delaware County, however, are enabled to escape from the clutches of the law by shipping their animals to a public stockyard and shipping their bob veal down to the stockyards alive.

COOPERATION URGED.

The Federal authorities in charge of the animal industry have repeatedly urged that some arrangement be made whereby they can work in cooperation with the State inspectors, but have been unable to do so.

The State inspectors have no jurisdiction over the slaughterhouses in Brooklyn, as they come under the city inspection system and are under the direct control of the department of health. This inspection is incomplete, as the Times reporter found, and up to a year or so ago consisted merely of an inspection of butcher shops when the meat was offered for sale.

The impossibility of a complete and adequate inspection by city inspectors may be seen, when it is taken into consideration that there are only three veterinary surgeons assigned to inspect five slaughterhouses, whereas the Government has a veterinarian on each killing floor, and it is his duty to examine every carcass. The city veterinarians are assigned to cover a certain district, and very often it happens that one has three slaughterhouses to inspect. Each slaughterhouse is provided with an inspector assigned by the department of health each month.

The veterinary surgeons in charge often complain that they have too much work to do, and that they also have to be continually on guard to see that the inspector in charge of a killing floor is on the watch. It often happens that this inspector leaves for a time and several killings take place during his absence. This is very seldom reported. These inspectors have had no medical training, and it sometimes happens that a new inspector is broken in by being assigned to cover a slaughterhouse as soon as he enters the service.

The condemnation of the whole carcass is a rare thing in city inspected houses, although such sections as the spleen, the liver, or the lungs are often condemned, while the rest of the carcass is sold as food and goes to either the sausage shops or the meat markets. There was but 1 carcass condemned in April in 5 butcher shops, while in May there were 13.

A TOUR THROUGH THE SHOPS—EVIDENCES OF UNFIT ANIMALS FOUND IN JERSEY CITY AND BROOKLYN.

The public stockyards at Jersey City, where the Kerns Commission Co. and Samuel Saunders hold forth, are the scenes of great activity every morning except Sunday, when the representatives of the many abattoirs in this city gather there and buy their cattle for the day.

A careful watch will show that there are two distinct classes of buyers. Some buy the best, paying high prices, and others may be seen buying cows and other animals which are lying about, too weak to stand, or tottering with coughs and groans. Many have sores and many more have suspicious-looking swellings on their poor, lean bodies. Further search will show the distinction between the two classes of buyers, and this distinction is plain, for by far the greater part of the good meat goes to the slaughterhouses under Federal inspection, while the remainder goes by the carload to the "unofficial" houses in Brooklyn and surrounding country.

After arriving at these places the cattle are placed in large pens and watered and fed. Later one of the men goes out, opens a bar, and the cattle come into what is called the catch pen; and from this place they are taken to the killing room, where they are tied up and killed by a kosher cutter. The various parts of the animal are then examined by a kosher cutter or his assistant and are condemned if any flaw whatever is found, a whole cow being condemned sometimes simply because a small nail or piece of wire is found in its lung or stomach. The veterinarian does not see that which is retained by the inspector and is only shown that which is condemned.

When a Times reporter visited these slaughterhouses he went into the main cattle yard and examined the cows. It was practically impossible to keep a record of the animals which were bony and coughed, as they made up a greater part of the entire stock. At the first place entered there were two sick cows and an extremely lean and ill-looking bull calf were seen in the catch pens. They were slaughtered and passed, the veterinarian not being present to examine them. In the main yard the Times reporter saw a cow which attracted his attention because of its extreme thinness. The whole under part of the creature's stomach was covered with swellings bigger than a man's doubled fist. When the Times reporter visited the place later in the day this cow was missing, and it was learned that there had been no condemnations in his absence.

THE CITY INSPECTORS.

At the next place visited the killing for the day was almost over and only a few cows remained in the catch pen. One of these was a bony-looking, tan-colored cow, milked dry ages ago, and suffering from disease. She was killed. The inspector examined the glands about the tongue, passed the animal, and the last seen of it was when two halves of her carcass were whirled to the ice box. The lungs of this cow were condemned by the kosher killer, who found a piece of wire in them.

At the next place on the list the killing was almost done for the day. Several cows, however, remained to be slaughtered, and they were, with but one or two exceptions, as bad looking as those in the other places visited. There was an exception here, however, for one-half of the establishment is under Federal inspection and a veterinary surgeon is here all the time. In the side under his control all the cattle were splendid-looking steers, without a mark or blemish of any kind on them. After each killing the inspector went carefully over every part and made a minute examination of the lungs and backbone, as well as the glands of the neck. The offal could not be seen on the floor, and after each killing a laborer with a wire broom scrubbed the cement and flushed it with water.

At still another place there had been no condemnations. After the veterinarian left he heard that 10 calves were to be killed, and later the inspector in charge reported that there had been no condemnations.

The last place visited was at one time under Federal inspection, but so many of the cows were condemned that the owner gave up interstate trade and went under the city inspection. It was here that the Times reporter saw the greatest number of suspicious-looking cows and bulls. The main yards were almost full of cattle, and some of them were too weak to stand up. One cow whose condition was particularly noticeable was standing in the rear of the pen. The animal's flesh was simply drawn over its bones. She had a large swelling, which was broken open, on her right hind leg. She tottered back and forth and occasionally her head dropped and a film came over her eyes. Even the inspector with the reporter was moved to make some remarks at this point.

"There is a specimen of your Delaware County cattle," he said. "That is what they send to Jersey. We often condemn such an animal, but even if nothing is wrong with her, there should be some precaution against shipping such a creature. All that animal is fit for is to be killed on the farm and buried in the ground. That is what I call cruel and inhuman, but she will never get by us if she shows any sign of disease."

Other cows in the yard were in almost as bad condition, while the slaughterhouse itself was not as clean as the others visited. All the offal was thrown into a pile and some Italians could be seen picking up parts of it and carrying it away.

Upon again entering the slaughterhouse a shout went up from the kosher killer and a lung covered with a tubercular growth went skimming across the floor. The inspector caught it and showed it to the reporter. The entire lung was incased in big growths, while there was one harder growth on the right lung. When this growth was cut open it proved to be hardened mucus. The carcass of this animal was not condemned by the inspector on the floor, although the kosher killer refrained from placing his marks upon it.

THE BOLOGNA FACTORIES.

Much of the meat which is sold by the slaughterhouses in Brooklyn goes to the bologna and canning factories in this city, which are not under Government inspection. The Times reporter visited several of these places, as well as several under Government inspection. In the Government-inspected places the tables upon which the bologna was made consisted of cement and tile and takedown tables. Every day after the work of making the sausages is over these wooden takedown tables are taken apart and thoroughly washed.

The rooms are well lighted, and in every instance ventilated by modern ventilators. Each man has his own work cut out, and the man who washes the casings for the sausage is never allowed to touch the meat to be used in the sausage. Each employee's hands are examined. They must keep their finger nails clean, and are not allowed to enter any part of the building and work unless they have changed their clothes and have put on regulation white garments.

In the places under the municipal inspection the opposite conditions prevail. Many of the places visited by the Times reporter had their dressing rooms in the cellar, in many cases extending under the street. They were poorly lighted by gas, and the whole plant was on one floor, where the air was poor and the temperature extremely warm. No provision was made for the storage of the men's clothing, although they are made to wear white jumpers, as in the places under the Federal inspection. In one place there were hooks on the wall directly back of the tables used for stuffing the sausages, and from these hooks hung the clothing of the two workers.

In another place visited the reporter found the entire plant, with the exception of the refrigerator, located in the cellar. The tubs for pickling the meat were placed near the iron pot used for boiling the meat and were uncovered. The stuffing table was located directly under the gaslight and pipes leading to the upper part of the building, while the men's clothing hung exposed near the salt barrel used as a storage place for sausage casings while the salt is used to flavor the meat in the sausage. The meat to be used was also stored in an uncovered barrel near by and was infested with flies. The proprietor of this place said he got his meat from Brooklyn, "but didn't remember just where."

Another place on the same block was visited. Conditions were very much the same, with the exception that the meat to be used was not in the same room and two floors were occupied, these being the cellar and ground floor. Here three men were making bologna. A large quantity of cut meat was in a large wooden tank, and the makers of the sausage were vigorously stirring this with their arms.

Conditions were about the same in several other places in the same neighborhood, and which the Times reporter visited. In one place they had closed up for the day and departed leaving some of the chopped meat lying on the stuffing table.

THE MENACE TO HEALTH—FEDERAL AUTHORITIES POINT IT OUT—CITY UNABLE TO MEET PROBLEM.

Dr. A. D. Melvin, the Chief of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry at Washington, D. C., has repeatedly urged that steps be taken to make it possible for the State and city authorities to join the Federal authorities and agree to make the two inspections work in harmony. In urging this, Dr. Melvin says:

"It is estimated that a little more than one-half of the total meat supply of the United States comes under the inspection of the Federal Government. Most of the remainder receives no inspection whatever, while a portion of the remainder is subjected to a limited inspection by either the State or local officers.

"The Federal meat inspection system depends for its authority on what is known as the interstate and foreign commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States, and this inspection is therefore limited to the product of establishments that are engaged in interstate or foreign commerce. The Federal Government is powerless to exercise any supervision over an establishment the meat from which is slaughtered, prepared, or sold and consumed within a single State. It is a duty which the municipality owes its citizens to install and maintain a system of meat inspection that will afford adequate protection against diseased and unwholesome meat.

"Too often the local meat-inspection service, where it exists at all, does not provide for an inspection of great thoroughness, but consists merely in the inspection of the meat as it is offered for sale in the markets, with sometimes a sanitary supervision of the markets. Although such inspection has some value, it is far less important than the veterinary inspection of the carcass at the time of the slaughter. A skilled inspector can not always detect disease in meat after it has been dressed and the viscera disposed of. The most important requirement in meat inspection, therefore, is to protect the consumer against dangers from which he can not protect himself, and this can only be done by a class of inspection that is not often provided for by local authorities.

"Some idea of the need of more adequate local inspection may be obtained by considering the extent of the disease among live stock slaughtered for food and the insanitary condition under which much of the local meat supply is slaughtered and handled. Recent statistics show that nearly 2 per cent of the carcasses are affected with some disease or condition, making it necessary to condemn it either in whole or in part. We find that about 87 per cent of the condemnations of our bureau alone are due to tuberculosis.

"We find that about 1 per cent of the cattle and a little more than 2 per cent of the hogs slaughtered under Federal inspection have been affected by this disease to a greater or less extent. The establishments under Federal inspection draw a large proportion of their cattle from the ranges and feed lots of the West, where tuberculosis is rare, hence the percentage of this disease found in the Federal service is far below that which occurs in animals from the dairy regions where the disease is much more prevalent. It is estimated that at least 10 per cent of the dairy cows in this country are affected with tuberculosis, and it is a well-known fact that the dairy stock forms a much larger proportion of animals killed at small local slaughterhouses than at the large establishments under our inspection. The effect of the Federal inspection has been to cause the owners of diseased or suspicious looking animals to send them to an uninspected place rather than to one where they have to run a gauntlet of strict inspection.

THE DANGER TO HEALTH.

"For this reason it is certain that the percentage of disease is much higher among animals slaughtered at the small local places. Uninspected slaughterhouses, as a rule, have many features that are not only objectionable, but dangerous to health as well. The smell of the country slaughterhouse is proverbial, and the conditions at some of these places are inexpressibly foul and filthy. They are usually located in some out-of-the-way place, sometimes out of the corporate limits, often surrounded by stables, or even being a part of the stable itself. Such places are often the means of spreading disease, and it is frequently the custom to feed the offal to the hogs or to throw it where dogs, hogs, and rats have access to it. By this means trichinæ, tapeworms, and other animal parasites are spread, some of which are a menace to man. Hog cholera, tuberculosis, and other contagious diseases may also be spread by such conditions. Usually there is no protection for the meat against flies and other insects and vermin.

"The objectionable conditions are not confined to the little slaughterhouse in small communities. Even in the large cities there are big abattoirs which do a purely local business, and at which the conditions and methods are exceedingly insanitary, and where a very poor class of live stock is slaughtered. The local authorities must often deal with small, scattered, poorly equipped and very insanitary slaughterhouses, and it is sometimes out of the question to require the reconstruction of the buildings and the installation of expensive equipment in order to bring about a proper sanitary condition.

"The greatest difficulty of local inspection comes in dealing with the small isolated or scattered slaughterhouses. Such conditions make it advisable to concentrate the slaughtering in one place. All places of slaughter should be subject to inspection and regulation, and permitted only by license. If any uninspected meat is allowed to be sold, or if any slaughtering places are allowed to remain uninspected, it is a danger and a menace to the public. If an unscrupulous man wishes to dispose of diseased or suspicious-looking live stock, he will take it to an uninspected place, and if one man is allowed to run an uninspected slaughterhouse, there will be a great temptation for him to buy stock that would not pass at an inspected place, and thus a single exception may be the source of great danger to the health of the people."

STATE OFFICE POWERLESS.

Dr. U. G. Houck, the head of the New York office of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry, said to a Times reporter:

"The Jersey City Stock Yards are public yards, and we are powerless to prevent the inflow of diseased cattle so long as it goes to an uninspected slaughterhouse. We can not trace it to their places and the State inspectors can not do so either.

"The Times is on the right track and is showing just what we have always stood for, and that is that we should cooperate with the State and municipal authorities in the matter of meat inspection. If this was done this unhealthy meat would not find a market in this city.

"The houses under Federal inspection can not afford to get bad meat, as it is condemned at once. Our inspectors are all over and a man with five years' training is stationed on every killing floor in an official slaughterhouse and has to examine every piece of meat which passes from that floor. A cow is traced by us the very minute we think it is a suspect, and this animal is passed on from inspector to inspector until the post mortem examination is made and if it is then found that the carcass bears traces of disease it is tanked and made into fertilizer.

"Another important fact is that our men get a regular salary, whereas the veterinarian, who works for the city, is paid by the day. The regular inspector's duties take him to numerous places and leaves the slaughterhouse unguarded in case the owner is unscrupulous enough to desire to sell bad meat.

"There is nothing in our inspection which can prevent a man whose place is not under inspection from buying bob veal as live stock and then killing it, or to prevent him from buying cows or hogs which are diseased and killing them. We can prevent a man from shipping diseased meat out of the State, and I think we do it. Take bob veal. How many uninspected slaughterhouses have either the time or facilities for nursing a 3-day-old calf until it becomes 6 weeks old, and how many would if they did have? What is to prevent them from killing it or any bad cow or other animal they might have? The fault is with the law, not with the inspection or the State."

AFRAID OF FEDERAL INSPECTION.

Dr. Henry Long, the head of the Brooklyn office of the bureau, said:

"It is the unofficial slaughterhouses which receive all these bad cattle, and it is the unofficial bologna factories which buy this bad meat. Take this city, for instance. There are but 13 inspected places here; and although some of the others which are running now have asked for it, they found it cost too much and dropped it. There is one place near one of our inspected places which could not live up to our standard and is now running under municipal inspection.

"Of course, I can not say that there is graft among the municipal inspectors, but I can say that I do not believe there is any among our men. I know of a case where an inspector was dismissed simply because he accepted some cigars, and I know of another case where one of our men was dismissed simply because he borrowed $10 from a packer who was a personal friend. Probably both these men were honest, but they were dismissed because their actions might be used as evidence against them. You see, they can not take a chance.

"Of course, it is impossible to prevent some bad cattle from going to a slaughterhouse which comes under our inspection. Sometimes the healthiest looking steer or cow is decaying with tuberculosis and you never suspect it until the animal is cut open. The same condition applys to the poorest looking bandbox, and it often happens that a cow which we have suspected from the start shows absolutely no signs of disease when put through a post-mortem examination.

LEDERLE HAS TOO FEW MEN.

Dr. Ernst J. Lederle, the head of the board of health, said:

"Our inspection is as far-reaching as we can make it, but is not so far-reaching as we would wish. I believe that our inspection is as complete as it can be under the circumstances, and that it has improved wonderfully in the past two years. We follow as closely as possible that of the Government, but you can see how absurd it is for us to attempt to do with less than 100 men what the Government does with 200 or over.

"With the few men we have to inspect all sorts of conditions in the city, whereas all the Government men have to do is to watch slaughterhouses and bologna factories. We have added considerable to our force, but can not add more, as we have not the appropriation. Personally, I believe it would be a very good thing if the Government took all the slaughterhouses out of our hands."

Dr. Walter Bensel, who is in charge of the department of meat inspection and sanitary superintendent under Dr. Lederle, said:

"We do the very best we can, and our inspection has improved greatly in the last year or so. We have six men in Brooklyn, besides three competent veterinarians. Each slaughterhouse has one of our men on the killing floor, and he is made directly responsible for everything, and must report regularly to the veterinarian in charge of his district. These inspectors are changed each month, and in this manner they are not allowed to become too familiar with the abattoir owners.

"As to the inspection of bologna factories, we have done some very good work along this line, and are making stricter and stricter rules each day. We have practically forced them to abandon the old cellar factories which existed all over before we took a hand, and have also attempted to have them do away with artificial light. Owing to the fact that many of these houses are under the exempt clause in the Federal law, the Government inspectors can refuse to give them inspection unless they abide by every rule set down in the Federal law. All these places which the Government refuses to inspect are thrust upon us and only add to the work we are conducting. Many of the places under our inspection are too poor to afford to take up the improvements suggested by the Government, but so far as sanitary conditions go, I think we run the bigger houses a very close race."

George A. Woods, supervising inspector of food in the department of health, says that fully 25 per cent of the dairy herds in this country have tuberculosis, and that he and his men have waged a hard fight against the practice of having these cows thrust upon the public for food. He pointed out that the department of health was absolutely powerless to stop this unless the special agent for the State did his duty to the final letter.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 18985) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] calls up the pension appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Are there any Senate amendments?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; and I will ask that the Clerk report the action of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
August 14, 1912.

Resolved, That the Senate still further insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 18985) "Making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," Nos. 9, 10, and 11, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

That the Senate recedes from its amendment No. 5.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said House amendment, insert the following:

"For salaries of 18 agents for the payment of pensions, at the rate of $4,000 per annum each, during the first seven months of the fiscal year 1913, $42,000.

"For salary of 1 disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions, to be selected and appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at the rate of $4,000 per annum, during the last five months of the fiscal year 1913, $1,666.67; and from and after the 31st day of January, 1913, there shall be 1 disbursing clerk in the Bureau of Pensions to be appointed as aforesaid and who shall receive a salary at the rate of $4,000 per annum; and section 4778 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the appointment of agents for the payment of pensions, and section 4780 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the establishment of agencies by the President of the United States are hereby repealed to take effect from and after the 31st day of January, 1913, and the existing pension agencies are abolished from and after said date."

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said House amendment insert the following:

"For clerk hire, and other services, at 18 pension agencies during the first seven months of the fiscal year 1913 and in the office of the disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions during the last five months of the fiscal year 1913 and including not exceeding $10,000 for expenses of consolidating and removing records and equipment of pension agencies, $375,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That estimates in detail shall be submitted for the fiscal year 1914 and annually thereafter for clerks and others employed in the office of the disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions and the amounts to be paid to each."

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said House amendment, insert the following:

"For rent of pension agency at New York, N. Y., during the first seven months of the fiscal year 1913, $2,479.17, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer the motion which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the House agree to the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 2, 3, and 4.

Mr. BORLAND. There is another part, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER. If they are separate motions they had better be considered separately.

Mr. BORLAND. I think we had better have them all read as one motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rest of it, then, and the Chair will decide.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the House recede from its adherence to its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 9, 10, and 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendments insert the following:

"SEC. 5. That in case of sickness or unavoidable absence of the disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions from his office, the Commissioner of Pensions may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, authorize the chief clerk of his office or some other clerk employed therein to temporarily act as such disbursing clerk for payment of pensions."

With the approval of the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior, the disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions may designate and authorize the necessary number of clerks to sign the name of the disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions to official checks.

The disbursing clerk shall give bond with good and sufficient surety for such amount and in such form as the Secretary of the Interior may approve, and such bond shall be held to cover and apply to the acts of the persons authorized to act in his place.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, this closes a controversy which has existed between the two branches of Congress for many years, and brings it, as we believe, to a complete and satisfactory termination. The last time this matter was before the House, about a week ago, the House adhered to its amendments to the Senate, continuing the pension agencies in existence only to the 31st of December, 1912, and made the necessary appropriation for such continuance, and provided for discontinuance of the agencies at that time.

This proposition differs from that in two respects. First, it continues the pension agencies for 30 days longer, to enable them to be entirely wound up and withdrawn, and makes all pension agencies pass out of existence on the 31st of January, 1913. Second, instead of abolishing 17 pension agencies, or 17 political appointees, it abolishes 18 pension agencies and 18 political fat jobs, and places the payment of pensions, as it should be, and as it has been repeatedly recommended to be, in the hands of a disbursing clerk in the Department of Pensions at Washington.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. My recollection is that under existing law there are about 300 clerks in the various pension agencies of the country. What provision is made for the retention or transfer of these clerks to Washington if this amendment is agreed to?

Mr. BORLAND. I will say that under the civil-service law these pension clerks are eligible to transfer either to other departments or to the Pension Department at Washington, where their services will probably be needed. Probably the latter will be done. There is no special provision necessary in this bill to meet that point.

Mr. AUSTIN. Are you going to impose upon the present clerical force in the Pension Bureau the work now performed by these 300 clerks without increasing the force or providing for a transfer?

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from Tennessee will recognize that we are not going to impose on anybody. We are going to improve the service in the interest of the taxpayers of the country. Ample provision will be made for the clerks in the department at Washington to handle the business.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask the gentleman a direct question: If you are going to have the present clerical force in the Pension Bureau at Washington do the work now performed by these 300 clerks in the pension agencies?

Mr. BORLAND. No; it could not be done. The present force in the Pension Office is under one appropriation, and this bill carries another appropriation for the special purpose to pay the pensions if they are paid at Washington.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. CANNON. Under the proposed amendment will it cut off all cash payments direct to pensioners?

Mr. BORLAND. No.

Mr. CANNON. Heretofore I have in mind where there are several thousand on the average of pensioners in the various national soldiers' homes who heretofore have been paid directly by the treasurer of the home. Will the condition continue or may it continue?

Mr. BORLAND. That provision is continued. The gentleman from Illinois understands the proposition as it went through the Appropriations Committee, which was that all pensions hereafter should be made by voucher checks. We made the provision in the original bill. The check was universal in operation, but amendments were inserted in the Senate at the request of the Commissioner of Pensions giving him discretion in certain cases to pay by the old-fashioned voucher method. One of the necessities for that was in the case of foreign pensioners and pensioners incompetent and under guardianship and pensioners in the homes. So there will be no change of the method of paying pensions in the homes, but they will be paid by cash, as they are now. But the great bulk of pensioners will not have to execute a voucher and send it back to the pension agent for corrections, but they will get a voucher check direct from Washington.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman's answer is satisfactory.

Mr. BORLAND. This provision has been recommended by the Commissioner of Pensions, not only in the interest of economy of the public service, but in the interest of the pensioners themselves. The evidence before the committee has demonstrated, and the debate has demonstrated, that the check will go to the old soldier from 2 to 15 days earlier when this plan is put into operation than it ever did before in the history of pensions. In addition to that the checks will be such that they can cash them at the local store or the local bank by simply having witnesses to the signature. So the old soldiers themselves are the chief beneficiaries of the change. And yet, in spite of all that, I am free to say that the membership of this House, and more particularly the Democratic membership, because they have led off in the reform demanded—the House of Representatives—have been the recipients of great pressure from every source, on the ground that they were holding out against the interest of the old soldier.

When this bill was passed it was the second appropriation bill that went through the House. It was passed on the 2d of February, 1912, and it provided that this plan should go into operation on the 1st of July, 1912. There was no delay in the House of Representatives, but by delay which did not occur in this body no appropriation bill for pensions was passed until the 1st day of July had passed. We then made provision to extend the appropriation to cover the 30 days following the 1st day of July, and still no bill was passed; and finally this House, in order that the closing hours might not be reached with a disagreement in conference on hand, adhered to its original resolution instructing your conferees to stand for the abolition of the pension agencies. Then the question became acute as to whether certain politicians could defend these political $4,000-a-year jobs, or whether they would give to the old soldiers their pension. They held back as long as they dared to. When they found that the extension of the appropriations would only pay 50 per cent, then they began to hold back pensions in the Democratic districts and paid all over Indiana, Ohio, and Missouri wherever districts were represented by Republicans, and where it was represented by a Democrat there have been no pensions paid.

Mr. AUSTIN. If the gentleman will pardon me, who has been holding back the pensions?

Mr. BORLAND. The agents. The agent at Topeka, for example, makes draft on the subtreasury at St. Louis, and he prepares the checks and sends them out himself.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is it not a fact that partial payments have been made at these agencies with all the funds available, and when the funds were exhausted payments ceased? I understand that vouchers have been paid beginning with the names alphabetically, and then when the money ran out payment stopped.

Mr. BORLAND. No; that is not the fact.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the case at the Topeka agency, my information is.

Mr. BORLAND. That is not the fact. The fact is that a gentleman in my district named Dewey did not get his check, although it was claimed that these payments were made down to A, B, C, and D, and that other gentlemen in other districts paid from the Topeka office whose names began with lower letters did get their checks.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to say to the gentleman that the first district of Kansas is a pretty good Republican district, and my old soldiers have been clamoring for their pensions, so I hardly believe there has been any distinction along party lines.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. All of this delay has been occasioned because of the dispute over the proposition that these pension agencies should be abolished.

Mr. BORLAND. That is correct.

Mr. BUTLER. And that is a piece of legislation.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. And it is found on one of the regular appropriation bills of this House.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; but we met that question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I listened with a good deal of astonishment to the statement of the gentleman from Missouri that pensions were being held up only in districts represented by Democratic Members.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman has made the statement a little too broad.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is the way the statement was understood upon the floor of the House.

Mr. BORLAND. That is to a large extent true.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does the gentleman now desire to make a modification of his statement?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I do not desire to modify it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will state to the gentleman that the district that I represent is not represented by a Democrat, and there have been no pensions paid there any more than there have in the district represented by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BORLAND. Have there been no pensions paid there?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, I would not say not any; but there have been the same complaints from that district that there have been from other districts.

Mr. BORLAND. How does the gentleman know the extent of the complaints from other districts like the Indiana districts?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I know the extent of the complaints from my district. I came in personal contact with the soldiers within the past three weeks, and the complaint was universal among them.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. I yield for a question.

Mr. MANN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that in paying pensions the Pension Office, or any other place, was discriminating between districts represented by a Democrat and districts represented by a Republican on the floor of this House?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman have any basis for his statement, has he any proof of any such fact?

Mr. BORLAND. I have the ordinary proof that leads men to act and convinces them of ordinary facts, that the complaints of nonpayment of pensions have been more numerous in Democratic districts than they have been in Republican districts, and that up to the 4th day of August there was no question but that there were ample funds to pay all of the pensions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield to me for that purpose, I desire to say that the gentleman has not made up any case by any proof, and that he has no warrant——

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield to the gentleman for a statement.

Mr. MANN. For his statement, which is without foundation in fact.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BORLAND. I decline to yield to the gentleman for a statement.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me to have time, very well; but the gentleman ought not to make a statement of that sort and then decline to yield to have it denied.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MANN. Long enough to make that statement, if the gentleman will yield.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will yield to the gentleman when I conclude this statement, if he desires time and asks me for it. I will then yield him time to discuss the proposition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I yield for a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the Philadelphia pension agent is not a Democrat; that many people have been clamoring for their pensions during the last few weeks, and that one old soldier, despairing of receiving his money, committed suicide last week?

Mr. BORLAND. I am not aware of that fact.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the fact.

Mr. BORLAND. But I am aware of the fact that numerous old soldiers have written to the pension agents, to the Commissioner of Pensions, and to various publications, claiming various cases of hardship and distress through the nonpayment of pensions, all of which we would have been glad to avoid and all of which was due to a stubborn attempt to preserve 17 political jobs in the hands of 17 political chiefs.

I now want to answer the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] as to whether this was not embodied in an appropriation bill. We met that question in another body. It was embodied in an appropriation bill, and this House stands committed to the Holman rule that all legislation is proper, embodied in an appropriation bill, which tends to reduce the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that.

Mr. BORLAND. And it does not lie in any other body to question a point of order that could not have been raised in the House where the appropriation originated. We have a perfect right, by our control over appropriation bills, to reduce the expenses of the Government, to abolish offices, and to change, in the direction of economy, all the machinery of the Government; and we stand upon that principle, as opposed to gentlemen upon the other side

Mr. BUTLER. I shall be glad to concede the power of the majority. I only wanted to know how it was observed.

Mr. BORLAND. There is no question but that this same reform was put into this same appropriation bill by a Republican House in the Fifty-ninth, Sixtieth, and Sixty-first Congresses.

Mr. BUTLER. That is true.

Mr. BORLAND. The only difference between us and the gentlemen over there, after having voted it, is that they have yielded their judgment to a superior judgment somewhere else and put the pension agencies in the bill again.

Mr. BUTLER. But there was no delay on those occasions by reason of the dispute over this question.

Mr. BORLAND. No; and there was no economy, either. There was no victory.

Mr. BUTLER. The old soldiers will deal with that question.

Mr. BORLAND. There was no delay because there was no surrender on the part of the Senate, and there would have been no delay in this bill if that body had surrendered earlier.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The question is——

Mr. HILL. No; it is not. [Laughter.] I was sitting in my seat and I heard the gentleman make a statement which I did not think he should have made, that preference was made by the bureau in favor of Republican districts as against Democratic districts in paying these pensions. Now, that charge ought not to be made unless it is proven. I have telephoned to the bureau, and it is absolutely and emphatically denied as unworthy of consideration, and I believe the gentleman is fair enough to retract it unless he has got the proof. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BORLAND. Why, the gentleman is certainly fair enough to retract it if he had any better proof than a telephone conversation with some clerk in the bureau, and I think——

Mr. HILL. It was not with a clerk; it was with the head of the bureau.

Mr. BORLAND. I think the gentleman ought to know that the Pension Department here has nothing to do with the payment of pensions. Pensions are paid by the agents in the districts. The Pension Department, therefore, has no possible information on the subject.

Pension agents are active politically against this change because 17 or 18 political jobs will pass out of existence; $68,000 will be saved which is now distributed to political henchmen. No man claims that these pension agents discharge the duties personally; they do not even sign the checks personally. All the work is done by clerks, and yet it is contended here in some way or other that the payment of these pensions as done by these agents is a matter of economy to the Government. It is not. The contention is that agencies are located in small towns where the salaries are less and they work the men harder. We computed the cost of paying the pensioners in the Topeka office and found the average salary was $1,230 a year, not including the pension agent himself, so there is absolutely nothing in the question of the salary list being lower in Topeka than in Washington. In Knoxville it is $1,215 a year, and that is one of the most economical agencies in the whole country.

Mr. ANTHONY. How does the gentleman reconcile the statement that the abolition of the pension agencies where it costs the Government much less to pay the men than in Washington? Why, as a measure of economy, not allow those pension agencies that are run economically to continue?

Mr. BORLAND. I am trying to tell the gentleman.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Topeka agency costs the Government 42 cents, and I understand it is 55 in Washington.

Mr. BORLAND. I think the gentleman will have to investigate that question a little further. I think there are about 30 employees in the Topeka office and I think you will find the average annual salary is $1,230. I think you will find that statements have been made on the floor of another body that the annual salary is put at $990 in——

Mr. ANTHONY. But I am talking about the cost of paying pensions. Does not the gentleman admit that the Topeka agency costs less per capita than any other office?

Mr. BORLAND. No; the gentleman has gotten himself wrong about that. There is no excuse, when it is boiled down, for the existence of these 17 or 18 agencies except politics.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does the gentleman dispute the correctness of the Commissioner of Pensions on this subject?

Mr. BORLAND. My colleague, Mr. BARTLETT, put into the RECORD a complete statement of the number of clerks in each agency, the salary paid them, and if you take a pencil and a piece of paper and figure it out you will see that you can come at the exact result.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think the gentleman is in error in regard to the average salary at the Knoxville agency, because we went thoroughly into that subject when we had an opportunity to discuss it and had a report from the Commissioner of Pensions as to the number of clerks and salaries paid them.

Mr. BORLAND. If you will take the hearings in regard to the Knoxville agency, 20 clerks, at a total salary of $24,300, the average is $1,215——

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman from Missouri is talking about the matter of clerks; I am talking about what it costs the Government to pay each pensioner. I have seen the report where it shows it costs the Government less at some agencies than it does in Washington.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is entirely wrong about it; it costs a great deal more. There is the transmitting of checks and records to the United States agency. It is the sending of pension vouchers to be recorded, it is the duplication of clerical work, it is the correspondence which goes forward between the agencies, the supplying of stationery, travel, inspection of the agencies, and in some cases rent; so there is not a single solitary item where it is not less, including clerk hire.

Now I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have voted consistently and on numerous occasions to abolish the pension agencies, and I shall do so again by voting for the motion of the gentleman from Missouri. It is unfortunate, however, that the gentleman from Missouri, who was absent during the critical period of this controversy, should undertake this morning to inject partisan bias into the proposition and to make the charge upon the floor of the House, libelous in character and without any foundation in fact. Mr. Speaker, no one should state that in the administration of the Pension Office discrimination is made between the Republican and Democratic pensioners or between pensioners living in Republican or Democratic districts unless he has a foundation of fact. No one believes the statement, in my judgment, not even the gentleman who made it. It would be impossible for the Pension Office, under the system in vogue in the payment of pensions, to make a discrimination if it desired, because the Pension Office on the pension rolls has no method of determining in what district a pensioner lives.

The gentleman who throws out that statement—unworthy of him, unworthy of any Member of the House—ought to retract it without question and without qualification. [Applause on the Republican side.] The administration of the Pension Office in this city has excited the admiration of both Republicans and Democrats, on both sides of the aisle, and it is the first time I have heard any man charge that in the administration of that office men thought first of partisanship, and last of patriotism. That office has always been conducted on the theory of patriotism, not partisanship.

Mr. Speaker, the other day the House had its attention called to the pension appropriation bill in the absence of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], and it was discovered that the bill providing for the payment of this money was still in the possession of the House conferees, when under the practice of all legislative bodies those papers should have been in the possession of the Senate conferees. At once the papers were sent to the Senate conferees. The Senate took action. The papers came back to the House. The House moved that it would agree to the Senate amendments with certain amendments. Before that was done, among others of the House I was consulted. The action was taken by the House in the absence of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], who makes these unfounded, scandalous charges against the Pension Office, and hence he deserves no mercy in a debate in the House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman and I agreed on the abolishment of the pension agencies. But the gentleman will not make the statement that I have made any charge against the Pension Office.

Mr. MANN. I am glad to have the gentleman make that statement.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from Illinois knows as well as I do that the payments are made by the pension agents whose jobs are at stake.

Mr. MANN. I know very well that the pension agencies are conducted in the same manner as the Pension Office, which first issues the papers from here, and the pension agencies do not know in what congressional district the pensioners live, and the gentleman from Missouri knows that.

The House, after insisting upon its amendments, sent the bill to the Senate. The Senate insisted upon its amendments without agreeing to the amendments of the House, and asked for a conference. The bill came back to the House, and still, in the absence of the gentleman from Missouri who makes this charge, the House adhered to its position and declined to agree to the conference.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is wrong about that also. The gentleman from Missouri made the motion to adhere.

Mr. MANN. Then, I am wrong about that.

Now, I am in favor of the position that the House has taken on this matter for years, both Republican and Democratic Houses, of abolishing the pension agencies and paying the pensioners directly from Washington, without the red tape that has delayed the payment of pensions for years. I wish the reform went still further than it does. I believe that a pensioner ought to receive his check, which he can cash as easily as the check a man receives for interest on bonds of the Government held by him. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer an amendment. I have a preferential motion.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the floor, have I not?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I dislike to cut off the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], but——

Mr. MANN. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if the gentleman from Kansas desires to make a preferential motion, he can not be cut off.

The SPEAKER. Of course, he can not, if that is what he proposes to do.

Mr. MANN. That is what he said he desired to do.

Mr. BORLAND. My motion, Mr. Speaker, is to agree to the resolution I have introduced, and upon that I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] demands the previous question. The Chair would inquire if the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] has a preferential motion?

Mr. ANTHONY. I believe I have. I want to make a motion to nonconcur.

The SPEAKER. That is not a preferential motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I wish to offer a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not offer a substitute of that character, that would take precedence over the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to concur.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that if the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to agree to the Senate amendments be disagreed to, the gentleman from Kansas would then have the right to offer a motion to nonconcur.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas must state his motion before anybody can tell whether he has any right or not.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, that the House nonconcur in the report of the conference committee, with an amendment——

The SPEAKER. That motion is not a preferential motion. There are three motions that can be made, one of them to nonconcur, one to concur, and one to concur with an amendment. The motion to concur with an amendment is preferential over the motion to concur, and the motion to concur is preferential over the other. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] is a preferential motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to concur with an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Concur in what?

Mr. ANTHONY. To concur in the report of the committee with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. What is the amendment?

Mr. ANTHONY. With an amendment that the committee further report a provision abolishing all pension agencies except the one at Topeka, Kans., and that all pensioners east of the Mississippi River be paid from Washington, D. C., and all west of the Mississippi River be paid from Topeka, Kans.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not make a speech——

Mr. FOSTER. I make the point of order that the gentleman must first reduce his motion to writing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion is to concur with an amendment that all the pension agencies except the one at Topeka, Kans., be abolished.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. What point of order does the gentleman make?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the first place, the gentleman moves to concur in the report of the conferees, and there is no conference report before the House. The gentleman must put his motion in such an intelligible form that the Chair can pass upon it. There are a number of amendments here. If the gentleman can not state the particular amendment in which he wishes to concur with an amendment, he can not get his motion before the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I consider that the motion as made is sufficiently intelligible to be passed upon by the House. The Chair stated it correctly.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my demand for the previous question to allow the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] to make his motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BORLAND, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

THE HOME OF THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 24.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint a committee of five members of the Senate, to act in cooperation with a similar committee to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to inquire into the wisdom and ascertain the cost of acquiring Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson, as the property of the United States, that it may be preserved for all time in its entirety for the American people.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that the report is not privileged.

Mr. NORRIS. It is no report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois raises the point of order that the motion is not privileged.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules is privileged to make a privileged report on the rules of the House or joint rules or order of business. I do not think this is any one of the three.

The Speaker has held heretofore that unless the matter was privileged, although it might be referred to the committee and the committee might have authority to report it, it could not come in as a privileged matter. That ruling was made by the Speaker when the Committee on Rules reported a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] concerning a good-roads commission. While the committee had the authority to report the resolution, because it had been referred to them, they had no authority to bring it up as a privileged matter.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Let me suggest to the gentleman that the reason that resolution was not privileged was that it carried an appropriation of $25,000.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; that was not the reason. The reason was that the Committee on Rules had no privilege under the rules to report the resolution as a privileged matter. The rules provide what the Committee on Rules may report at any time. Any resolution which is referred to the Committee on Rules is a resolution on which the committee has the right to report, and it is too late to make the point of order after the resolution is reported; but the Committee on Rules has the right to report at any time—and that is what carries the privilege—only those matters which relate to the order of business or the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is very much inclined to sustain the point of order. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] has any authority or argument the Chair will be glad to hear it. Does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I desire to be heard, Mr. Speaker. The Committee on Rules is appointed for the purpose of considering just such questions as this—to pass on the proposition as to whether or not committees or joint committees between the Senate and the House shall be created.

The reason that the resolution referred to, introduced by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], was held to be nonprivileged was that it carried an appropriation of $25,000. This resolution does not carry any appropriation, and it is one of the functions of the Committee on Rules to pass on just such questions as this, and under the very language of the rule this is made privileged, because it creates a joint select committee for the balance of this Congress.

If the gentleman makes the point of order, there is no difficulty in getting the matter before the House, because the Committee on Rules can promptly bring in a rule to take up this matter immediately and consider it. So it is just as broad as it is long, and there is not the slightest difficulty about it.

Mr. NORRIS. In that case, while I admit that the gentleman could do it, the House would have first to pass on the rule which the committee brought in to see whether they would consider it or not; but in this case you bring it directly before the House.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. If the question is privileged, there is nothing for the House to pass on except your proposition. If you brought in a special rule, we would first vote on that.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, as far as the Committee on Rules is concerned, we will find a way to get the resolution before the House. This is one of the very things for which the Committee on Rules is constituted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is quite true that the Committee on Rules may report a rule for the consideration of any bill pending in the House. As far as that matter goes, they can report a resolution to consider a bill that was never introduced; they can report a rule for the consideration of anything, but all they can do is to report the rule. It has no vitality until the House has passed upon it.

Now, the Committee on Rules could have reported a rule to consider the Underwood resolution for the appointment of a good-roads commission. I have wondered on numerous occasions why they did not report such a rule, but they have not, although they reported the resolution as privileged, and the Speaker held that it was not privileged and it went on the calendar, where it remains until the Rules Committee is reached on Calendar Wednesday or until they get it up in some other manner. This is in the same category.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to read a rule, which I think is very plain and settles this question.

It shall always be in order to call up for consideration a report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. From what is the gentleman reading?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I am reading from page 359 of the Constitution, Manual, and Digest. It is a part of Rule XI. Now, Mr. Speaker, here is a report from the Committee on Rules, and the Committee on Rules has a right to report upon anything within its jurisdiction whenever it seems proper. It may report it from the floor of the House or put the report in the basket and let it go on the calendar. This resolution passed through the Senate by unanimous consent, and after coming to the House was referred to the Committee on Rules for a report. The Committee on Rules has considered it and acted, and decided that it ought to be reported favorably, and now we come here with that favorable report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to have the gentleman from Texas read subdivision 47 of Rule XI.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will read it:

All proposed action touching the rules, joint rules, and order of business shall be referred to the Committee on Rules.

That refers to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rules. Now, on that the Committee on Rules can take action in regard to the rules of this House and joint rules for select committees, but that does not go to their power to report upon this matter. There has not been any disposition to limit the power of the Committee on Rules to take action on investigations that have come before this House, questions where standing committees are to make them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman if the question of investigating something or other by the House under a House resolution does not distinctly fall within the prerogative set forth in subdivision 47, and that is differentiated from this in the fact that this resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules in the usual course of business, and whether or not it does not stand on the same footing as if it had been referred to the Committee on the Library?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. No; because there is nothing to be done by the Committee on Rules. When they are referred to the Committee on Rules, sometimes no additional power is asked for and no change is to be made in the rule, except the mere ordering of the investigation.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Not at present. Nothing is to be done except to report on the method of procedure. Nothing is to be had or taken from the rules of the House, and the question is whether the committee shall be directed to proceed with the investigation. Why, Mr. Speaker, if the Committee on Rules can not report at any time on these privileged questions the rules ought to be changed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair allow me to refer to a precedent before he rules? In the preceding Congress the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], then a member of the Committee on Rules, reported to the House a resolution—I have forgotten what it was about—and the then Speaker of the House, my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], was on the Committee on Rules and helped to order that resolution reported. The gentleman from Pennsylvania made the report, and I made the point of order that the report was not privileged; that while the committee could make the report, they could not call it up except as any other bill was called up.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania read to Speaker CANNON the same rule which the gentleman from Texas has now read:

It shall always be in order to call up for consideration a report from the Committee on Rules.

He read this, I remember, with considerable glee, just as the gentleman from Texas has read it with some glee, thinking that that settled the question. But the Speaker ruled, and not only the Speaker ruled, but he was advised by the best parliamentarian that has ever been near this Chamber, that the report of the Committee on Rules, in order to make it privileged, must be a privileged report under the rules, and that it had no right to call up at any time a report from that committee except it be a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair rules that the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is well taken, and will give the reason for the ruling. In subdivision 56 of Rule XI, on page 357 of the Manual and Digest, the matters which are privileged in reports of committees are set out:

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, namely: The Committee on Rules is privileged to report rules, joint rules, and order of business.

That is all the Committee on Rules is privileged to report on at any time. The Chair will give an illustration. There are certain committees which have the right to report at any time on certain things. For instance, the Committee on Appropriations is privileged to report general appropriation bills, but it is not privileged to report a special appropriation bill, and, as a matter of fact, the chairman of that committee, Mr. FITZGERALD, has asked several times unanimous consent to consider bills from his committee, because he knew that they were not privileged, and so did the Chair.

The Committee on Ways and Means is privileged to report revenue bills, but every bill that it reports is not privileged. While the present occupant of the chair was a member of that committee, the committee must have reported 50 bills into the House which were not privileged, such as making a port of entry out of some place or abolishing a port of entry, which latter, however, we never succeeded in doing. The course of procedure in cases of this sort is for these reports to go into the box. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] can do exactly what he said he can do. He can get his committee together and bring in a rule to pass this bill, and, as he said himself, it is nearly as broad as it is long; but, nevertheless and notwithstanding, the Chair must enforce the rules of the House.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I was merely trying to shorten the agony. I will ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not have to object. That request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] is also against the rules of the House.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will indulge me, I will be very glad to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I merely wanted to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if the other side of this proposition have had a chance to be heard?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Very thoroughly.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the committee, and not for the House.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Has that report been printed?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It has not.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 7650. An act for the relief of L. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley;

H. R. 16191. An act to convey certain real estate in the village of Jonesville, Hillsdale County, Mich.; and

H. R. 22002. An act supplementing the joint resolution of Congress approved April 30, 1908, entitled "Joint resolution instructing the Attorney General to institute certain suits," and so forth.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 25531. An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 21094. An act to create a Commission on Industrial Relations.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1154. An act for the relief of F. W. Theodore Schroeter;

S. 7267. An act waiving the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy in the case of Evan Urner Rinehart;

S. 7461. An act construing the provisions of section 8 of the act entitled "An act to improve the efficiency of the personnel of the Revenue-Cutter Service," approved April 16, 1908; and

S. J. Res. 132. Joint resolution providing for an American commission for the investigation of rural credits in Europe.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 1154. An act for the relief of F. W. Theodore Schroeter; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 7267. An act waiving the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy in the case of Evan Urner Rinehart; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 7461. An act construing the provisions of section 8 of the act entitled "An act to improve the efficiency of the personnel of the Revenue-Cutter Service," approved April 16, 1908; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. J. Res. 132. Joint resolution providing for an American commission for the investigation of rural credits in Europe; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SPEECHES OF HON. THERON AKIN, OF NEW YORK.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the privileged report of the special committee appointed to investigate and report in relation to striking certain language used by the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri calls up a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report. (H. Res. 690; H. Rept. 1192.)

The Clerk read as follows:

The special committee appointed to consider certain "Extensions of remarks" printed in the RECORD of August 8 and August 10, 1912, under leave to print, by THERON AKIN, a Representative from the State of New York, submit the following report:

The committee having considered the said "Extensions of remarks," and having heard Mr. AKIN concerning the same, are of opinion and find that the printing of the said "Extensions of remarks" in the RECORD constitutes an abuse of the privilege to print granted by the House. The said "Extensions of remarks" contain personal imputations upon Members of the House and reflections upon officers of the executive department of the Government which amount to charges of inefficiency and misconduct, and in some respects are libelous in character. The committee can not believe that in granting leave to print remarks the House of Representatives intended to permit its RECORD to be made a vehicle for personal attacks upon Members of the House, upon officers of the Government, or upon private citizens. The committee report the following resolution and recommend its passage by the House:

Resolved, That the "Extensions of remarks" by THERON AKIN, printed on pages 11344, 11345, 11346, and 11347 of the RECORD of August 8, 1912, and on pages 11548, 11549, 11550, 11551, 11552, and 11553 of the RECORD of August 10, 1912, be, and the same hereby are, ordered expunged from the RECORD.

W. W. RUCKER.
ROBERT N. PAGE.
SAMUEL W. MCCALL.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I understand that some debate upon this report is desirable. I therefore ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to one hour, of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] shall control 30 minutes, and that the remaining 30 minutes may be controlled by myself.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that 40 minutes will be ample time for that.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. But the gentleman from New York desires 30 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand; but there are matters of pressing importance coming up in the House to-day, and 40 minutes is ample time in which to discuss the matter.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for unanimous consent that debate on this report may be limited to one hour, of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] shall control 30 minutes, the other 30 minutes to be controlled by mysef.

Mr. MANN. And that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object. I suggest that at this stage of the session, with matters coming before the House to-day of very great importance, 40 minutes should be ample time to devote to the matter under consideration.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, I will say that 15 minutes will be as much time as I desire to consume, but the gentleman from New York asked for 30 minutes, and I desire that he shall have that much time accorded him.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that very likely a message from the President will come to the House in a few moments——

Mr. MANN. It is now on its way here.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is now on its way here, the gentleman from Illinois informs me, and to take the time suggested to discuss a question of the kind under consideration is too much.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I will modify my request and ask unanimous consent that debate may be limited to 40 minutes, of which the gentleman from New York may have 25 minutes and the balance to be controlled by myself, and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that debate on this resolution shall be limited to 40 minutes, 15 minutes of which he shall control and 25 minutes of which shall be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN], and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, as there are only 15 minutes of time under my control, and as several gentlemen have expressed a desire to consume some of that time, I shall use only a moment or two in which to say that your committee unanimously report the conclusion that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD ought not to be used as a vehicle through which to disseminate over the country personal abuse of Members of Congress, of Government officials, or of private citizens.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I believe the resolution covers two speeches inserted by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Does the first one of those speeches cast any reflection upon any Member of Congress?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I was about to answer that question before it was propounded. The first speech, the one inserted in the RECORD, I believe, on August 8, I think does not contain any personal abuse of Members of the House.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Yet the committee has recommended that it be expunged.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Yes; because under the leave to print the gentleman, it seems, abused the confidence of the House and used language which severely criticizes and characterizes a distinguished official of the Government, the Secretary of Agriculture, which language would likely not have been used in actual debate; and if used, would probably have been challenged by some gentleman upon the floor.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Does not the chairman of this committee think that the criticism of the officer of the Government referred to was fairly reasonable?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I do not think so.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I do not ask him whether he thinks the facts stated are true, but does he not think that the criticism is fairly reasonable?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I can not yield any further. The view of the committee is, that no Member of this House, under a leave to print, ought to avail himself of the opportunity to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and thus spread over the country matter derogatory to the character and official conduct of high officials of the Government. I do not believe it ought to be done, and if it is necessary to establish a precedent to prevent such conduct in the future I for one am willing that the precedent shall be established here and now in this case.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not consume any more time as others desire to use the little time at my disposal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAKER). The gentleman reserves the balance of his time, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] for 25 minutes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri one question.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have no time to answer questions, as I am compelled to yield to others. Otherwise I would be very glad to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, not over a half an hour ago the gentleman from Kansas sent a newspaper communication up to the desk and had it read, and I want to ask you fairly and squarely if that was not for the purpose of libeling Theodore Roosevelt, a private citizen? [Applause.] A Member of Congress is responsible to his constituents for his votes and his speeches, and I do not think, from my view or standpoint, that it is within the province of his associates to censure his remarks and determine what he shall or shall not say.

I, for one, would like to know where the line is to be drawn. Will you condemn a few sentences and tolerate the balance of a speech? If you assume the power and right to expunge from the RECORD my remarks, why should you stop there? Why not expunge from the RECORD the unjust attack of Representative Moss upon me some little time ago? Why not remove from the permanent RECORD the speeches of Representatives MONDELL, BARTHOLDT, and NORRIS on the Chicago convention, where the principal text was, "Thou shalt not steal, or if in stealing, steal lots of it"? Why leave in the RECORD of August 10 the letter of B. B. Cohoon, sr., in which he slurs Representative CANNON and alleges that Taft is politically corrupt and a fraud or a fool? Why allow Senator LA FOLLETTE in the RECORD to accuse the postal authorities with rifling his letters?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is not in order for any Member of the House to mention by name any Member of this body, and particularly it is out of order to mention the name of a Member of the body at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Well, excuse me, sir; I will use the right terms; I did not mean any discourtesy to any of those Members.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. OLMSTED. I will not make a point of order. I merely call it to the attention of the gentleman from New York as precautionary——

Mr. AKIN of New York. Why allow in the RECORD and in document form the most serious charges against Government officials, Senators, and Representatives? Why hand down to future generations that fiery invective of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] against his colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, and leader of the minority?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I must object to this; the gentleman is mentioning Members by name.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire also to be heard.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to prevent the gentleman from New York doing anything that may properly be done in regard to the resolution which has been offered, but I call the attention of the gentleman and of the Chair to the rules of this House, which prohibit, and, indeed, back in the days of Jefferson prohibited "nipping," remarks against another Member. The gentleman has mentioned Members by name. They can be referred to only in the third person. They can not be referred to by name——

Mr. LAFFERTY. I quite agree; but take the case of New York, where there are 46 Members, or such a matter. How would a Member of the House be able to distinguish what particular Member was being referred to unless his name was given?

Mr. OLMSTED. He will have to determine that for himself; but the gentleman accuses other persons of attacking Members of the House. Whether they were attacking them or not is a subject for an investigation by an examination of their remarks.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard upon the point of order for a moment. The position taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania if sustained, would trench upon the right of free speech in debate. [Applause.] The gentleman from New York is absolutely within his rights, and the rules of this House. Of course we are familiar with the rule prescribing that a Member shall not call another Member by name, in the progress of debate, but the gentleman from New York, or the gentleman from South Carolina, or from any other State, when seeking to indicate what particular Member of this body is intended, has the right for the purpose of illustration, description, or definition to refer to that Member by name, as for instance the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON. When the gentleman from New York refers to matters that have appeared in the RECORD, in order that he may properly bring such material before the House, for use in his own defense, he can not be precluded from citing the RECORD, and using the very language appearing therein. If there has appeared in this RECORD any matter attacking Members of this body, and the same has not been excised, the gentleman from New York, the gentleman from Illinois, or any other Member of this body who is in the situation of the gentleman from New York, when speaking in his own defense, and desiring to use this material, has the right to cite the same, even if it denominates the Members of the House. I have not referred to the merits of the case which the gentleman from New York is seeking to present. As to that I express no opinion, but confine myself to the proposition that a Member of Congress possesses the right of free speech within the limits fixed by the rules. I submit that the gentleman from New York violates no rule of this body when he cites the RECORD, and reads into his own remarks material that has appeared therein, and been allowed to remain without objection.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, against the gentleman from Virginia I read the language from a gentleman of fully as great renown, one Thomas Jefferson, who said, as will appear on page 184 of the Manual:

> No person, in speaking, is to mention a Member then present by his name, but to describe him by his seat in the House, or who spoke last, or on the other side of the question; nor to digress from the matter to fall upon the person, by speaking, reviling, nipping, or unmannerly words against a particular Member.

Now, I want the gentleman from New York to be permitted to make his own defense, fully and freely and at length; but I do not think he is warranted in making his defense in calling other gentlemen by name and accusing them of violating the rules of the House. He does not point to any page in the RECORD, but makes accusations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule. While the Chair is clearly of opinion that the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] is correct and is the rule now being applied, still the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] is referring to the RECORD, and he must of necessity have the right, if he refers to the RECORD and a name is there which refers to a particular speech, and he undoubtedly has the right to use that name, because it is in the RECORD. [Applause.] The Chair is of opinion, therefore, that the point of order is not well taken. The gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Compared to the allegations in the daily press and monthly magazines during a political campaign, my remarks are tame, indeed. [Applause.] There is not a Member present who amounts to anything who has not been condemned and criticized most severely during his political career. [Applause.] I have been punctured fore-and-aft [laughter], and I have had the javelin pierce my anatomy for years [laughter], and I look for the same kind of treatment as long as I remain in this political game; and while I am a Member of this House I propose to criticize each and every public official found violating the law and abusing the trust to which he has been elected and appointed, and if I am caught in any act trying to evade my duties, I shall not work the "baby act." [Applause.]

If officials in the Department of Agriculture, or in any other department, can not stand the searchlight or gaff of an inquiring public, why, let them resign. [Applause.]

And let me say, further, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD: The sooner it dies the better. [Laughter.] It is a needless expense, it has a limited circulation, and is very seldom read, unless some man is harpooned. [Laughter.] It is the cemetery of blasted hopes and shrouded ambitions, half-baked thoughts, and hot-air bunk. [Laughter.]

And, furthermore, Mr. Speaker, you called my attention to this point the other day—not the real Speaker of the House

[laughter]; excuse me if I have made any mistake; I did not mean to, sir, but I was referring to the honorable Speaker, Mr. CLARK. [Applause.] He called the attention of this House to the fact that he wanted every word spoken in debate in this House placed in the RECORD correctly, as it was spoken, and you know that that is not so. This CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is a misrepresentation. It is a fake. [Laughter.] These speeches are made here on the floor of the House; they are taken by the stenographers; they are taken downstairs; they are run off; brought back up here; and there is not a Member in this House but what sits down and revises and revamps and fixes it up to suit himself; and that is the way it goes out to the public. [Applause.] Why fool the public any longer?

On August 14, Mr. Speaker, in the Washington Star, appeared an article from which I take quotation. It says, taken from the report of the committee:

"The committee does not believe," they said, "that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD should be used as a vehicle for personal attacks on Members of this House, officials of the Government, or private citizens."

Now, I have shown to you it is used for that purpose, and I have the same rights as others have in this House, and I demand them.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, the speech which was printed in the RECORD of August 8 by myself contains no reflection on any Member of this House, and I defy the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] to find or point out one single place in that speech where I made any reflection on a Member of this House. Why, Mr. Speaker, is this a freemasonry joint, where one Member can not say anything about another Member? [Laughter.] Supposing I caught a Member in the room there taking the watch of another Member while he is asleep. [Laughter.] Would I not have the right to come out here and expose him? [Laughter.]

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, in the last reference doubtless my good friend, my esteemed colleague, pointed to the Chamber beyond—[laughter]—the Republican Chamber.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Now, if the House wants to make an example of me, it is perfectly welcome to do it. I can stand it. I think the whole thing is foolishness on their part. They have stirred this thing up, and I have received communications from all over the country wanting to know all about it. Perhaps if they had not done it not a word would have been said. [Laughter.]

In the Philadelphia North American of August 16, 1912, this appears in the account of a speech made by Mr. STANLEY—I mean the gentleman from Kentucky—[laughter]:

STANLEY heaps abuse on the Progressives, Col. Roosevelt, and Perkins.

That is the title. It is too long an article to read, but I want to refer to one extract. It is as follows:

With great problems to solve, with a conflict on between special privilege and public rights, the Democrats of the House gave their applause to utterly unwarranted assertions from a fellow-Member based upon the facts with which the public has been familiar for the last six years.

I am now quoting from the paper. Then it says:

STANLEY'S speech was made in order that he could relieve himself of this personal abuse of Perkins, and that he might utter insinuations against Roosevelt which he could not make as direct charges.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say this, that so far as the first speech is concerned, I defy any Member of this House to say that he can find one word in that speech that is not proper and right, and I will not crawfish. [Applause.] If it is taken out, they will take it, and not I. The other speech, if it makes any reflections on any Member and their own committee, they, the House, can take it out if it is not true. If they are true, I want them to stand, and I am here to take the gaff.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Take the watch now. [Laughter.]

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. [Laughter and applause.] I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the gentleman still has 15 minutes unconsumed of the time of this House, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. AKIN of New York. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE].

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, there has been more or less levity excited among the membership of the House during the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN]. From the point of view of one of the committee making this report this is not a matter to be treated in a levitous or light spirit.

Under the Rules of the House of Representatives a RECORD of the occurrences upon the floor of this House and the speeches of Members is kept and printed. There is no rule of this House under which a man has a right to print in the RECORD that which is not spoken upon the floor. In other words, the right to print in the RECORD is a courtesy extended by the whole membership of this House to one Member upon his request.

As one Member of the House, and as a member of the committee making this report, and of which we ask the adoption, I think there is a vast difference between matters that can be or should be spoken on the floor of the House and matters that may with propriety be published in the RECORD under the leave to print.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] has quoted in his remarks, just made, extracts from speeches delivered upon the floor of this House in which remarks were made against other Members of the House, against members of the administration, or private citizens. In a case of that kind, if the assault is upon a Member of this House, when the words are spoken upon this floor, that Member has then and there the opportunity and the right to meet the charge, whatever it may be. Or if the words are spoken concerning an officer of the Government, some friend of that officer on this floor has the opportunity then and there to meet the charge and let that statement go out with the charge to the public. Or if an assault is made upon a private citizen of this country; if he is of enough importance to have excited a charge from any Member upon this floor, he is of sufficient importance to have some friend in the membership of this body who will then and there come to his defense; and the defense can go out with the charge that is made. But when, under the custom that has become prevalent in the House of permitting the privilege to print by unanimous consent, a Member places in the RECORD an attack upon his fellow Member, or upon administrative officers, or upon private citizens of this country, there is no concurrent opportunity to meet the attack either by the Representative or by the friend of the person who is attacked; and I do not believe that this House will seriously contend that in extending this courtesy to a Member of the House it is intended that he shall have the privilege of attacking the character of people, here or elsewhere, under his leave.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] says in regard to the speech that was printed in the RECORD of February 8 that there was no attack made upon any Member of this House. That is true, but there was an attack made upon high officials of this Government; and had those words been spoken upon this floor, they would have been refuted, and the refutation would have gone to the country along with the charge. In the other speech that was submitted to the special committee appointed to investigate this matter there is a direct charge against Members of this House, who, had this been spoken upon the floor, would have then and there refuted, or at least had something to say about the charges that were made and placed in the RECORD. And, as one Member of this House and one member of this committee, I do not believe it was ever intended that under the leave to print a Member of this House should be given license to attack either his fellow Member or anybody else under that privilege. I believe that this resolution ought to be adopted.

Much that the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] says about things that appear in the RECORD that are not warranted is, in my judgment, true, but this special committee was appointed only as a censor of two specific speeches, and upon them it has made its report. [Applause.]

Mr. AKIN of New York. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 12 minutes.

Mr. AKIN of New York. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD].

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, in the main I quite agree with what the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] has said. There is no Member on either side of the House for whose judgment and opinion I have greater respect than I have for the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina. But in this instance, knowing his desire to play fair, knowing that the selfsame spirit rests in the generous heart of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], the chairman of this committee, and believing that that generous spirit is reflected in the distinguished son of Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], I bespeak at this time the attention of the House to the square and manly way in which the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] came before this body and laid bare his claims and his conscience.

He says that if he has wronged any man on either side of this aisle he is willing to withdraw the charge, and I ask you what more can any man do, if he errs in judgment, than to say, "If I am wrong, I apologize"? That is what the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] has done, and that is the reason I am now on my feet to defend him in my humble way, whether in the judgment of this House he has erred or has not erred. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, to err is human; to forgive, divine. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] has erred, let us, after setting him on the right path, after showing him the way to guide his footsteps for the future, say to him: "Go, my son; you are forgiven." [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I can not yield. I have only 10 minutes. If I would yield to anyone on this floor, it would be to my distinguished friend from the City of Brotherly Love. I know that the gentleman from Pennsylvania agrees with me, since he has the honor to have been born in the State a part of which I now have the honor to represent.

Let me say further to him and to my confrères on this floor that there are two propositions involved in this question. One has to do with the head of the Agricultural Department. While I do not agree in all that has been said by my friend from New York regarding the political activities or the commercial inactivities of the head of that great branch of the Government, I want to say that at least part of what he says is the God Almighty's truth; and in view of the conditions that exist to-day, no man in this House, and particularly no man on the Democratic side, ought to be afraid of the truth.

Mr. Speaker, we are now face to face with a condition in this country which gives every Democrat, from the Golden Gate of Frisco to the tide-worn shores of Hell Gate, from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, not only the desire and hope, but soon the realization of the fact that when the Democratic convention spoke at Baltimore and nominated as its choice New Jersey's distinguished governor, that convention spoke not alone for the Democratic Party, not alone for the Republican Party, not alone for the bull moose, but for the great mass of the people of this country.

I want to say to my good friend here that when Woodrow Wilson will have taken his seat as President of the United States and the scattered few of our Republican brethren are over there on the Cherokee Strip, with hardly enough of them to fill the strip, that if he—and the wish is father to the thought—if he is running on the ticket with New Jersey's distinguished son, that he will come back here, not a man without a party, but a man with a party, and a man with the people's party. Mr. Speaker, I ask for separate votes on this question, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield just for a moment?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman stated that this was the greatest opportunity for Democrats from the Golden Gate of Frisco to the time-worn shores of Hell Gate. I want to ask the gentleman in what direction Democrats are moving?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Upward. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to see whether the gentleman has a correct understanding of the attitude of the gentleman from New York. He said the gentleman from New York came here in a Christianlike spirit of apology, while I understood the gentleman from New York to say that he would take nothing back. That he would not "crawfish."

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. In reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I want to say that if he did say that he regretted what he had to do, believing that he did what was right, I would not be on this floor defending him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think that 393 Members of the House have some rights that the gentleman from New York is bound to respect?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that my friend in his utterances here, which even the gentleman from Pennsylvania must admit, were honest and straightforward——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They were very strong statements, but they did not constitute an apology, as I understood them.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I do not think the gentleman was called upon to apologize.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But I understood the gentleman from New Jersey to say that the gentleman from New York in an apologetic tone had offered to take back his remarks.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. There was an apologetic tone in his remarks as they reached my ears. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. When the gentleman from New Jersey made the statement that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was born in New Jersey, was that an apology or a charge? [Laughter.]

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Neither; I wanted to commend him——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We are both proud of it.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I wanted to commend him to his Republican brethren for one good, honest quality. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey reserves the balance of his time, which is one minute.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eight minutes on his side, and there are four minutes remaining on the other side.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to know that the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] is willing to withdraw his remarks made concerning certain Members of this House, which were put in the RECORD under leave to print and not uttered on the floor of the House.

With the appointment of the committee which has unanimously recommended that his remarks be stricken from the RECORD, I had nothing whatever to do. The statements contained in those remarks, which may be construed to reflect on me as a Member of this House or as a member of one of its committees, are false and untrue in every particular.

Regarding the establishment of the meteorological stations in my State for the benefit of the fruit-growing industry, I have this to say:

Some time during the extra session of Congress in 1911, Prof. Hutt, State horticulturist of North Carolina, with whom I had an acquaintance and official association for six years while I was a member of the board of agriculture of my State, and he at the same time being State horticulturist, came to Washington and requested that I go with him to see the Chief of the Weather Bureau and aid him, if possible, in procuring the establishment of stations necessary to better locate the frost and thermal belts of that section of North Carolina where fruit growing is a great and growing industry. And I might add here, by way of parenthesis, that apples from this section have taken the sweepstakes prize for the past two years at the National Fruit Show at St. Joseph, Mo., and that people interested in this industry are coming into western North Carolina in great numbers from every section of the country and investing capital in the purchase of orchard lands; and I am pleased to know that they are receiving aid and encouragement from the Agricultural Department of my State and also of the United States.

The Chief of the Weather Bureau said the proposition was a feasible one, and that similar work had been conducted with great success in Wisconsin in regard to the cranberry industry. He promised us to give the matter careful consideration, and to attempt the work if he could spare the funds. After this conference Prof. Hutt returned to North Carolina asking and urging that I should not neglect to push this important work with the Weather Bureau. I devoted the same, and no greater, activity to this that I have to all my other official duties. Later, the stations were established in North Carolina, but were not confined to my district, being distributed throughout the western part of the State in the fifth, seventh, eighth, and tenth congressional districts.

I am informed that similar work, and on a more extensive scale than was undertaken in North Carolina, has been inaugurated in the interest of fruit growing in California. Also similar work has been inaugurated in Colorado, Utah, Washington, Idaho, Oregon, and other States. The only regret that I have in this matter is that I have not been able to accomplish more for my State and district in this line of work. The farmers and those who live in the rural sections have for years paid more than their share of taxes to the support of the National Government, and received far less than their share of the aid and benefit derived from such taxes. They have been draft horses and draymen, hewers of wood, and drawers of water so long for other callings and professions that any slight recognition by way of material aid from the Government seems to meet the indignation and resentment of quite a number of people.

So much, Mr. Speaker, for the insinuation as to my activity. Now, a few words concerning the omission of duties and the insinuation that I have been inactive regarding the investigation of the Weather Bureau. This matter was called to the attention of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture by the chairman [Mr. Moss], at the extra session of Congress, who stated that some charges had been made against the head of this bureau by one James Berry, a former employee of the bureau. I was requested by the chairman of the committee to act as a subcommittee of one to make a preliminary investigation into these charges, hear the statements of Mr Berry, consider what testimony he had to offer, and also to hear the statement in defense of the Chief of the Weather Bureau. After giving long and patient hearing and consideration to the statement, papers, correspondence, and so forth, of Mr. Berry, and also hearing for a short time the statement of Prof. Moore, the chief, who stated that this same matter had been heard by the Agricultural Committee of the Senate in the Sixty-first Congress and dismissed as not being of sufficient consequence to warrant a public investigation, and after learning also from the correspondence that Mr. Berry had called the matter to the attention of the President of the United States, as well as the Secretary of Agriculture, I decided that, being a new member, and not knowing just exactly what matters the committee had jurisdiction over, and as the charges were so numerous and covered such a wide scope, I was unwilling to recommend either in favor of or against an investigation. So I reported the matter back to the chairman [Mr. Moss], with an explanation and a request that he either investigate the matter himself or appoint a new subcommittee of more than one. He agreed to my request, and said that he would relieve me and would take up the matter himself, as his statement in the RECORD of June 7 will show.

Later he reported to the committee, or the Democratic members, I do not recall which, that he had looked carefully into the matter; that he found no cause for a special or hurried investigation, but that it was his purpose as soon as other more pressing matters were disposed of to take up and investigate conditions in the Weather Bureau, which statement he has frequently reiterated to me since. I do not think our committee can be justly accused of being either dilatory or neglectful in the discharge of its duty, as we have been busily engaged in hard work since we organized, at the extra session in 1911, up to the present time considering matters brought to our attention by resolutions of Members of Congress. First, the Dr. Wiley investigation, on which we worked almost continuously during the entire time of the extra session, and before that was finished and a report made investigation was demanded by our committee into the affairs of the Drainage Bureau of the Department of Agriculture. This was taken up under the resolution of Congressmen CLARK of Florida and BATHRICK, of Ohio. In the midst of this investigation, along came an emergency resolution of Congressman NELSON, demanding an investigation concerning the meat-inspection service, and between these three important investigations demanded by resolutions of Members of Congress, this committee has worked perhaps as many hours as any committee in Congress. Moreover, I had my duties to attend to as a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, and also as a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency to investigate the Money Trust. Totaling my labors upon these two committees, which, coupled with my other duties, I feel that I have given as much time to my work and spent as little idle time as any Member of Congress. I also state emphatically that I have at no time opposed or stood in the way of an investigation into the affairs of the Weather Bureau; but, on the other hand, I have at this session of Congress called to the attention of both the chairman and the full committee the importance of a further consideration of the affairs of the Weather Bureau.

Mr. Speaker, in view of these facts, I again characterize the statement of the gentleman from New York as applied to me as being untrue and without foundation in any respect, and will further say that he could easily have saved himself of his present embarrassment if he had taken ordinary precaution to verify his remarks before having them printed in the RECORD. I will add, further, that if these statements were made upon his own authority, that he has willfully and deliberately, and without attempting to ascertain the truth, made false statements. If they are based upon information, he has been imposed upon by some one possessing either a disordered brain or a corrupt heart, one or both; and I hope in the future, if he should be inclined to make statements of this kind, that he will have the courage to do so on the floor of the House and not take advantage of his leave to print.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, there are two speeches in question regarding which the special committee appointed by the Speaker of this House was charged to investigate and report the results of the findings to this body. Without admitting that in either anything has been said which could be construed as unparliamentary, the gentleman from New York has consented to waive his rights in regard to one in which a distinguished gentleman from Illinois was inadvertently mentioned. But he stands flat-footed on his rights in regard to the other speech in toto. Every statement that was made by the distinguished gentleman from New York regarding an honored official of this Nation is backed up by substantial evidence, and the evidence is placed there in his speech, and his remarks have to do with the evidence that was submitted. I contend, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, that if ever a man brought himself within the rules of this House the gentleman from New York has done so when he added to what has been already said and cited his own respectful comments and his own honest judgment on the subject.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Yes, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield to me later.

Mr. PAGE. But I have no more time.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PAGE. I simply wanted to ask the gentleman from New Jersey if he had read the speech he is now discussing?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I have not only read it, but I have read the speech that the gentleman from New York has consented to withdraw.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the temper of the House at this time is in favor of a square deal for all men. I believe that there is not a man on either side of the aisle who wants to do an injustice to the gentleman from New York, and I trust that the generous and manly and magnanimous and decent offer that he has made, not in so many words, but through inference, may be accepted, and that if the House sees fit to blot out one of his speeches from the RECORD the other may remain intact if he has written it down.

I again ask for a separate vote on the two speeches in question and ask that the one in which the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] is referred to, be voted on first.

Mr. JAMES. But what about the speech where the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] is referred to?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. That is the same speech, I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair will pass upon the proposition of the gentleman from New Jersey when it comes up.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE].

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I observe in the speech made by the gentleman from New York in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 11549, that he has made reference to the location of the weather bureau at the city of Fort Wayne as one of the instances adduced to show that the Chief of the Weather Bureau violated the rules that he had established for the government of his department. I read the following section of that speech, quoting from page 5 of the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture, as follows:

> Mr. MOORE. To-day I do not recommend to the Secretary the creation of a weather bureau station, as a rule, closer than 100 miles to another station. Practically we have adopted a 100-mile limit * * *. We have assumed that when a city gets a population of 50,000 it ought to have a weather station to serve local needs.

Commenting on that statement by Chief Moore, the gentleman from New York says:

> Under these rules, Mr. Chairman, no new station was to be established in a place with less than 50,000 population. The latest population bulletin of the Census Bureau shows that during the past decade about 30 cities in the United States attained or had a population equaling or exceeding this minimum requirement. Of these 30 places three are in Mr. Moss's State, Indiana, and all three of these were given new weather bureau stations at a cost approximating $20,000. At the same time the claims of cities of similar size in less favored States were ignored. Furthermore, all three of the Indiana stations were established in direct violation of Mr. Moore's own rule with regard to distance between stations—Fort Wayne, South Bend, and Terre Haute.

The gentleman from New York further declares that Fort Wayne ought to have been excluded, because it was less than 100 miles from Toledo, Ohio.

There is running through this entire speech a statement of facts that may be construed to charge Mr. Moss, chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, and Chief Moore, of the Weather Bureau Service, with having entered into a cabal or conspiracy to drop any proceedings for an investigation of the Weather Bureau Service provided weather bureau stations were located in the cities above named. I am satisfied that the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] does not desire to misrepresent the facts in this discussion. I believe he has been misinformed by some man who is now out of the service, but who is anxious to vent some revenge on account of what he assumes is a wrong done him by the Chief of the Weather Bureau, and I am making these statements solely to relieve either Mr. Moss or the Chief of the Weather Bureau Service of any connection whatever with the establishment of a weather bureau service in the city of Fort Wayne under these charges.

I give no credence whatever to the veiled insinuation that there was an understanding with reference to the location of this weather bureau station. The weather bureau station at Fort Wayne was located before the Moss investigating committee came into existence. The station was located in Fort Wayne because the city was entitled to it. This city, now approaching the 80,000 mark in population, was the only city of such commercial importance in the entire country that had not been provided with a weather bureau station. As early as March, 1909, I saw Chief Moore personally with reference to the merits of Fort Wayne and surrounding country on the weather bureau question. Prof. Moore was familiar with the conditions at Fort Wayne when I saw him in March, 1909, and readily agreed with me that it was the most deserving location of any in the country, and he promised me to establish a station in Fort Wayne before he established one at any other point in the United States. In the fall of 1909 I went before the Agricultural Committee of the House with my claims for a weather bureau station at Fort Wayne, and the chairman of that committee, Mr. Scott, of Kansas, agreed to give the Fort Wayne proposition consideration, but he failed to do so. I then appealed to Secretary Wilson, of the Department of Agriculture, with reference to the location of this weather bureau, and continued to do so until the spring of 1911, when Secretary Wilson issued the following order to Chief Moore:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 8, 1911.

Prof. WILLIS L. MOORE,
Chief Weather Bureau.

DEAR SIR: As soon as the necessary funds are at the disposal of the department you are authorized to remove the weather bureau station from Juniper, Fla., to Miami, Fla., and to establish weather bureau stations at Fort Wayne, Ind., and Dayton, Ohio.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

Mr. Moore came to Fort Wayne at my request and personally inspected the situation in the spring of 1911 and located the station there, as I stated before, before the Moss committee had been appointed. Mr. Moss did not know that the station was located until after it was fully installed and had absolutely nothing to do with it. Fort Wayne secured the station because it is located in the greatest manufacturing and agricultural district in the United States and has within a radius of 50 miles a population of 1,000,000 people. Its large commercial and extensive agricultural interests were such as to merit the location. Another mistake that the gentleman from New York makes is that when the city reaches the 50,000 mark in population the distance of 100 miles from another station is waived.

I have made this statement, Mr. Speaker, not only to give the House the correct statement of the facts with reference to the bureau at Fort Wayne, but to relieve Mr. Moss and Chief Moore of any charge of collusion in connection with the establishment of the station at Fort Wayne.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I have no personal feeling whatever against the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN], and before delivering the remarks which I made on the floor of this House June 7, I sent the gentleman notice that I intended to speak to a question of personal privilege, and wished him to be present, and he was present. What I then said was said in his presence, with full opportunity to challenge its accuracy or to protest against any injustice if, in his opinion, there was injustice done him. I had no such motive in this instance, and his remarks were inserted in the RECORD without any notice of their contents to me and with no opportunity to challenge the accuracy of his statement. It is a common rule of courtesy among the Members of this House, even in the heat of partisan debate, to refrain from personal criticism unless the Member so criticized has opportunity to defend himself at the moment that such criticism is uttered. In this instance we have a deliberate preparation of an accusation—which I denounce as false and unfounded—which is inserted in the RECORD in such a manner that no reply could be made until the charges had gone forth to the world. In that statement as printed in the RECORD is a charge that as chairman of one of the investigating committees of this House, in return for substantial favors for my State and district, I had practically promised immunity to one of the great departments of Government which was charged with maladministration. I know of no charge which could more directly assail my integrity, both as a Representative in Congress and as a citizen of good character, than such an imputation. I therefore stated to the chairman of this special committee that I would be glad to appear before his committee and produce the committee records, which would prove beyond any shadow of doubt that in bringing this charge the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] was giving circulation to statements which were wholly and absolutely false. In view of this offer on my part and the unanimous report of the committee that such statements be expunged from the RECORD, if this report shall be adopted by this House, I will be entirely content to accept such action as a complete vindication of the record of my committee in this matter and of my personal action as a member of that committee.

The gentleman was not content with charging me as chairman with moral delinquency, but broadened his charge to include Mr. DOUGHTON, a hard-working member of the committee. I desire to say most emphatically that this charge is utterly false, in so far as it seeks to impute to Mr. DOUGHTON any attempt to prevent an examination into the accounts of the Weather Bureau.

No member of our committee has been more diligent or more faithful than the gentleman from North Carolina and his vote and influence in committee has ever been to do justice without favor. The statement of the gentleman from New York does the gentleman from North Carolina a gross injustice and should be stricken from the RECORD, because such a charge is utterly unwarranted.

Mr. DOUGHTON as a subcommittee of one reported to me that he desired that I should confer with Mr. Berry, and accordingly I invited Mr. Berry to submit in writing his charges against Prof. Moore, which he did. These written charges were placed before the majority members of the committee for decision, if the gravamen were sufficient to justify a special congressional investigation. That question had to be determined by some authority, and under the rules of this House the Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department is that authority. Mr. Berry is not a Member of Congress and has no right to demand special action by any committee of this body. He has the right, as every other American citizen, to present evidence of maladministration and to have such evidence carefully and honestly considered. The chairman and majority members gave him that courtesy and consideration and in so doing not only discharged their full duty in the premises but redeemed every promise made to him.

Later in the session, after the report of the Wiley hearings was made to the House, this question was laid before the full committee for decision. The members were asked to make a choice whether the expenditures in the Weather Bureau or the accounts of the Forestry Bureau should first be examined. The gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] did not appear before the committee and request that the Weather Bureau be investigated. If he had any information of maladministration, he did not communicate it to any member of the committee. Judge FLOYD of Arkansas offered a resolution that the committee proceed to an examination of the Forestry Bureau, which resolution was adopted by a unanimous vote. The decision was not made by the chairman nor by Mr. DOUGHTON, but by a vote of the full membership of the committee. This action did not mean that no examination would be made of the accounts of the Weather Bureau and other bureaus in the Agricultural Department; it was then the intention of the committee, as it still is the intention, to proceed to an examination of the several bureaus as rapidly as the work could be well performed. The Everglades investigation was asked for by two Members of this House, Messrs. BATHRICK and CLARK of Florida, who appeared personally before your committee and gave it what information they had in their possession.

If the gentleman from New York had acted similarly there would have been no necessity on his part to have inserted charges against the membership of the committee in the RECORD. Mr. NELSON, of Wisconsin, also appeared before your committee in support of his request that the meat-inspection service be inquired into. These Members were given courteous hearings by our committee, with a result that many hundred pages of testimony was taken, and a report is now in course of preparation which will be given to the Members of the House within a few days. In all there have been more than 4,000 pages of testimony taken by this committee on matters relating to the administration of the Agricultural Department, and two reports on matters of large public interest have been prepared and submitted or are ready to be submitted to the House. Our committee was compelled to sit at times during sessions of the House in order to hear the witnesses who desired to be heard before the committee. There is yet the Nelson resolution to be disposed of before the committee can proceed to an examination of any of the bureaus of the department.

I do not care to make a more extended statement of the work accomplished by the committee. There has not been a committee which has given more of its time to the service of the House than have the members of this committee. That we have not been able to do all the work which can properly come before us under our jurisdiction may be a matter for regret, but it is certainly not a matter of moral delinquency.

I am glad to say that there has been located in Terre Haute a weather station. Terre Haute is the largest and most enterprising city in the Wabash Valley. It has a large and rapidly growing commerce with the South in fruits and vegetables and has developed important trucking and canning industries among her own people. The Weather Bureau was not in position to serve these important interests as efficiently as their importance demanded. This fact was recognized by Prof. Moore and frankly conceded by him and by the honorable Secretary of Agriculture. It was a condition which could remain only until available funds to supply better service was at the command of the bureau. Acting for the Commercial Club of Terre Haute, the oldest commercial organization of the city, I extended an invitation to Prof. Moore to visit the city and personally investigate the admitted deficiencies of the service. This invitation was courteously accepted and Prof. Moore visited the city, spending two days in his investigations. I am informed that it was his first visit to the city. I did not accompany the professor on this trip and was not with him while he was in the congressional district. As stated, Prof. Moore was the guest of the commercial organizations of the city.

As a result of this visit the urgent need of better service to the city and surrounding territory was so impressed upon Prof. Moore that he recommended to Secretary Wilson that a station be located and put into operation with the beginning of the present fiscal year, which recommendation was approved by the honorable Secretary, and the station was accordingly located. I can only have pity for a Member of this House who can see in this transaction collusion and confederation between the Department of Agriculture and the Member who has the honor to represent that district in this House. It is not surprising that such a Member would insert such a charge in silence rather than to utter it on the floor of the House. The people of the fifth congressional district in Indiana have every right to the service of this Government that the citizens of any other district in the United States have under similar circumstances, and it is to the great credit of Secretary Wilson and Prof. Moore that they are too just and patriotic and have too conscientious regard for their oath of office to permit the narrow prejudices of party representation or false and bigoted attacks to tempt them to withhold needed public service from a section of our common country because that section has chosen a Representative of different party allegiance to the administration. Similarly, I have too much respect for my position, both as a Member of this House and as the ranking member of an investigating committee, to give currency and publicity to charges of maladministration which in my honest opinion have no substantial basis in truth or in fact.

It is not the policy of this committee to impede the action of good government or seek to embarrass any officer who is giving his best endeavor to serve the public needs. If abuses have crept into the public service it is our desire to assist in eradicating the evils and thus assist in promoting the cause of good government; but it is not the policy of this committee to use our power under the rules to give vent to private pique or personal hatred. The faithful official will receive recognition, encouragement, and cooperation from us in every effort to promote the public interests intrusted to his care. In this determination we believe that we truly reflect the policy of the Democratic Party in control of the House and have the support of the membership of this House without regard to party affiliation.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD] asks that these two propositions be severed and voted on separately. If the rule were strictly construed, the language of the resolution would not permit of that, but there is no trouble in ascertaining what the difference is, so the Chair thinks in ordinary fairness that there ought to be a chance to vote upon them separately. If the gentleman from New Jersey will indicate which one of these two it is that the gentleman from New York has no objection to, the Chair would be obliged.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, in order that I might state the gentleman's side correctly I would say that my statement was that by inference he stated that if this speech delivered on August 10 contained any statement against any Member of the House which was false he would consent to have it taken from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the two propositions. The question is, first, on the resolution striking out the speech inserted on August 8.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey) there were—ayes 79, noes 30.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey demands tellers. All in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirteen gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey (during the count). Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

So the resolution was agreed to and the speech of August 8, 1912, was expunged from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The question is on expunging the speech of August 10.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

PUBLICITY ACT.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in order to bring the matter to the attention of the House I ask unanimous consent for a minute to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri requests unanimous consent for one minute in order to make a statement. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, on the 19th day of last August the House passed what is known as the publicity act. That act has now been in operation for a year and has revealed the fact that it puts Members to great inconvenience and makes it almost impossible for them, in many instances, to comply with its terms. For instance, the act as it is written requires a statement under oath showing the amount of money used and the purposes for which it is used, which affidavit is required to be made by the candidates for Representative in the districts in which they reside and in case of candidates for Senator in the State in which they reside, unless on the day of the primary election or convention or election such candidate should be in Washington attending a session of Congress, and in that event, and in that event only, he can make such statement and affidavit in the District of Columbia. We find in many instances Members of Congress are not in their districts on the day of the primary or day of the convention or election, hence to comply with the law as it now stands such candidates must return to their residences in order to make affidavit in their districts, in compliance with law. Therefore, for the purpose of correcting this manifest error I introduced the bill (H. R. 26278) to amend the publicity law, and I now ask unanimous consent to discharge the committee from the consideration of said bill and for its immediate consideration in the House.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object, but, if I may be permitted for a moment, I was one of the conferees when this bill was in conference and that provision was put in advisedly and after full discussion and deliberation, and we concluded that the candidate should make his affidavit at home in his own city or district for the reason that if it became necessary to indict him for perjury it would be difficult if the offense were committed in another State. For that reason the provision was put in the bill.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I really do not remember particularly that discussion, though I assume the gentleman correctly states the fact. Whatever the reason was I am now convinced was a bad and not a good reason.

Mr. JAMES. If the gentleman will permit me, in any event the United States will have jurisdiction whether the indictment is in one State or another?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say that at the time of the primary election in my State I was at a sanitarium, and in order to make the affidavit within the time allowed by the statute I had to make it in the State of Indiana. I was unable to go to my State. I was not here, but I would like to ask the gentleman if the bill which he now proposes will permit an affidavit under those circumstances to be made, as I made an affidavit in a State in which I did not reside.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. That is the very purpose of the pending bill.

Mr. JAMES. Is not it true that this law directing where Members shall make affidavit is not mandatory, but merely directory, and it really does not matter that the existing law covers it? The thing the law makes mandatory is the oath, and as to where the oath is taken is not material.

Mr. MANN. As it reads now it is mandatory.

Mr. JAMES. I think not; I think it is merely directory, and if the candidate makes the oath, that is all that is necessary.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. KAHN. I ask that the gentleman be given five minutes additional.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KAHN. I would like to ask the gentleman if the bill makes provision for this kind of a case: It takes a Member from the Pacific coast at least four or five days to get to his home. Now, suppose just prior to the time he should file his petition he starts on his journey and he does not get back home until the last day of his time expires, which is possible, would this bill take care of a condition of that kind?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I think so; completely.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, take a case from the city of New York, which is divided up into many congressional districts. Now take the original act, which provides that the oath shall be taken in the district in which the candidate resides. Take a case that actually occurred two years ago, my case, where I was confined to a hospital, unable to comply with the provisions at all—was not near my congressional district, but some distance away in the city of New York—how could the affidavit be taken?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. That is the very purpose of the amendment proposed in the bill now under consideration.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. As the bill has not been read, I would like to ask the gentleman if it makes provision for that?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. It does, and that is the very purpose of it and necessity for it.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the request be stated, so as to see how to get at the matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Pending the right to object, I ask that the bill be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 26278) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected,' and extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States and limiting the amount of campaign expenses," approved August 19, 1911.

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 10 of section 8 of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected,' and extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States and limiting the amount of campaign expenses," approved August 19, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Every statement herein required shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the candidate, taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths; and the depositing of any such statement in a regular post office, directed to the Clerk of the House of Representatives or to the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, duly stamped and registered within the time required herein, shall be deemed a sufficient filing of any such statement under any of the provisions of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment in order to refer more particularly and definitely to the section proposed to be amended.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That paragraph 10 of section 8 of an act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected,' approved June 25, 1910, as amended by section 2 of an act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected," and extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States and limiting the amount of campaign expenses,' approved August 19, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"'Every statement herein required shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the candidate, taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths; and the depositing of any such statement in a regular post office, directed to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, or to the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, duly stamped and registered, within the time required herein, shall be deemed a sufficient filing of any such statement under any of the provisions of this act.'"

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I notice there that the gentleman uses the term "regular post office." What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. MANN. That is the existing law.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I know; but of what consequence is it?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. What does it mean?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I think it means only post office.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. While the gentleman is amending that, why not make it read "post office," then?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. That was in the original act. I do not see how it could possibly complicate it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is a very peculiar expression—"in a regular post office." The court in construing it might go out of its way to make it exclude the rural-delivery box, and make it mean a box in town. The courts might assume something that is not intended.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Why not say simply, "a mail box"?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I have no objection, as far as I am concerned.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I move, Mr. Speaker, to amend the title.

The SPEAKER. The title will be amended, without objection, in conformity to the text.

There was no objection.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE OF CROWLEY AGAINST WILSON.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous report from the Committee on Elections No. 1 in the contested election case of Crowley against Wilson; and unless there is some objection, I ask immediate consideration of the resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. HOLLAND. It is a unanimous report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 691 (H. Rept. 1195).

Resolved, That William W. Wilson was duly elected a Representative from the third district of Illinois to the Sixty-second Congress, and is entitled to retain his seat therein.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

VETO MESSAGE—THE LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL (H. DOC. NO. 910).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 24023, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes." This is one of the great supply bills necessary for the maintenance of the Government, and it goes without saying that nothing but reasons of especial importance would lead me to interpose objections to its passage.

In a message returning the Army appropriation bill to the House of Representatives with my objections to its approval, under date of June 17, 1912, I ventured to point out the dangers inherent in the practice of attaching substantive legislation to appropriation bills, and I need not repeat them here. It is sufficient to say, however, that when it is thought wise by Congress to include in general supply bills important substantive legislation, and the Executive can not approve such legislation, it is his constitutional duty to return the bill with his objections, and the responsibility for delay in the appropriation of the necessary expenses to run the Government can not rest upon the Executive, but must be put where it belongs—upon the majority in each House of Congress that has departed from the ordinary course and united with an appropriation bill amendments to substantive law. The importance and absolute necessity of furnishing funds to maintain and operate the Government can not be used by the Congress to force upon the Executive acquiescence in permanent legislation which he can not conscientiously approve.

There are two provisions in this bill which I can not permit to become law with my approval. One concerns the permanent statutory regulation of the tenure of office of those now included within the classified service in the departments and independent establishments of the Government within the District of Columbia. The other is a provision repealing the statute creating a Commerce Court, to consist of five circuit judges, for the purpose of passing on appeals from the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

First. By section 4 of this act the Civil Service Commission is directed, subject to the approval of the President, to establish a system of efficiency ratings for the classified service in the several executive departments in the District of Columbia, based upon records kept in each department and independent establishment with such frequency as to make them as nearly as possible records of fact. The system is to provide a minimum rating of efficiency which must be attained by an employee before he may be promoted; a rating below which no employee may fall without being demoted; and a rating below which no employee may fall without being dismissed for inefficiency. All promotions, demotions, or dismissals are to be governed by provisions of the civil-service rules. Records of efficiency are to be furnished by the departments and independent establishments to the Civil Service Commission.

This section 4 is an admirable section, and, if properly carried out, will greatly improve the present civil service.

Section 5, however, introduces a new and radical feature into the present system. It provides that every appointment in the classified service after the 1st of September of next year shall be for a term of seven years after the probationary period of six months has expired, and that at the expiration of each such appointment the employment of each person so appointed shall cease and determine; and that the employment of all persons, appointed prior to September 1, 1912, in such classified service at annual rates of compensation shall cease and determine within one year after August 31, 1919, the date of termination during that year to be determined by the head of the appropriate department according to previous length of service. The cessation of employment and the ending of the term in these cases is absolute, without regard to efficiency rating under section 4, but section 5 contains the proviso that all persons separated by its terms from the classified service, if they are up to the standard of efficiency then in force and capable of rendering a full measure of service, may, in the discretion of the head of the executive department, be reappointed without examination for another term of seven years.

The effect of this section is to leave it to the discretion of the head of the department in the case of each classified employee at the end of his term of seven years to say whether that employee, no matter how high his standing, shall continue, or whether another shall be selected from the eligible list submitted in accordance with law and regulation by the Civil Service Commission.

I believe this to be a genuine effort on the part of those who propose it to meet the difficulty presented in the present civil-service system by superannuation of the employees and the impossibility of eliminating those who through age and disease have ceased to be efficient. It is recognized that one method of meeting this difficulty is by a system of civil pension which will retire persons from the civil service at a certain age, or upon confirmed disability. It has been found impossible to secure an enforcement of the present law which requires every person who is not efficient in the service of the Government to be discharged, because it imposes upon the heads of departments and bureaus the disagreeable and ungracious duty of throwing out of employment, without any means of livelihood, the men and women who have spent many years in the employment of the Government and in times past have rendered good service.

I disapprove of section 5 because I do not think it will accomplish its proposed purpose, and I do not think it adds anything in efficiency to the provisions of section 4. If section 4 is carried out, then the superannuated will have to go when their inefficiency is properly determined, and this whether section 5 is on the statute book or not; and if section 4 is not enforced, then section 5 adds little or nothing in the way of getting rid of superannuated and inefficient clerks.

If section 4 is loosely enforced, so that the rate of efficiency of the superannuated clerk is charitably maintained by his superior at or above the minimum standard, there will be the same pressure to retain the clerk at the end of his seven years as there was to maintain his minimum rate, and the same reluctance as in the present system to turn him out at an advanced age without means of a livelihood after long years of service.

I do not share in the objection to a civil-pension system. I am strongly in favor of it, provided it involves features of compulsory insurance of employees, secured by an application of part of the salary of each toward the maintenance of the necessary funds. Such a system has already been embodied in the Gillett bill, and I know of no reason why it should not be adopted.

As to the present measure, I object to it, first, because for the reasons stated it will prove ineffective, as the present system has, in the matter of superannuated clerks; and, second, because it impairs that feature of the civil service which I regard as a most valuable one, to wit: The permanence of tenure on the one hand, balanced by a wide and almost absolute power of removal in the department head on the other. If at the end of each seven years it becomes necessary for one who has spent the best years of his life in the public service to ascertain whether he is to continue, it is certain that he will bring pressure to bear in every direction upon the appointing power to continue him in office. I am perfectly aware that the motive for not reappointing him will be much reduced by the fact that his successor must be appointed from the eligibles of the Civil Service Commission, but the play which this will give for prejudice and arbitrary action in the appointing power will constitute a serious injury to the present tenure of office.

Much has been said in the way of criticizing the present service as to the overpayment of the civil servants. It is true that in the departments there are many at salaries between $900 and $2,000 who are overpaid, but it is also true that there are many within those limits and nearly all who serve at salaries higher than $2,000 who are underpaid. The efficiency and wonderfully loyal service rendered by many of the employees of the Government who have concluded to devote their lives to the public service, to be content with only moderate salaries, because of the permanence of the tenure, can only be known to those who have had large experience in the character of the service rendered by the civil servants in the District of Columbia. I am not content to risk serious injury to the tone and efficacy of that service to accomplish something that in my judgment will not be accomplished by a change which will rob those who are in the service of a peace of mind that makes up in some degree for the sacrifices they have been obliged to undergo in devoting their lives at small pay to the Government. I am aware that there are malingerers and others in the service who contribute but little to its efficiency. They would be disposed of by the proper enforcement of section 4.

But there is a large part of the civil-servant body which consists of hard-working, loyal, and efficient persons, who render to the Government more than they receive and who give character to the service. It is their permanence of tenure that led them to seek the service and keeps them in it. Of course it will be said that such clerks are likely to be retained. Probably; but the difference between mere probability of continuance and permanent tenure is the difference between worry and active solicitation of every influence in the seventh year and that contentment of mind that is alone consistent with undivided attention to public duty.

Second. The Commerce Court was created by the amendment to the interstate-commerce act passed June 18, 1910. Prior to that time, whenever an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission was made against a railroad company over which the Interstate Commerce Commission was given supervision, and it was contended that the order was contrary to law, or was a taking of the property of the company without due process of law, or, in other words, was confiscatory, jurisdiction belonged to the circuit courts of the United States to enjoin the orders of the commission until their validity could be established. It had been the purpose of many to give to the Interstate Commerce Commission complete regulatory control over the railroads of the country in the matter of rates and in other features of their management, without allowing courts to interfere.

But it was clearly developed that any law was unconstitutional by which it was attempted to deprive the railroad companies of the right to go into court to test the validity of an order as confiscatory or violative of the statutory authority of the commission, and that if no provision at all were made for such judicial review, then the courts would possess it without special authority. So such jurisdiction in circuit courts of the United States was recognized in the act. The system involved hearings in circuit courts of 84 different districts in which the cause of action might arise. The litigation begun at Washington and carried through the Interstate Commerce Commission might then be transferred to some distant district. The district judge, or the circuit judge, or the circuit court of appeals took up the case, presenting a subject matter often entirely new, and found it difficult promptly to dispose of it in the multitude of other duties. This system imposed a delay in the necessary judicial consideration of interstate-commerce orders before they became effective that sometimes postponed their going into force for several years. In the interest, therefore, of the dispatch of business, in the interest of the public, and especially in the interest of the shippers who were seeking to prevent injustice by the railroads, it was thought wise to create a court of five circuit judges whose first duty should be to sit en banc as a Court of Commerce into which all complaints might be brought for prompt hearing and disposition.

The statistical record of the last two years shows that the average time in which this ordinary litigation, following the Interstate Commerce Commission's orders before the order of the commission shall become effective, has been reduced from more than two years to about six months. The litigation has not occupied all the time of the Commerce Court, and under special provisions of the act, the Chief Justice of the United States has assigned the circuit judges to judicial labors in the Federal courts all over the country, greatly to the advantage of litigants and to the dispatch of business in those courts. It should be said that under the provisions of the section abolishing the Commerce Court in this bill, jurisdiction to consider the validity of the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission is given to a court of three judges in each of the nine circuits, one of the judges to be a circuit judge or a Supreme Justice. This requirement, good in many ways, only makes the delays of such a countrywide jurisdiction more certain and is in no way comparable in the matter of dispatch of business to the Commerce Court system.

It appears from the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that the Commerce Court in several cases has amplified its jurisdiction beyond that which a proper construction of the statute justified. It also appears that in a number of cases the decisions were against the shippers and for the railroads when the Supreme Court decided that they ought to have been the other way. On the other hand, it appears that in a number of other cases the decisions of the Commerce Court were in favor of the shippers and in favor of giving relief to the shippers, against the railroad companies, but that the Supreme Court has since denied the existence of such jurisdiction under the statute. A series of decisions of the Supreme Court has satisfactorily established the limits of the jurisdiction of the new court, and there is no reason to believe that those limits thus established will in future be exceeded. There is every reason to believe that the dispatch of business already promoted by the court will continue. And now the question is, Why should the court be abolished? Because it has made some mistakes that the Supreme Court has rectified? Lower courts, especially when exercising new jurisdiction, are likely to make errors to be corrected by the Supreme Court. The presiding judge of the Commerce Court was the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission for a great many years. Three of the Commerce Court judges before their appointment to the Commerce Court had been United States district judges of long experience, and one had been a State judge of standing and experience. The personnel of the court is to change from year to year by the assignment of one of the Commerce Court judges to a circuit court of appeals, and the designation of another circuit judge to fill the vacancy thus made.

I have read the arguments upon which this proposed legislation is urged, and I can not find in them a single reason why the court should be abolished except that those who propose to abolish it object to certain of its decisions. Some of those decisions have been sustained and others have been disapproved or modified by the Supreme Court. I am utterly opposed to the abolition of a court because its decisions may not always meet the approval of a majority of the Legislature. It is introducing a recall of the judiciary, which, in its way, is quite as objectionable as the ordinary popular method proposed. Next to impartial and just judgment the great desideratum in judicial reforms to-day is the promotion of the dispatch of business and the prompt decision of cases. The establishment of the Commerce Court has brought this about in a substantial way by reducing the average delay from two years to six months, and I doubt not that as time goes on and the procedure becomes better understood this period of six months will be further reduced. It is greatly in the interest of the shippers and therefore of the public that this means of reducing the time of effective remedial litigation against railroads should be preserved.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 15, 1912.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move on reconsideration to pass the bill the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I should like to make some arrangement with the other side in regard to the time for debate.

Mr. MANN. I am willing to vote now.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We are going to have some debate on this side. The President has stated his view of the proposition.

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I expect to use one hour.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to agree that there shall be an hour on a side, and that the previous question shall be ordered at the end of that time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that one hour on a side be allowed for debate, the time on this side to be controlled by myself and the time on the other side by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I suggest to the gentleman that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] was on the subcommittee.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That the time on the other side be controlled by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR], a member of the subcommittee that framed this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that debate on the President's veto shall end in two hours, one hour to be controlled by himself and the other by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR], and that at the end of two hours the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to say that I hope the time will not all be used, and that the gentleman will act accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the President has returned without his approval one of the great supply bills. In the beginning of his message he questions the propriety of the legislative branch of the Government attaching legislation to appropriation bills. Often I have read in the newspapers criticisms of the practice of attaching legislation to appropriation bills, and sometimes I have heard men on this floor doubt its propriety. I hope that the President of the United States, Members of Congress, and all others who question the wisdom of attaching important legislation to money bills are speaking lightly when they do this. No man familiar with English history, no man who prizes the rights of English-speaking people, should be found criticizing legislation upon an appropriation bill. For 700 years the Commons of England have held the purse strings of the nation. They have attached to the great supply bills which granted to royalty what royalty asked provisions of law in the interest of the people. They have wrung from kings powers that had been denied, because they have held with jealous care their right to control the treasury of the nation and to grant it on what terms they would. [Applause.] I can understand why special interests that have their arms in the Public Treasury would try to create and cultivate a sentiment against legislating on these great bills, because special interests under such practice are safe as long as they can retain either branch of the Legislature or the Executive; but if we can put legislation on these bills, then it forces the other branch of the Legislature and the Executive at least to consider the legislation that is enacted and thereby show the people where they stand.

Mr. Speaker, this House, the direct representatives of the people, would be amply justified in attaching to this bill or to any other appropriation bill the wool bill, the excise bill, or any other bill we saw fit. There is no reason why people who prize our liberties should be found criticizing us in following the example that our forefathers followed and that the English-speaking people have followed for 700 years, and that is particularly true when the other branch of the Legislature and Executive belong to another political party. We have a right to incorporate in these great money bills questions that we want the other branch and the Executive to pass upon.

The President has exercised his constitutional prerogative of returning this bill without his approval. The King of England has the kingly right of returning legislation to the House of Commons without his approval, but he has not exercised that right in 300 years. Yet, in the greatest Republic on earth, the Chief Executive, nursing to his bosom this old remnant of the divine right to rule, sends to this House day after day great money bills and great revenue bills with his disapproval.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I can not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not want to be discourteous, but we have only one hour.

On yesterday and on the day before we were called upon to pass bills against the objections of the President. On yesterday the message that was read announced that the President had provided a nonpartisan body to gather information for us and for him, and that unless we saw fit to accept the suggestions of his appointees he would disapprove our legislation, thus placing above the intelligence and the judgment of two-thirds of the people's representatives the figures gathered by his employees. It was called a nonpartisan body. Gentlemen, when we refused to appropriate money longer to continue that useless body one of the distinguished members of it was sent to New York to help conduct the presidential campaign for the present Executive. I presume that nonpartisans are engaged in the delectable task of attempting to reelect Mr. Taft. He is an expert figurer. I wonder if it was his nonpartisanship or his ignorance that caused the tables that were printed in the morning papers to be published, giving the President 384 electoral votes. If his judgment in gathering tariff data and tariff statistics and his reliability in handing them out do not surpass the kind of stuff he is handing out now, the Ways and Means Committee acted wisely in rejecting his further services. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The President puts his disapproval of this bill upon two grounds. The first is that he opposes the seven-year tenure of office.

The second is—and thereby hangs a tale. That is the real objection. The real objection is—because it was known all over the country long months ago that this bill was to be vetoed—the real objection, in my judgment, is that it abolishes and discredits a useless court. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I can not, in the space of 15 minutes, which is all I will use, expect to discuss either one of these great questions, but they were fully discussed when the bill was in the House. It is not legislation that came back from the Senate as an amendment or was adopted in conference; it was legislation that was brought in and considered by the membership of the House.

Now the President's objection is as to the seven-year tenure, and he tells you frankly and honestly that he believes in a civil pension. He admits in his message that under the existing order of things something ought to be done. His remedy is a civil pension; our remedy is what we have put in this bill. Take your choice. Are you ready now to vote to sustain the President in his veto, because we have attempted to meet this question by a fixed period of service, while he favors a civil pension?

Oh, well, they say that the poor fellow would be demoralized during all of his term. I deny it. I decline to indict the 30,000 Government employees. Clerks and bookkeepers and all of the men who work in the banks are employed for one year at a time. People who work in the stores and factories are employed by the week or by the month. Do you tell me that because their tenure is not fixed for all time that they lose all aspirations to do good work; that they are so demoralized that they can not give efficient service? I do not believe it.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman from South Carolina is himself hired for only two years at a time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. These people are allowed seven years, far longer than ninety-nine people out of a hundred are employed for. They can be reemployed without examination, if their service is satisfactory. If I were at the head of a department, I should hold that the word "may" means "shall," and I would give every man a reappointment whose service was good, and so with any honest man.

[Mr. CANNON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman from Illinois used all the time I allotted to him. I would like to have him yield it back.

Mr. CANNON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois failed to use one-half minute of the three minutes allotted to him.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I yielded him five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I hope I may have the attention of the Members of the House for a few moments. "The judicial power of the United States," says the Constitution, "shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." So, by the Constitution itself, the creation of courts below that of the Supreme Court is lodged in Congress. Our judgment should be superior to that of the President of the United States as to whether the people need an inferior court or not. It is a constitutional suggestion that we have superior judgment, because the power is vested in us.

The President in his message says that this bill is in effect "a recall of the judiciary." I am sorry the President used that language, because it seems to me he must have intended to play upon the state of public feeling now in existence as to the recall of judges. It does not imply anything of the sort. There is not a line in this bill to recall either one of the circuit judges that serves on the Commerce Court—not a word, not an intimation.

Will the President claim that because we abolished every circuit court in the United States in the last Congress, through the report of a distinguished committee of this House on the Revision of the Laws, the chairman of which was Judge MOON, of Pennsylvania, with distinguished Members on this side, including Mr. SHERLEY and Judge HOUSTON—does he claim that because we abolished every circuit court judgeship in the United States that that was a recall of the judiciary? We assigned them to new duties and vested the jurisdiction which they had in other courts. Was that a recall of the judiciary? The President approved that bill. Is the President justified in claiming or pretending that this act is a recall of the judiciary, when it does not abolish or attempt to abolish any judgeship, but simply abolishes a court that has no judges? The Commerce Court, as such, has no judges. Circuit judges are assigned to perform duty in that court. I think that is enough with reference to that.

Now, the President talks about the long delays in the trial of these cases. The President's mind is working back beyond 1906, when every order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to be enforced, required a suit, and much delay attended those suits. But since 1906 the orders of the commission go into effect speedily, without suit, as heavy penalties are imposed upon carriers that do not comply with them; and suit can only be brought to enjoin, annul, vacate, or set aside these orders, and they are brought always by these carriers. Why are the friends of this court in such a hurry to enjoin, invalidate, vacate, and annul the orders issued against the railroads? They did not complain of the delay when the orders had to be enforced by a suit in court.

The President says these orders were delayed several years by reason of suits. That was true then, but the President must know that now the order of the commission goes into effect from the date that the commission fixes the time, and while it is a strange and anomalous fact that when a suit is brought enjoining that order, the life of the order continues, and if the suit lasts two years, the order is dead, without any adverse decision of the court, and a new hearing entirely would have to be made and had and a new order made. So the President must be mistaken when he talks about the cases dragging along several years, unless he means to refer to times past.

Now, the President, in this veto message, says—and I was surprised to hear it:

> It should be said that under the provisions of the section abolishing the Commerce Court in this bill, jurisdiction to consider the validity of the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission is given to a court of three judges in the nine circuits—one judge to be a circuit judge or a Supreme Court justice. This requirement in many ways only makes the delays of country-wide jurisdiction more certain, and is no way comparable to the dispatch of the business of the Commerce Court system.

The bill, in section 8 as it comes back from the Senate, provides—

> That the Commerce Court and all the offices are abolished on and after July 1, 1912, and all laws in so far as they provide for the establishment of said Commerce Court are repealed. The jurisdiction now vested in the Commerce Court is hereby transferred to and vested in the district courts of the United States.

This jurisdiction is vested in the district courts and in no other court. What the President must refer to is that when an injunction is sought to enjoin the orders of the commission, one of the judges of the circuit court or Supreme Court and two district judges, three in all, must act on the application for an injunction.

That is not a court. Yet the President calls it a court—a court of three judges. It only shows that the President has not given the details of this legislation that investigation that ought to have been given before a veto message was sent in.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, it is not even that strong, because one judge can pass on a restraining order, but three judges must sit en banc in order to issue a temporary injunction.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly. As the gentleman from Kentucky says, one judge may issue a temporary restraining order, but not an injunction, which requires three judges to grant; but these judges do not constitute a court.

I ask every man in this House, Why should we have a special court to pass on questions of law arising out of orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, when identically the same questions with reference to interstate carriers arise on orders made by every State commission and on every act of State legislatures affecting railroads that do an interstate business? Do the carriers affected come into this Commerce Court? No. Why should they not have a special court? In other words, why should this court not have jurisdiction to pass on questions of law and fact which are wholly identical, of the same character and nature as these orders arising as to the orders of State commissions affecting interstate roads? It appeals to every one of us that there is no need of having district judges passing on the question of the validity of the orders of a State commission, or of a legislative act of a State, but when an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission is called in question a special court must be constituted and maintained at great expense to pass on them, although identical as to law and facts. The only question that can be made is, first, Did the commission have the power under the law to make the order; second, is the order violative of property rights and under the Constitution confiscatory? Identically the same question in all respects arises as to an act of a State legislature, and arises as to a regulation by a State commission when it affects an interstate carrier. Why should we keep this court here at an extra expense of $50,000 or $75,000 a year, $12,000 of it to go for rent of a building in Washington and the rest of it for clerks and marshals that will not be needed at all if it was not for this extra court? Gentlemen, why do we not have a special admiralty court to try admiralty cases? They are equally technical and often more so than the mere questions of fact and law arising on orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Yet district judges sit in courts of admiralty. All admiralty cases are tried without any special admiralty court.

The President intimates that our feeling against this court is because of the decisions it has rendered. If the President had only read the debate at the time the court was created, he would have learned that my opposition to this court existed before the court was created or had tried a single case. I say we do not need it. It is a useless piece of legal furniture, a duplicated service at an unnecessary expense, and if the people of the country for whom it is alleged this court is created, for whom the President desires to retain it, could be consulted, they would vote 10 to 1 to repeal this law if they had the opportunity to do so. Why does not the great State of New York, that has 11,000 miles of railroad, have a special court to pass on questions arising out of the orders of its own State commission? Why does not the President's own State of Ohio have such a court? Why does not the great State of Texas, with 14,000 miles of railroad, have a special court to pass on questions of law arising under its State commission?

Mr. Speaker, if the President of the United States is going to veto every bill because he does not agree with us in a matter of judgment, he will have his hands full as long as he stays in the White House.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] how many speeches he has on that side?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I have two more. How much more time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 27½ minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. How many speeches has the gentleman from South Carolina on the other side of the question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We have four or five. I will consume some of my time. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the civil service of this Government will be jeopardized by the passage of this bill. If I did I would not vote for it.

The purpose of the bill is to fix a tenure of service at the end of which the man desiring to fill the office must prove that he is worthy and capable of filling the position. Do you suppose that the American people want a tenure of office in this Government on any other basis? If the man is deprived of his office, if he is separated from it according to the terms of this bill, it will be because he is either unworthy or inefficient, and ought to be separated from it. But when he is separated, it does not throw the office open to the spoils system. His place must be filled under the civil-service rules. The man who succeeds him must stand an examination and enter the service just as he would to-day if one of the employees should die. Now, it seems to me it is ridiculous to say that that is an attack on the civil service of this Government. Mr. Speaker, I think the greatest work that this Congress can do to improve and sustain the civil service is to make it an efficient system—to require that the men who work in it shall be capable and efficient; and when you do that you will do more to make it a permanent branch of this Government than by anything else you can do. You are not going to build up the civil service, you are not going to sustain it, by continuing a system under which there is a large percentage of admitted inefficiency.

But I do not regard that as the most vital point in the President's veto. He says in this message that he vetoes the bill because the Congress should not legislate on appropriation bills. I agree with the President in the main on that. I myself do not believe that, as a rule, we should legislate on appropriation bills, but I do say that the President of the United States has no right to express that as an objection to the passage of a bill by this House or this Congress. He knows better than most men in this Government the distinction between its three branches. He knows better than most men in the Government that it was intended by the Constitution of the United States that the executive branch and the legislative branch should be entirely independent of each other.

As to our manner of doing business, it is not a matter that should concern the President of the United States, and not a matter that he has any right to use the power of his high office to interfere with. What would he think if a war were in progress in the United States and the Congress of the United States should send him, as Commander in Chief of the Army, a message as to what troops he should put in the field at a certain place? The discretion of executive power is his, and he is entitled to use it with the responsibility that he owes to the American people. The legislative power is ours. It does not lie in the mouth of the President of the United States to attempt to dictate to the Congress of the United States how it shall pass its laws. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Ohio will now use some of his time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. We only have two speeches on this side, but I have no objection, and I will yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] in opening the discussion on this veto message made the statement that "the President has vetoed a great supply bill." Technically that is true, but, speaking broadly, the President of the United States has done nothing of the kind. The President has vetoed two laws—one altering the civil-service statutes and the other abolishing a great court of justice. The President by his veto has not altered a single figure nor changed a single dollar of a single item in that great supply bill. So that the statement that the President has crippled the Government by vetoing a supply bill must necessarily be taken with a great deal of allowance.

He then states, with some suggestion of resentment, that the President of the United States at this time nurtures in his bosom a love of this kingly power of veto. The gentleman from South Carolina points out that the President indulges this a long time after the King of England has yielded it up.

It is very true that for 205 years the head of the British Government has not exercised the veto power, but there is a clear distinction between the King of England and the President of the United States. The King of England is not chosen by the votes of the people and the President of the United States is. Nearly 100 years after that power had been yielded up the men who framed the Constitution of the United States, exercising their wisdom, conferred upon the Executive of this Republic this power, which he has exercised continuously from that day to the present hour.

There are only two methods, Mr. Speaker, by which a President of the United States can interpose his influence in matters of legislation, and one is by his message, suggesting the condition of the Nation; and, secondly, by his veto, which power he has exercised in this case.

Mr. CLAYTON. He can do it in the case of treaties.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes; he can do it in the case of treaties also. Now, the veto power is spoken of as the "kingly" power, as if to arouse the repugnance of the American people by that expression. It is declared that he uses the power inherited as a divine right of kings. The veto power had nothing to do in its origin with the divine right of kings, but belonged to the Roman tribunes, who exercised it 500 years before Christ was born, in the name of the people and for the protection of the people, and against the patrician magistrates who from time to time had imposed hardships upon them.

Now, as bearing upon the question whether there is an evil inherent in the veto power over the will of the majority, 150 men in the Baltimore convention recently exercised the veto power after a majority of the Democrats of the United States had nominated CHAMP CLARK for President, and that veto power in that instance was not given by the Constitution of the United States, but was conferred upon them by the rules of the party that controls this House at the present time. The veto exercised in that case was to defeat the popular and distinguished Speaker as a nominee for the Presidency and to name another gentleman for the Presidency.

In this respect the Democratic Party was true to its traditions. They named a man who bore the name that is familiar to the young and the old of the American Republic. "Prof. Wilson" is a name familiar not only to the Democrats, but to the Republicans of the country. "Prof. Wilson" is a name that was attached to a piece of legislation that dragged its slimy way through the halls of this Congress 20 years ago and wrote more sheriff sales on mills and factories and mortgages on farms in the United States than any bill that ever was enacted in this Hall for the last 100 years.

You gentlemen have nominated a gentleman who bears this title and this name, and you do not dare to go before the American people on the pretense that you will abolish the veto power; that you would make the President of the United States a mere pigmy and nonentity in the White House. It is true that there are those who would destroy the efficiency, the power, and the dignity of the judicial branch of the Government, and it is astonishing to find men on the floor who would question the exercise by the President of the United States of the proper use of the veto power in dealing with obnoxious legislation.

You must remember that while one class of people are busy destroying the judiciary and you are destroying one of the greatest functions of the executive department, there are others outside that would destroy this Congress as well. It is time, Mr. Speaker, that instead of encouraging the discrediting of the various officers of the Government they aid, by their argument and by their conduct of public affairs, all those upon whom great public responsibility rests. It is time, Mr. Speaker, that we insist that instead of discrediting the various branches of the Government we stand, shoulder touching shoulder, and resist the clamor of those who unthinkingly would destroy the very bulwarks of the American Government. [Applause on the Republican side.]

As to legislation on appropriation bills, it is a vicious system. It has never at any time commanded the admiration, or, I might say, even the respect, of men in either branch of the Congress of the United States. It was justified by the chairman in charge of the bill by saying that "in this way we can force an expression of another branch of the Government on these two great subjects." With a majority of 66 in this House can you not force an expression upon any measure you see fit to bring in here and present to the other end of the Capitol, and if you can, why not do it independently of a great supply bill?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he has read this document which I hold in my hand, entitled "General Legislation Enacted on Appropriation Acts from December 6, 1897, to March 4, 1911," a book of some 300 pages? They are enactments made by Republican Congresses; so, if the example is vicious, it seems to have the precedent of repeated Republican enactments.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, if the example is vicious the sin, I admit, lies at the doors of both parties, but that does not lessen the infamy of the transaction in this case. The fact that my party at some previous time did something that was reprehensible does not make it right now. The crime of 1873, which has been denounced throughout the Nation, was one of those things injected into a supply bill, and was condemned universally by the Democrats and a great body of the American people.

I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, the time yielded to me will not be sufficient to amplify my position upon the pending bill. One of the propositions that it seems to me should control our vote I am in favor of. The other proposition that has attracted most attention I am opposed to. I am in favor of abolishing the Commerce Court, but on the other hand I am opposed to the proposition of fixing a seven-year tenure to the employees in the various departments of the Government. The latter proposition, however, has seven years through which it may run should it become a law. During that time I have full confidence that the Congress would repeal it should it be enacted. For my part, I shall vote, if it should become a law, on the same day or the next day to repeal it; but, on the other hand, believing, as I do, that the Commerce Court should be abolished, and these two propositions that I regard as controlling being wrapped up together in the same bill, I propose to exercise my best judgment and vote for the passage of the measure. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the veto power should not exist, but I believe I state the sober judgment of most of the people of America when I say that the veto power should only be used in matters of great moment. The trouble with the distinguished gentleman who now is the President of the United States has not been so much in a too frequent use of the veto power as in exhibiting such poor judgment as to when he should use it. Had he seen fit to use the veto power to protect the American people against the iniquities of the Payne-Aldrich bill he would not now find himself in such dire political straits. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Neither am I one of those who believe that it is always wise to legislate upon appropriation bills, though the right so to do is essential to the liberties of a people, but I have been struck with the peculiar coincidence that those who complain of such legislation do so, not so much because the legislation is upon appropriation bills, but because they do not like the legislation itself. This House has always, under Republican or Democratic rule, seen fit to legislate matters of great importance upon appropriation bills. When President Roosevelt was in the White House, it was upon the Agricultural appropriation bill that you passed a law relating to meat-inspection service, a law that takes four pages of print to state, and involving an expenditure of several million dollars. It was not urged then as an offense because it happened to be upon an appropriation bill.

What is the fact about this veto of the President? There is hardly a man here who does not know that if the President had expressed his full thought the veto would have been simply upon the Commerce Court provision, and being simply on that, this House would have passed the bill over his veto, because two-thirds of the Representatives of this legislative body do not agree with the President as to the wisdom of continuing this court. That is not a matter of inference, but it is a matter of common knowledge. But, having determined to veto the bill, he then finds that here and there is certain opposition to another item in the bill, and concludes that by throwing it in as a makeweight he may be able to get enough men to support his position and thus prevent the repetition of what has happened for two days past, namely, the passage of the bill over his veto. Does any man believe, in regard to a great supply bill at this time of the year, that the enactment in it of this law that does not go into operation for seven years represents such a menace or proposes such a vicious change as to warrant the use of the veto power for that reason? The truth is that the President's discussion of this very matter of civil service is a justification for the action taken by Congress. He admits it is inefficient, but he says he does not like the seven-year-tenure proposition.

I will tell you where the value of the seven-year tenure lies. It puts the inertia of government in favor of keeping out the weaklings and the incompetents, instead of putting, as it is now, the inertia of government and of governmental officials in favor of keeping in the inefficient and the incompetent. What is the vice of the present civil-service law? Not in the method by which men are put in office, but in the fact that through generosity and nonaction the heads of the department keep in the governmental employ men who ought not to be there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield two minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. Much is said about the hardships of men who have only a seven-year tenure; that the amount of worry that they will undergo will cause them to fail to well perform their functions. Does the President mean and believe that the short tenure of four years that he has has caused him so much worry as to whether he may continue in office another term as to prevent him from performing ably his functions, and is that the true explanation of his failure? [Applause on the Democratic side.] The truth is that men are fortunate in life who can look forward to seven years of assured position. I think it would be well if men understood when they went into the departments that it was incumbent upon them to make good or they would have to do for themselves what those in the outside world do—go up against the competition of others more efficient. This is a tempest in a teapot, largely stirred up by the newspapers of the District, which necessarily pander to the readers of those papers in the District. These same papers raised holy Cain when we undertook to lengthen the hours of labor of employees here 30 minutes a day because it took away 30 minutes in which they could spend their salaries in the stores that advertised in the newspapers. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Out in the country there is no such terrible feeling about the outrage of this provision as to warrant the President in his veto. As I stated a moment ago, the veto is really based on the Commerce Court clause, and men should vote with that understanding. If I agreed with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I would vote to sustain the veto; but believing that the Commerce Court ought not to exist for railroad matters any more than a special court ought to exist for other kinds of litigation, I for my part shall vote to override the veto of the President. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, the question is, Shall this bill pass notwithstanding the objections of the President? So far as the objection to the abolition of the Commerce Court, I am not convinced. I voted against the creation of that court. I voted to abolish it. If it came up as a separate measure I would again vote to abolish it. As to the seven-year tenure clause in this appropriation bill, to my mind the gentlemen who have argued this question have not met the objections of the President, and it seems to me that the merits of this provision are not as clear as they should be. It seems to me this provision would go far to destroy the whole civil service of the Government, and I am not prepared to vote for it upon reconsideration. This practice of attaching general substantive legislation upon appropriation bills is agreed on all hands not to be a good practice. It has been criticized by Members on both sides of the House as an evil. One of the inevitable results touching the practice of attaching general legislation upon appropriation bills is to minimize the functions of the other committees of this House.

In the wisdom of Congress they have divided the labors of the House of Representatives among various committees, the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on the Civil Service, and various other committees, who are to attend and give consideration to the different measures of substantive legislation. If we allow the Appropriations Committee to perform that function we will soon have emasculated the other committee so as to render them useless. I think it is a tendency that ought not to be encouraged, and it seems to me that the majority of the House, the Members on the other side of the Chamber, ought to have no difficulty in presenting both of these propositions as independent measures, one reported from the Interstate Commerce Committee and the other reported from the Committee on the Civil Service. When so reported they would command more respect and receive more careful consideration than if they were to be taken up by main strength on an appropriation bill, without the information and consideration that those committees could give to the subject. For that reason I am not satisfied that the bill ought to pass notwithstanding the President's objection, and I shall vote to sustain the veto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] will use some of his time; I have only two speeches more on this side.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Then go ahead with one.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON]. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I can not believe that the President of the United States is possessed of such inordinate conceit and vanity as to think that his individual views are sounder and more to be preferred in all matters of legislation than the concrete wisdom of the majority of this House and the deliberate conclusions of the majority of the Senate, and yet, if we are to judge by what has happened during the last two or three days, during which a sluice of veto messages has been poured in upon us, the President must have reached that conclusion. Notwithstanding I belong to the opposite political school, or, rather, hold to a different political faith from the President, yet I must say that I believe he is a good man. I believe the President wants to do what he thinks best in all matters of legislation as he sees it, but unfortunately the President is not always permitted to see things just as they are. We all know that the President is a man easily persuaded, and I am driven to the conclusion, having listened carefully to this message that he sent to us vetoing this bill, that he has adopted the conclusions of others rather than reached and expressed conclusions of his own. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

He speaks in his message of the grave dangers of engrafting substantive legislation upon appropriation bills, and yet one must confess that he was quite slow to wake up to that danger. Two years of his administration passed by and while the Members on the Republican side of the Chamber constituted the majority and were in control of appropriation bills never through a veto message did he voice this belief and point out that great danger. Why is it that he has reached this conclusion just at this time; is it not that he opposes what is being done rather than how it is being done? And, Mr. Speaker, what particular matters are inveighed against by the President in this message? Two propositions of legislation dealing with matters which were peculiarly germane to the subject matter dealt with in this bill. We have not violated any of our established customs in this effort at legislation, neither have we violated any of the traditions of the English-speaking people in so far as they relate to lawmaking on supply bills. For centuries the English people, whenever they saw fit, have insisted upon their right to attach conditions to bills granting money to the Crown. In our own appropriation bills we have always insisted on the right to impose limitations; to fix conditions upon expenditures to be made. We had a court provided for in this bill—the Commerce Court—a court which the body granting supplies regarded as unnecessary, a court that had been discredited, a court that had become useless, and surely the representatives of the people, who are chargeable with responsibility for the handling of the public purse, have a right to say "We will no longer appropriate for this court but will abolish it." I say we have such right and that we can say so in this very bill. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to discuss that portion of the President's message dealing with the Commerce Court. I will discuss the other feature of his message.

I was particularly struck by one statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] with reference to section 5 of the bill dealing with the civil service, upon which the President also bases his veto. A careful reading of the President's message vetoing this section relating to the classified service will show that it is a splendid argument in support of the proposition we embodied in this bill.

Now, upon what does the President really base objection to section 5? Aside from pointing to the danger of legislation upon appropriation bills what does he say? In the first place he commends section 4 of our bill, saying it is most meritorious. He points out that in section 4 there is a provision under which the superannuated clerk must go when his inefficiency is determined, which inefficiency is to be determined by a record, which is required to be kept and which is provided for in section 4; and yet the principal, and I might say the controlling, ground upon which he bases his veto of section 5 is that it affords an opportunity for an exercise of prejudice and arbitrary power on the part of the bureau chief in making up this efficiency record, which is, as I have said, conferred upon such bureau chief by section 4, which the President commends so highly to this House.

Now, only one other ground is urged by the President as the basis of his veto, and that is that the peace of mind and contentment of the clerks will be destroyed or so impaired that they can not properly discharge their official duties if we prescribe for them a fixed tenure of office. How can the President reach such a conclusion? Does a fixed tenure of office have this effect? The tenure of our own offices is fixed. Is our peace of mind so disturbed that we are unable to properly discharge our duties? Has the President himself been unable to properly discharge the duties imposed upon him? Why, his tenure of office is fixed at four years. Has his peace of mind been so disturbed, has he been so discontented in the discharge of his official duties that he has been unable to properly discharge the duties imposed upon him by the laws and Constitution of our country? Gentlemen, I confess that he has been greatly disturbed, and that he is greatly disturbed now; and this disturbance of his mind, in my deliberate opinion, is the occasion of the frequency of these veto messages at this time. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The President declares for a contributory pension for Government employees, which means ultimately a civil-pension list. This legislation we propose is the other alternative.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for four and one-half minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD] half a minute, at his request. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD] is recognized for half a minute.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I am deeply grateful to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for yielding me 10 minutes. I could not get it on my own side, because I differ from the majority on that side for the second time during my experience on this floor. The first occasion was when I voted against the majority in regard to battleships. I am in favor of building two battleships each year and will vote accordingly. I am also desirous of seeing our Nation lead the world in airships and will vote for any reasonable appropriation to accomplish that purpose. In my judgment the nation that leads the way in aerial accomplishments will lead the world in peace as well as in war.

The second occasion was when I voted for the establishment of a tariff commission, starting out with the Speaker and continuing with the Speaker as far as he went.

Mr. Speaker, I agree heartily with what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] has said with regard to the veto power of the President. Truly, if he had exercised that power against the Payne-Aldrich bill he might have saved himself and the Nation considerable trouble.

Mr. BURLESON. Woes.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Yes; woes, as my friend from Texas says.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the abolishment of the Commerce Court [applause], but I am in favor of retaining the civil-service feature in all its fullness. [Applause.] I do not think that my good friend from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] stated the case exactly right.

We are elected for two years and are paid a fairly remunerative salary, while the clerks and others in the employ of the Government, when they assumed their places, expected to fill them for life at a salary that at times does not provide a decent living for themselves and their families.

I will favor a seven-year tenure when the Government does what many of our large railroad and mercantile corporations now do, namely, pay their men pensions after 25 or 30 years of faithful service. I am heartily in favor of this reform, and I hope to have an opportunity to vote to enact it into law.

I am opposed to continuing the Commerce Court and would so vote if this question were alone before the House. I am in favor of retaining the civil service in all its integrity and would so vote if I had the opportunity.

Now that I must vote on the questions together I will vote to sustain the President's veto and thus, I trust, add an hour of happiness to the Government employees who so faithfully serve the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. In order to satisfy the curiosity of the House, which must have been raised by the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey, as to where he really stands, I may say that while I yielded him time, I understand he votes on the other side. [Laughter.]

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. That is true. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, considerable criticism has been indulged in by gentlemen on the other side of the House against the President for exercising the right conferred upon him by the Constitution in sending in a veto message; and we are told that the King of England has not vetoed a bill of Parliament for lo, these many, many years, or hundreds of years.

The truth is that the King of England has not vetoed a bill of Parliament for almost, if not more than, a hundred years before our Constitution makers wrote into the Constitution the right of the President to exercise his prerogatives in a veto message, and the reason is very clear. We do not have what is known as a responsible ministry or a responsible Government. The people of the United States elect the Members of the House of Representatives, and the same people elect the President, not under the control of the House of Representatives. In England the people who elect the House of Commons elect, at the same time and with the same votes, the same officials as the ministry to be placed in power; and the President of the United States, who is responsible not to us as the English ministry is responsible to Parliament, but is responsible to the people who elected him, has the same right to express his opinion concerning legislation that we have to express ours.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. We first pass upon the propositions, and when we send them to the President, if he disapproves he exercises his right, and then we have another chance here under the provisions of the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. I wish to suggest one thing that the gentleman from Illinois, of course, is familiar with, and that is that the veto of the King of England is different from that of the President of the United States. The veto of the King of England is an absolute veto, and that is the reason why he does not exercise it. The veto of the President is a qualified veto, which can be overturned by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. MANN. Well, I understand what the gentleman says, but the principal reason why it is not exercised there is because the ministry are the ones who bring in the legislation, and they are the ones who are in control of Parliament, and the moment they can not enact their legislation they are compelled to resign and appeal to the people. It would be impossible for the men who present the legislation to confront a situation where they are required to veto the very legislation which they prepared and which they enacted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to detain the House with an argument on the subject of the Commerce Court or the seven-year-tenure provision. I voted for the conference report. I am not inimical to the proposition that there should be a fixed tenure for the clerks and other officials of the Government in Washington. I am not imbued with any great affection for the Commerce Court. I declined, in the first instance, to introduce into this House a bill providing for the Commerce Court, but it is fair to the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle to say that the father of the Commerce Court was William R. Hearst, whom many of those gentlemen are now praying will be lenient in this campaign. [Laughter.] When Mr. Hearst was a Member of this House he introduced a bill providing for a court of transportation. Other gentlemen afterwards introduced somewhat similar bills. The Commerce Court, under a different title, was first found in a bill reported to this House known as the Esch-Townsend bill. It was the contribution of the now Senator from Michigan, then a Member of the House, Mr. TOWNSEND. It was voted for by every gentleman on the Democratic side of the House at the time.

Mr. BURLESON. Evil mixed with good.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what good there was in the bill, but that was the sum and substance of it. Gentlemen then hailed it as the very acme of perfection. When the Commerce Court came before the House, in the bill in which it was enacted, I had charge of the bill. Everyone in the House then knew my position upon that matter. I defended the proposition as representing the committee, without undertaking to defend it from the personal standpoint, but it was enacted into law. Now, to me it is childish for Congress to create a court in one term of Congress and repeal it in the next, without giving time to demonstrate whether it works well or works ill.

Mr. Speaker, in connection with the criticism of the President, I desire to call the attention of the House to a plank in the platform of the Democratic Party recently enacted at Baltimore:

> We favor a single presidential term, and to that end urge the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution making the President of the United States ineligible for reelection, and we pledge the candidate of this convention to this principle.

This morning the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], chairman of the Committee on Rules, presented a report from that committee about an inconsequential matter, while there is pending in this House a resolution reported from the Committee on the Judiciary to carry into effect this provision for a single term for President. Where is the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY]? Why does not the gentleman from Texas present to this House a report from the Committee on Rules giving the House a chance to vote for a constitutional amendment to make the presidential term one term?

Mr. CLAYTON. And the gentleman might also say in that connection that there has been pending before the Rules Committee for some weeks a resolution providing that a special rule be brought into the House giving the House a chance to act on this presidential one-term joint resolution.

Mr. MANN. The distinguished Committee on Rules has plenty of time to bring in idle nonsense concerning the purchase of Monticello, but no time to present a resolution concerning the most important thing now pending before the American people, a constitutional amendment which in the future will limit the presidential term to one term and make the holder of that office forever ineligible to another. I hope the gentlemen on that side of the aisle will read their platform and compel the Committee on Rules to act in this matter.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I will say in connection with what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] has just said that there has also been pending before the Committee on Rules for more than two months a special rule, introduced by me, providing for the bringing out from the Rules Committee a special order providing for consideration at this session of the immigration bill to which our party since 1896 has been committed, and on which subject our candidate for President has, in his valuable historical works, expressed himself in former times, and I sincerely hope the gentleman can induce the Committee on Rules to act favorably at once on that. I agree with the gentleman that these measures demanded by our platforms and the people are much more important than a special rule to consider forcing the owner against his will to sell "Monticello," that we used to call Monticello. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. Is not the gentleman from Illinois aware that since that Democratic platform was made a very high authority has announced that a platform is not a program, but simply something to call attention to what the people are thinking of?

Mr. MANN. I am endeavoring to call attention to a matter that the people are thinking of at this time.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In a moment. At this time, in the condition that the country is in concerning politics now, it ought to be able to adopt unanimously, and without a dissenting voice, an amendment to the Constitution fixing the presidential term for six years, and rendering any person who hereafter holds it ineligible for another term.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. My time is up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina has 14 minutes remaining.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it is refreshing to find Republicans studying the Democratic platform. After the action of the House in the last two days in passing two important tariff bills over the President's vetoes, I feel quite confident that if more Republicans studied attentively the Democratic platform we could enact our entire program before the session ends. [Laughter and applause.]

The President of the United States in his message asserts that nothing but reasons of special importance justify the vetoing of a great supply bill for the Government. He states that in his veto message of the Army bill he gave reasons justifying the vetoes of this character which he would not repeat. In that veto message, Mr. Speaker, the President says:

> The dangers inherent in the practice of attaching substantive legislation to appropriation bills have been frequently pointed out by my predecessors. The only justification that has been offered for such practice is that it has been found a convenient method for facilitating the passage of measures which are deemed expedient by all the branches of government which participate in legislation. Thus, it has more than once occurred that useful items of Army legislation, generally of an urgent character, have been passed in this manner, when the desirability of the enactment was recognized and acquiesced in by the common censent of both the Executive and of Congress.

It is almost impertinent for a President to criticize the manner in which the Congress transacts its business. It is the display of a shocking ignorance of the history and of development of the free institutions among the Anglo-Saxon people for the President and others to inveigh against the practice of attaching important legislation demanded by the representatives of the people to the bills which carry the public money for the maintenance of the Government.

In the Federalist, fifty-seventh number, in an article written by Madison or Hamilton, and generally accredited to Hamilton, we find the following passage:

> The House of Representatives can not only refuse but they alone can propose the supplies requisite for the support of the Government. They, in a word, hold the purse, that powerful instrument by which we behold, in the history of the British constitution, an infant and humble representation of the people gradually enlarging the sphere of its activity and importance, and finally reducing, as far as it seems to have wished, all the overgrown prerogatives of the other branches of the Government. This power over the purse may, in fact, be regarded as the most complete and effectual weapon with which any constitution can arm the immediate representatives of the people for obtaining a redress of every grievance and for carrying into effect every just and salutary measure.

Here are succinctly stated the reasons that, in our Constitution, no limitation was placed upon the power of the Representatives of the people to grant supplies of public money for the maintenance of the Government, under such conditions as the people's Representatives themselves should determine.

Formerly the rules of the two Houses prohibited legislation on appropriation bills. Such was not the custom for a long period after the organization of the Government. The rules of the House to-day, adopted under specific grant of power in the Constitution, authorize legislation designed to accomplish certain reforms upon such bills. The rules adopted at various times by both Houses to prohibit designated legislation upon the appropriation bills were adopted without reference to or thought of the Executive. They were designed merely to prevent deadlocks between the two Houses, and not for the convenience of or to please the Executive. The President's statement that legislation has at various times been included in appropriation bills when the Congress and the Executive were in accord as to its wisdom is erroneous, and based upon a misunderstanding of events in our history.

All of the commentators on the Constitution, Mr. Speaker, are agreed as to the grounds upon which the veto should properly be exercised.

Mr. Tucker, in his well-known work on the Constitution, sums them up as well as any of them:

> The purpose of the veto power—

He says—> may be summarized to protect the Executive power against invasion by Congress, against hostile or insufficient action of Congress under the eighteenth clause of section 8, Article I, above referred to. To protect the Constituion against the unconstitutional legislative action and against injudicious and hasty legislation.

Calhoun, in a memorable speech on the veto power, delivered in the Senate in 1842, gave one other reason that might justify the President's action. He said that—> he might find it necessary to interpose his veto for the maintenance of his views of the Constitution, or the policy of the party of which he is the head, and which elevated him to power.

The President bases his veto, Mr. Speaker, of this bill, first upon his disapproval of section 5, one of the provisions relating to the civil service, because, as he states:

> I do not think it will accomplish its proposed purpose. I do not think it adds anything in efficiency to the provision of section 4.

He objects because he does not think it will be effective and because he is not willing to risk the possible danger to the civil service by its enactment. Is that one of the grave reasons set forth by the commentators as a justification for a veto? The other reason is that the Congress proposes to abolish the Commerce Court.

What is the history of the Commerce Court? It appeared for the first time in what was known as the administration bill in the Sixty-first Congress, relative to the regulation of rates. It failed of being stricken out of the bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when under consideration in the House by a tie vote. It was retained in the bill on a motion to recommit on May 10, 1910, by a vote of 157 ayes to 176 noes.

In the Senate, on June 3, 1910, the vote on the motion to strike out the court was 25 ayes to 38 noes. This Commerce Court has never been recommended in any Republican platform. It was not even mentioned in the recent Republican platform. It is the single pet idea of the Chief Executive of the United States. There is now an overwhelming sentiment in both Houses against its continuance. In the Senate, at this session, the vote was 24 for retaining the court and 36 for abolishing it. The action of the Democratic House in abolishing this court was approved by the Democratic convention at Baltimore because it approves our record here. It is approved by the only progressive party, the Democratic Party. The answer to the President's question as to why the court should be abolished can be found in the platform of the pseudoprogressive party, the so-called Bull Moose Party, the head of which is his erstwhile great friend and former sponsor, Col. Roosevelt. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In that platform is found this declaration·

> In order that the power of the commission—

The Interstate Commerce Commission—> to protect the people may not be impaired or destroyed, we demand the abolition of the Commerce Court.

Real progressives and pseudoprogressives all unite in the demand for the abolition of the court, and only those stand against it who have been stigmatized and fixed as the real reactionaries headed by the President, William H. Taft. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I have had prepared this volume of 300 pages containing a résumé of legislation enacted upon appropriation bills during the last 16 years of Republican Congresses. I have a list of the more important items which I shall include in the RECORD. The President declaims against the practice of including legislation in appropriation bills. He should be the last man in public life to do so. He has been the chief beneficiary personally of two of the most important pieces of legislation ever enacted upon appropriation bills during our history. In 1910 the salary of the President was increased in an appropriation bill from $50,000 to $75,000 a year, and he has been the only beneficiary of such legislation. I wonder whether the man who was then President, if he could have foreseen the future and pictured the events of to-day, would have so readily approved that bill giving such benefits to the present Chief Executive? [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

On July 4, 1901, the Army appropriation bill, one of the bills lately vetoed by the President because it carried far-reaching legislation, was approved by President McKinley, and that bill contained the legislation under which Mr. Taft was appointed as the civil governor of the Philippine Islands, and under which he exercised the comprehensive powers given to him as such governor [applause on the Democratic side], and under which he obtained his first recognition at the hands of the American people since the time he had been guilty of issuing indefensible injunctions in labor cases when a judge of the United States court.

Mr. Speaker, what is the justification for legislation on appropriation bills? This very bill speaks more eloquently of the necessity than any other action that could be taken by Congress. It contains a provision that no vacancies in the War Department shall be filled until the number of employees there shall be reduced 5 per cent. The President has the power to make this necessary reduction. The War Department is overloaded with unnecessary employees. The President knows that better than any other man in the Government, because he served at the head of this department himself as the Secretary of War. He does not criticize Congress for putting this coercion into this legislative appropriation bill. He does not find fault with Congress for enacting this legislation. He knows it is a necessity. He knows that if he performs his duty, or if he had performed his duty, Congress would not be obliged to put this coercion into this bill; and yet, failing to perform his duty, he acquiesces in this provision to compel them to make the necessary reduction.

Mr. Speaker, that brings me to remind the House that Mr. Bryce, in his great work on the American Commonwealth, calls attention to the fact that the Congress has only two powers of coercion over the Executive; one the power of impeachment, which can only be exercised under conditions of the most extraordinary character; and the other the power to place legislation in appropriation bills and to compel the President to accept legislation demanded by the people in return for the grants of money to maintain the Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let me in this connection call attention to the attitude of a Republican Senate upon this question of vetoes by the President. It had long been contended that the only ground upon which the President should exercise the power was that the legislation was an invasion of the Constitution. By degrees this contention was abandoned. The commentators have concluded, however, that only for the most weighty reasons, either the encroachment of Congress upon the Executive or because of hasty, ill-considered legislation, should the President interpose his veto. None of those reasons exists in this case. No such reasons are given in the veto message.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A Republican Senate in the Fiftieth Congress took up the question of certain vetoes by President Cleveland, and a committee made an elaborate report thereon, in which is this statement:

> It can not be maintained upon any fair construction of the Constitution that the power of Executive disapproval ought to be exercised upon acts of this character for the sole reason that the President differs in opinion from Congress upon a mere question of the weight of testimony, or upon the expediency of a special act which subserves a proper general purpose and which imperils no power of any other department.

Mr. Speaker, this House within the past few days reasserted its prerogative when it compelled another branch of the Congress to accept its dictation that in granting supplies for the support of the Government useless and unnecessary offices should be abolished. That fight has continued for eight or nine years.

The House has finally been vindicated in its right to control the purse of the people. Here comes a second controversy now between the House—the representative of the people—and the Executive. I believe the most important thing before this House is that it shall assert again its prerogatives and that it shall send notice to the Executive and to every other branch of the Government that the Representatives of the people propose to maintain inviolate their right to control the supplies for the support of the Government upon the conditions which they lay down and upon no other. I hope the House will rally to the support of that principle and send this bill to the Senate, the objections of the President notwithstanding. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

List of most important legislation enacted on general appropriation acts during the period December 6, 1897, to March 4, 1911:

Meat-inspection law.
Declaration of relations with Cuba following the Spanish War (known as the Spooner Act).
Travel allowances and pay of the Army.
First provision for civil government of the Philippine Islands.
Creation of the Dental Corps of the Army.
Amendment of the Chinese-exclusion act.
Antideficiency law.
Jamestown Exposition.
District of Columbia:
- Creation of the board of education.
- Taxation of real estate.
- Taxation of personal property.
- Taxation by licenses.
- Vagrancy law.
- Regulation of gas and electric companies.
- Reformatory and workhouse established.
- Regulation of public lighting.

Coeur d'Alene, Red Lake, and Blackfeet Indian Reservations opened to entry.
Important agreements effected with Indian tribes.
General law regulating purchase of supplies for executive departments.
Pay and allowances of the Navy.
Increase in strength of Navy and Marine Corps.
Paris Exposition.
Amendment of the act providing for the Louisiana Purchase Exposition.
House of Representatives and Senate Office Buildings and the Capitol power plant.
Jamestown Exposition.
Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition.
Enlargement of the Capitol Grounds.
Many important acts affecting the construction of the Panama Canal.

The foregoing, together with much other legislation general in character but of minor importance, comprises about one-half of the entire bulk of legislation enacted on general appropriation acts during the period stated. The one-half not included in the volume is legislation, but of such a personal or unimportant character as to preclude its inclusion therein.

In addition to the foregoing, much minor legislation affecting all branches of the Government service has been enacted. Acts regulating estimates of appropriations, expenditure of appropriations, correcting abuses in the administration of governmental affairs, affecting employees of the Government, purchase or disposition of public property; in fact, touching every branch of the service in every conceivable manner.

The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1910 increased the salary of the President of the United States from $50,000 to $75,000 per annum and fixed the compensation of the President thereafter at $75,000.

On July 4, 1901, President McKinley appointed Mr. Taft first civil governor of the Philippine Islands under authority of legislation enacted on the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1902, and under the provisions of which legislation he performed the duties of civil governor.

The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1908 contained a provision increasing salaries of Members of Congress and of the heads of the executive departments. The salary of the Secretary of War under the provisions of this legislation was increased from $8,000 to $12,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? Upon that question the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 147, nays 107, answered "present" 8, not voting 129, as follows:

Mr. BARNHART and Mr. LINDSAY with Mr. HENRY of Connecticut.

Mr. PUJO and Mr. PATTEN of New York (to override the veto) with Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE and Mr. HAY with Mr. CRUMPACKER (for sustaining the President).

Mr. JAMES (in favor of passing bill over veto) with Mr. MCCALL (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. MAYS with Mr. THISTLEWOOD.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. PARRAN.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina with Mr. GILLETT.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri with Mr. DYER.

Mr. SPARKMAN with Mr. DAVIDSON.

For the session:

Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. ANDRUS.

Mr. FOSTER with Mr. KOPP.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. KOPP, and I desire to withdraw my vote of "aye" and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The name of Mr. FOSTER was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GILLETT, and I desire to withdraw my vote of "aye" and answer "present."

The name of Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina was called, and he answered "Present."

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 147, the nays are 107, present 8, and the House refuses to pass the bill the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding. [Applause on the Republican side.]

CIVIL GOVERNMENT IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS (S. DOC. NO. 927).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 86 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith a set of the laws enacted by the Second Philippine Legislature during its second session, from October 16, 1911, to February 6, 1912, inclusive, and also certain laws enacted by the Philippine Commission.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 15, 1912.

WOOL TARIFF BILL.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks for the purpose of inserting in the RECORD some observations on the passage of the wool tariff bill (H. R. 22195) over the President's veto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] asks unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD his remarks on the wool bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the remarks referred to:

"HAS OR HAS NOT THE WOOL TARIFF BILL BEEN PASSED BY THE HOUSE OVER THE PRESIDENT'S VETO?

"When the question came up August 13, 1912, 174 Members voted to pass the bill over the President's veto, 80 Members voted against it, and 10, when their names were called, answered 'present.' There were, as shown by the Journal, 264

Members present. Two-thirds of that number would be 176, but there were only 174 votes cast in favor of the passage of the bill. The total membership of this House at the present time is 394, but there are 4 vacancies, so that the total number entitled to vote would be 390, of which 260 would constitute two-thirds.

"The constitutional provision upon the subject is as follows:

"Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approves, he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that House it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively.

"If the phrase 'two-thirds of that House' means two-thirds of the entire membership, it is plain that the bill has not received the requisite constitutional majority of two-thirds. There are some judicial decisions to the effect that two-thirds of the entire membership are required. Thus in State v. Gould (31 Minn. Repts., 189) it was decided, as stated in the syllabus, that the 'two-thirds vote by which our constitution authorizes the legislature to establish new courts is a vote in each house of all the members thereof.' The majority of the decisions, however, are not to that effect. Thus in the Bonded Debt cases, reported in Twelfth South Caroline Reports, it was decided by the supreme court of that State, as appears from paragraph 19 of the syllabus, that—

"The provision in section 7, article 6 of the State constitution, that no law creating a public debt 'shall take effect until it shall have been passed by a vote of two-thirds of the members of the general assembly,' etc., means two-thirds of the members present, a quorum voting.

"And in Smith v. Jennings, reported in 67 S. C. Reports, at page 324, the same court decided, as stated in the syllabus, that—

"Under section 23, article 4, of the constitution, two-thirds of the members of the house of representatives, in a lawfully constituted session, are sufficient to pass a joint resolution over the veto of the governor.

"The justice delivering the opinion of the court in that case, said:

"When the constitution speaks of 'two-thirds of that house' as the vote required to pass a bill or joint resolution over the veto of the governor, it means two-thirds of the house as then legally constituted and acting upon the matter.

"To the same effect is State v. McBride (4 Mo., 186).

"That is in harmony with the parliamentary rulings in either House of Congress.

"The two-thirds vote required to pass a bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President, is 'two-thirds of the Members present.' (4 Hinds, 3537.)

"On July 8, 1856, the House having under consideration a bill which had been vetoed by the President, it was, by a vote of 139 to 55, resolved that the bill be passed, two-thirds of the Members present agreeing thereto. Fourth Hinds, page 3538, note 2 of which reads as follows:

"The principle that two-thirds of those present are sufficient was established on March 3, 1845 (2d sess. 28th Cong., Journal, p. 567; Globe, p. 396), when the House passed a Senate bill over a veto by a vote of yeas 127, nays 30, a yea vote considerably less than the entire membership. Mr. Speaker Jones declared 'that the bill was passed by the constitutional majority of two-thirds.' On July 7, 1856 (1st sess. 34th Cong., Senate Journal, p. 419; Globe, pp. 1544–1550), President pro tempore Bright made in the Senate a formal ruling based on this House practice, and after learned debate was sustained on appeal, yeas 34, nays 7.

"It has never so far as I have been able to find been definitely decided that less than two-thirds of those present could constitutionally override a veto. The ruling by Speaker Reed (5 Hinds, 7027) which has been referred to can hardly be said to cover the point, for in that case more than two-thirds of those present did vote in favor of the measure. Mr. HILL of Connecticut made the point that the vote required was two-thirds of the entire membership. That point was overruled by Speaker Reed, who said:

"What constitutes a House? A quorum of the membership, a majority, one-half and one more—that is all that is necessary to constitute a House to do all the business that comes before the House.

"Nobody any longer doubts that proposition, but while the presence of a bare majority of all the Members is sufficient to constitute a quorum to do business, nevertheless, when there are more than that number present, all who are present constitute part of the quorum and, of course, part of the House. It can not be said that any particular Members constitute the quorum and that all others who may be present do not constitute part of the quorum. Each Member has equal rights with every other Member and is just as much a part of the House as any other Member. All the Members who are present, provided the number is not less than a majority, constitute the quorum—and constitute the House. When the Constitution requires 'two-thirds of that House' to pass a bill over a veto, can it be passed by a lesser number than two-thirds of those who are present? If, as is claimed, it is necessary that there be a quorum present and that two-thirds of those voting, no matter how few they may be, can override a veto, then it follows that if a quorum should answer 'present' and only two Members vote in favor of passing the bill over the veto and one vote against it, the bill, having received the votes of two-thirds of those voting would have been passed over the veto; or we might go further and say that if just one voted in favor of the bill and none voted against it, the bill would be passed over the President's veto, for in that case three-thirds of those voting would have voted for its passage. Did the Constitution intend that anything like that could be possible, when it positively required a vote of 'two-thirds of that House?' It is said that those who answer 'present' can be considered present only for the purpose of constituting a quorum. But when a quorum is thus established it is the House, and those who have thus answered 'present' are part of 'that House.' Suppose there had voted 100 in the affirmative and 50 in the negative, and there had answered 'present' 46, making the total 196, or just a quorum; the 46 answering 'present' would be necessary to constitute the House. Without them there would be no constitutional House in session. Would not those 46 Members constitute part of 'that House' within the meaning of the constitutional provision relating to proceedings in veto cases? And if so, is it not plain that at least two-thirds of those 196 Members, all of whose presence was necessary to constitute 'that House,' would be required to vote in favor of the bill to pass it over the veto?

"The only decision to be found upon a case precisely like that in hand is Brown v. Nash (1 Wyo. Repts, p. 85), where it was held that—

"In order to pass a bill in the legislature over the governor's veto, the bill must receive two-thirds of the votes of the members actually present; two-thirds of those voting are not sufficient, if other members are present.

"Wyoming was at that time a Territory. The act of Congress approved July 25, 1868, providing a temporary government for that Territory, provided that—

"Whenever the governor fails to approve of a bill, he shall return it, with his objections, to the house in which it originated, who shall enter the objections at large upon their journal and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of that house shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, where it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if it shall be approved by two-thirds of the members of that house, it shall become a law; but in all such cases the votes of both houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, to be entered on the journal of each house, respectively.

"It will be noted that the language of the statute is identical with that of the Federal Constitution.

"A vetoed bill had been passed by the upper branch by a two-thirds vote and was transmitted to the house of representatives, together with the governor's objections. The house consisted of 13 members. The question being put, 'Shall the bill pass, the objections of the governor to the contrary notwithstanding?' seven members voted in the affirmative, three in the negative, two were absent, and one, the speaker, was present and did not vote, but asked to be excused from voting. The journal showed 11 members present, 1 not voting. The court did not hold that it required two-thirds of the entire membership of the house, but that it did require two-thirds of those present, whether they all voted or not. Upon this point Chief Justice Fisher, delivering the opinion of the court, said, at page 94:

"From an examination of the journal of the house of representatives of the Territory at the time the bill in question was under consideration, after it had been returned by the governor with his objections, it appears that there were 11 members present up to the time that the vote was about to be taken; that the speaker, for some reason unknown to us, requested to be excused from voting, which request was granted. The roll was then called and the yeas and nays recorded. Under ordinary circumstances the failure of the speaker to respond would be a satisfactory conclusion that he was absent, and that there being three members above the number required to constitute a quorum, two-thirds of the members present having voted in favor of the passage of the bill over the veto of the governor would leave no doubt that it received the requisite vote to give it the force and sanction of a law, as much as though it had received a unanimous vote of the house. But while the journal of the proceedings of that day shows, that although the speaker did not vote on the passage of the bill, that he was present for all other purposes, because the journal shows that the speaker arose and announced the passage of the bill, thus showing his actual presence.

"And again on page 95:

"Now, if the speaker of the house was present, whether he voted or not, there were 11 members present, and it would require more than 7 votes to make two-thirds. The law is not that one-third voted against the bill, but that it is that two-thirds of the members present did vote for it. Now, if the speaker were present, no matter whether he voted for it or not, then there were 11 members present, and it would require at least 8 votes to constitute two-thirds; if he was absent, then there were but 10 votes, and 7 would be two-thirds. If, then, the speaker was absent, how could he immediately after the reading of the votes by the clerks announce that the bill had passed, the objections of the governor to the contrary notwithstanding? So that it appears to us very clearly that this law was not passed in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, or the organic act of this territory, from the fact, not that it did not receive two-thirds of the votes recorded, but that it did not receive the votes of two-thirds of the members present, and therefore is not one of the laws of the territory.

"In Commonwealth v. Wickersham (66 Pa., 134), the case of a county convention of school directors, where there were 112 present, 56 voted for Swartz for county superintendent and 55 voted for Kast, 1 member present refusing to vote. It was held by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania that Swartz, not having received a majority of the votes of all the members present, was not elected. Mr. Justice Sharswood, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"The thirty-ninth section of the act expressly provides that the selection shall be 'viva voce by a majority of the whole number of directors present.' It is urged that the director refusing to vote was virtually absent. He might perhaps have withdrawn, but he did not do so. He remained and, being present, was entitled to be counted. It matters not what he supposed to be the effect of his action. The legal intendment was that he voted for neither or for the minority candidate. It would be dangerous to fritter away the express provision of the statute by construing an actual presence into a virtual absence.

"The case of United States v. Ballin (144 U. S.), which has been cited, is not in point, but is, on the contrary, authority in favor of the proposition that those present but not voting constitute part of the house just as much as were those present and voting. In that case the vote was 138 in favor of the bill, and no votes were against it. Those voting did not constitute a quorum, but 74 answered 'present.' Counting them, there was a total of 212 present, constituting a quorum. It was so ruled by Speaker Reed, and the Supreme Court affirmed his ruling. The yeas in that case were more than a majority of all those present, so that the question did not arise which does arise here, the wool tariff bill having received the votes of 2 less than two-thirds of all the Members shown by the Journal to have been present and thus constituting 'that House.' I submit that it is, to say the least, doubtful whether it has been passed over the President's veto."

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 17595) to amend sections 1 and 118 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," with Senate amendments thereto, for the purpose of disagreeing to the Senate amendments and asking for a conference.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I will ask if the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] will not modify that motion so that it will be to concur with the amendments of the Senate? It is a local bill, in relation to the Chicago judiciary. It is a purely local matter, and is desired by the judges on the bench, the bar association, and press of the city. If the Senate amendments are not concurred in, the bill in all probability will be defeated.

The district courts last year had 286 court days held by outside judges, while there was one circuit judge more than was necessary to handle the business of the circuit court. This bill abolishes a circuit-court judgeship and establishes a district-court judgeship. I have seen the Senate Judiciary Committee and they are unanimous against the Cullop amendment, and a vote "no" means a defeat of the bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask, in deference to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EVANS], inasmuch as it is a local bill and he is the author of it, that the House concur in the Senate amendments to the bill.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, one of the amendments adopted by the Senate strikes out a provision which had been adopted by the House to that bill which is not only of local importance, but of country-wide importance. It provides for publicity of recommendations for appointment to the judiciary. I feel that I can not agree to that amendment, for I am in favor of publicity, and therefore I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] objects.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I also object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] also objects.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I desire to present a resolution from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask, then, that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] asks that the House disagree to the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 17595 and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Has the Chair laid this bill before the House, with the Senate amendments, for consideration?

The SPEAKER. No. The Chair has not. The Chair omitted to do it.

Mr. MANN. I am only asking it because I take it that when it is laid before the House it is in order, when any gentleman desires, to move to agree to the Senate amendments. They are not amendments which require consideration in the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CLAYTON. I concede that the gentleman is correct in his proposition. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the Clerk report the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

An act to amend sections 1 and 118 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary."

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote on the second amendment, striking out section 3. That is in regard to the publication of recommendations or indorsements of Federal judges. Section 3 is the section of the bill which the amendment strikes out.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on the other amendments? If not, the Chair will put the rest of the amendments in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments, exclusive of that striking out section 3.

The question was taken, and the amendments, except that striking out section 3, were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment striking out section 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 3. The section is as follows:
"SEC. 3. That hereafter, before the President shall appoint any district, circuit, or supreme judge he shall make public all indorsements made in behalf of any applicant."

Mr. CANNON. Is that a Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. That is what the Senate amendment strikes out.

Mr. CANNON. Then it is a Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendment is to strike out that section.

Mr. CANNON. Would not the proper motion be to concur or agree?

The SPEAKER. That motion has not been made.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to the Senate amendment striking out section 3.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I make the preferential motion that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the preferential motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EVANS] that the House concur in the Senate amendment striking out section 3 of the bill.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JAMES. The parliamentary inquiry which I desire to make is this: This roll call is upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EVANS] to agree to the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The vote will be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EVANS] to concur in the Senate amendment striking out that portion of the bill read last by the Clerk. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 93, nays 99, answered "present" 9, not voting 189, as follows:

From Saturday for the balance of the session:

Mr. BROUSSARD with Mr. YOUNG of Michigan.

Until August 28:

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina with Mr. MADDEN.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House ask for a conference.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. CLAYTON, Mr. WEBB, and Mr. STERLING.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CRAGO, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence indefinitely on account of serious illness in his family.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing an important statement in relation to farms in the national forests.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution and believe its adoption to-night will hasten the adjournment of this session 48 hours.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 693 (H. Rept. 1196).

Resolved, That immediately on the adoption of this rule it shall be in order to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 21279, a bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, together with the Senate amendments thereto, and to disagree to all the Senate amendments en bloc and ask for a conference notwithstanding the general rules of the House, and the Speaker shall, on the adoption of the resolution, appoint the conferees without any intervening motion.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the resolution is very plain. I can see no argument that can possibly be made against it. The Post Office bill ought to go to conference at once in order that this session may adjourn the latter part of this week or the early part of next week. [Applause.] I move the previous question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the Committee on Rules has no jurisdiction to report this resolution, because no such resolution has been introduced in the House.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it has been introduced in the House and referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that the resolution was reported and that debate had proceeded before the point of order was made by the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is not well taken, if the statement of the gentleman from Texas is correct, and, of course, the record will show.

Mr. MANN. I take the statement of the gentleman from Texas as correct.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have the gentleman from Texas yield me some time.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MANN. I want 20 minutes, the time that I would be entitled to under the rule.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I have no objection to the gentleman having 20 minutes, but I ask unanimous consent that at the end of 20 minutes the previous question may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that at the end of the 20 minutes the previous question be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the pretense of this resolution is that it will expedite the adjournment of the House. That is not the case. The facts in regard to the resolution are that the gentlemen are afraid to take a vote on the parcel-post proposition. Gentlemen on that side of the aisle in charge of this bill were informed that there would be no objection to sending this bill to conference, but that we proposed, if we had the power, to require a vote on the Senate amendment providing for a parcel post. No gentleman in this House can defend himself as being in favor of the parcel post if he votes for this resolution. No one will now object on this side of the House to sending the bill to conference, disagreeing to all of the Senate amendments except the one providing for a parcel post.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the gentleman if he will not ask, as the hour is late, the gentleman in charge of the bill on post offices and post roads, to agree that there will be no agreement touching the parcel-post amendment until the House has had an opportunity to vote upon it? It seems to me that that would meet the gentleman's objection and send the bill for consideration to conference. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent in my time——

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I want to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. MANN. I will ask unanimous consent that all of the Senate amendments with the exception of the amendment relating to parcel post be disagreed to, and the House vote upon that amendment.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I object to any agreement of that kind before the bill goes to conference.

The SPEAKER. The request is out of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a unanimous request is always in order.

The SPEAKER. When a resolution is pending and being debated?

Mr. MANN. At any time. However, the gentleman from Tennessee objected, and stated that the very purpose of the rule was to prevent the vote on the parcel-post proposition.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman does not fully understand my position. I object to that action being taken in the House just now until we have a conference on the question. I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to let the conference report come back and take instructions of the House on that question, or any other.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee knows, as I know and as every Member of the House knows, that when the conference report comes back it will be voted for or against in its entirety, and that it can not be separated, nor can instructions be given. Here is the time and the opportunity to vote on the parcel post.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean to say that we can not agree to the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]?

Mr. MANN. I mean to say that while you might disagree and report no agreement on the parcel post, you can not bring in a conference report carrying the parcel post and obtain a separate vote on it. If you are willing to have a separate vote, let us have it before it goes to conference. A Senate amendment, agreed to in the Senate by all parties, both Republican and Democratic Senators, carefully considered, worked out as an entirety, presents a proposition concerning the parcel post which every friend of parcel post can cheerfully vote for. But every friend of the parcel post will vote against this resolution.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? If the gentleman would not be quite so excited, perhaps I can find out what he wants.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is the gentleman from Tennessee who is excited. He got so excited that he rushed around——

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Oh, well, if the gentleman will not let me ask my question, all right.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will be civil about it, I will be glad to yield.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield or not?

Mr. MANN. I yield.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he is willing to have a separate vote after a conference has been had with the Senate conferees upon the question?

Mr. MANN. We have no power to have a separate vote if the conferees agree on the parcel-post proposition.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Suppose the conferees did not bring in a report, suppose that they withhold a report on the other question and come back for instructions upon this question?

Mr. MANN. If the conferees do not intend to bring in a conference report on the parcel post, why delay voting upon it? If the conferees are not to confer in reference to the parcel post, if they are to have no agreement on parcel post, why not vote upon it before the bill goes into conference?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I want to say this to the gentleman, if he will permit me. I have not desired to be quite so plain as I intend to be right now. The parcel-post proposition has been made up in the Senate, in my opinion, not in the interest of the farming community of this country or of the merchants of this country, but in the interest of the mail-order houses and the express companies and the railroads, and we are not willing, after investigation and report, to pass through a measure which the Post Office Committee has never considered, and which the Senate did not consider 10 minutes when it passed. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's statement that the Senate did not consider this proposition 10 minutes is like his other statement—entirely inaccurate.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The Senate did not consider it in committee for 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I say the Senate did consider it a great deal more than 10 minutes, as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will show.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I say in committee.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman confuses between the Senate as the committee and the Senate as a body itself. The bill was considered in the Senate. The Committee on the Post Office in the House considered the entire subject matter. They brought before the House a parcel-post proposition that would excite the laughter of monkeys. [Applause on the Republican side.] We have now presented to us a reasonable parcel-post proposition, not made up in the interest of mail-order houses, but a parcel-post proposition made up in the interest of the farming community, of the country merchant, and against the mail-order houses. Now is the time to accept it. The gentleman intends to endeavor to stifle the parcel post. There is no intention on the part of the House conferees to permit any adequate parcel-post proposition to go into this bill. If the Democratic side of the House desires to freeze out the parcel-post proposition, it may do so by the adoption of this resolution, but if they are in favor of a parcel post they should vote now upon the question of adopting the Senate amendment.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MANN. I will in a moment. I do not like to have the gentleman interrupt me every second. I do not criticize the gentleman. I will yield to him in a moment. The gentleman has the right to propose amendments to the Senate amendment, if he has any in his mind. He has known for some time what the Senate amendment would be. He has been studying this question, or ought to have been studying it. He could propose amendments to it if he wants to. I say that if this resolution goes through, then parcel post goes up in smoke. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to say this to the gentleman: That there will be amendments proposed in conference, if gentlemen I think of are on the conference committee, which will look to a perfected parcel post that will be in the interest of the whole country; but I did not rise to make that statement, and make it only in view of the last utterance of the gentleman from Illinois. The question I wanted to ask the gentleman is this: Will the gentleman object to the conference committee coming back for instructions upon this question and an open discussion of the question in the House after we have conferred on other matters?

Mr. MANN. What is the use of sending it to conference under an open discussion of this question after you have considered other matters? Let us have an open discussion of the question, without regard to the conference.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I want to accommodate the gentleman. If he does not want to do it, we will close it in conference.

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is the intention, to bring in a conference report which covers parcel post and does not provide for a respectable or adequate parcel post, and the only purpose of the gentleman in endeavoring to send the entire bill to conference without giving the House an opportunity of expressing itself upon this amendment is to prevent the House from doing what it wants to do, namely, provide a parcel post. We have presented here a rare spectacle. These gentlemen have talked for years about giving the people's Representatives a chance, and here is a bill sent to us with certain propositions in it and it is proposed now to refuse to let the Members of the House vote upon those propositions. Mr. CANNON, as Speaker of this House, never in his strongest days proposed such an autocratic, czarlike proposition as that. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

You have outdone CANNON. We will have learned something from you when we get in power again, for we will have learned that we have the right under this precedent to set aside the rules, to refuse votes upon special propositions, and to bunch them all under some special rule.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, we will not have any rules when we get back.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I have never in my very short career made a partisan speech in this House, or asked a partisan question, and I am not going to do so upon this subject, God helping me. I will ask the gentleman whether he has had time to give this subject sufficient attention to answer the question of whether he regards the Bourne measure as a parcel-post bill proper.

Mr. MANN. I do decidedly, and I had time enough to give consideration to this subject, and introduced a bill on the subject in the House, and I think if we had gotten a vote upon it it would have been adopted. Now, the Bourne item in regard to the parcel post is the best-worked-out proposition upon the subject I have ever seen. [Applause.] Yet the gentlemen on that side of the aisle, who are opposed to it, although they have had it before them for weeks, can not now point to a single objection to it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. MANN. I will yield for another question if the gentleman will not make it too long.

Mr. LEWIS. I made the other question short.

Mr. FINLEY rose.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FINLEY. Does not the gentleman know that some Republican Members, including the ranking Republican member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and at least two others, as many as could be obtained, met yesterday morning and agreed to the very thing we are now trying to do—to send this bill to conference?

Mr. MANN. If any Republican of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads agreed to have a resolution passed——

Mr. FINLEY. No.

Mr. MANN (continuing). Presented from the Committee on Rules shutting off debate upon the proposition, and to disagree to all Senate amendments, I am surprised, astonished, and shocked.

Mr. FINLEY. I did not make that statement.

Mr. MANN. Well, what is the use talking about the other statement? The statement I am talking about is the statement which is before the House.

Mr. FINLEY. I make this statement.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. FINLEY (continuing). That Mr. WEEKS, Mr. DODDS, and Mr. SMITH had agreed as far as possible that the bill should be sent to conference with all the Senate amendments disagreed to. I make that statement. I said nothing about a rule.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina must not interrupt the gentleman unless the gentleman yields.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SPEAKER. I want to say, if I can do so——

Mr. MANN. Make it short; get at it.

Mr. LEWIS. I have not compared the so-called Bourne amendment with the bill of the gentleman from Illinois, but I have compared it with this bill, and if the gentleman will permit me to pass an opinion, since he appealed to me to be very brief——

Mr. MANN. Which you are not.

Mr. LEWIS. I want to say neither measure is a parcel-post bill at all.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman from Maryland is not in favor of the parcel-post bill. I am in favor of the parcel-post proposition. I am in favor of adopting the Senate amendment while we have a chance and the power instead of attempting to stifle it by men who claim to be for a parcel post, but who will find some way to wriggle out of it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact I had called for the previous question before the gentleman asked for time and then withdrew the demand, I ask unanimous consent that this side may have 10 minutes in which to reply.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that that side shall have 10 minutes to reply. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is a very natural thing for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to be a little excited in view of what occurred in the House when this bill passed. The Post Office Committee has no disposition to keep this House from debate on the parcel post or any other proposition. There is one proposition in this bill I think of more importance than parcel post, and that is the good-roads proposition. [Applause.] There are 124 other propositions upon which a separate vote might be demanded, and it is evidently unfair to the Senate for us to go into a conference that is not full and free. Suppose you take up this motion to concur and the House amends it. It goes back to the Senate with a handicap on the conferees. The proper thing, in my judgment, is to send the whole bill to conference. The Post Office Committee has met—the Republican members and the Democratic members—and the unanimous vote of that committee was to send this bill to conference.

I have never considered that any political advantage should be taken in a matter absolutely nonpolitical. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is very sensitive about this matter. It is hardly necessary for me to refer to the circumstances which make him so, but, as suggested a moment ago, in compliance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that if the House wants to vote it is within the power of the House to take it up notwithstanding the rule to which the gentleman refers. And I want to say this committee will always come to the House for instructions if desired, and I say to the gentleman that if I happen to be upon the conference I shall insist in the consideration of this question that a general parcel post in the interest of the people, the great masses of the people of this country, shall be passed, one that will be for the benefit of the farmers, one that will not destroy the great agricultural interests and the great commercial interests of the small towns in the country in order to consolidate and concentrate the trade of the country in the great cities of Chicago, New York, and Philadelphia, and we will not agree to put in any measure that will give to the transportation companies of this country the control of that class of express matter to the detriment of the masses of the people of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I think the position of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] can be very easily answered. I am perfectly shocked to hear and see him so worked up over a parcel post. For 16 years he has sat in his place there and done everything he could to suppress such legislation as this. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. That would be important if true, but it is not true.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Now, here is a proposition that ought to go to conference and be worked out carefully. Why should the House, either that side or this side, allow him to hasten us here to a vote this afternoon on a matter that has not been fairly considered?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, when I say that I regret that this subject has assumed a partisan character I am speaking with as much sincerity as I possibly could in my own prayers. Without that disturbing factor it is already almost too complex for legislative treatment.

There are seven fundamental objections to the Bourne bill. They are objections the mother would have to a child, if born, and it wanted eyes, or hands, or ears, or toes, and feet. This measure wants even more of the vital agents, and I will enumerate a few of these parcel-post essentials for the information of this House.

The first objection to the Bourne bill is that it excludes agricultural products. The natural traffic, in my judgment—three-fifths of the potential traffic—represents agricultural products and concerns, besides, in the most substantial way, the high cost of living. The Bourne bill refuses agricultural products admission to the mails or to the postal wagons.

My second objection to the Bourne bill relates to the matter of railway pay. In the nature of things transportation pay will be the greatest element of cost in the loading of the rates for a parcel post. The express companies pay the railways what proves to be 7 cents a ton-mile for transportation. The Bourne bill is silent on the subject of the payment for postal transportation of parcels, and under postal railway law we would have to pay 13.2 cents—nearly twice as much for the express companies' railway transportation of the same matter. We would pay the railways as much for one carload as the express companies pay for two.

The third objection is the Bourne bill denies, by omission, a C. O. D. service. Nearly 70 per cent of express matter travels C. O. D. In commercial transactions between retail and wholesale merchants nearly 70 per cent of the small-package business is conducted on the C. O. D. basis. The C. O. D. feature is denied under the Bourne bill from sheer inattention to the subject, and would kill all opportunity for business men to use the service, no matter how low the postal rate might be, and 70 per cent of the traffic would have to go to the express companies, however high their rates might be, because of its omission.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I regret I can not yield unless the gentleman gives me more time.

Mr. BUTLER. I will try to get the gentleman more time.

Mr. LEWIS. Another objection is the matter of insurance. People can not be expected to ship valuable parcels unless they have some guaranty of indemnification for injury or loss. The Bourne bill denies all indemnification.

Still another objection is this, although I fear I will not have time to even suggest it. This subject is experimental. You need administrative power to get satisfactory results in the interest of the public service and in the interest of the protection of the Treasury against loss, quite as much as the baby needs the mother to conserve its life.

Another objection is that the weight limit—11 pounds—is too low. No country of respectable experience on this subject has a weight limit lower than 110 pounds. The limit ought to be 100 pounds in this country. It is more than 100 pounds in any country that has a general parcel post.

There is still another objection that I would like to discuss. It is the matter of administrative rigidity——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman one minute more, and then I have promised to yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

Mr. LEWIS. If you deny to a parcel-post system the power of elasticity, you refuse to it the power most essential to its success and to the public service. There should be elasticity in the administration of a parcel post. It is necessary to adapt its services to public and commercial needs. In my judgment, if you attempt the unnecessary job, the child's job, of building a parcel-post system without the necessary administrative elasticity it will be utterly useless because of want of adaptation to public and commercial needs. We have a parcel post now. It is the express company. Its rates are abnormal and its service denied to the country, but if the post office took it over and corrected its deficiencies, as it easily might, we should then have——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEWIS. I would like to utter just one more sentence.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I regret that I have no more time to yield. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, for the first time in my 14 years of service in this House objection is made—partisan objection—to this House agreeing to a request that the Post Office appropriation bill as it comes from the Senate, with 126 amendments, be disagreed to and that a conference be asked for. For 10 years I have served on this great committee. For 10 years we have endeavored to give this country the best postal service that any country on earth has. It is a great business committee—the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads—and we have tried to discharge our duty to the utmost. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], the chairman of the committee, and myself have stood by every chairman of the committee—Chairman Overstreet, of Indiana, and Chairman WEEKS, of Massachusetts—and held up their hands, and on every occasion once a year we have joined with them in aiding what is sought to be done to-day, yet the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

And why? I will tell the gentleman this: This Bourne parcel-post bill is a mail-order house parcel-post bill pure and simple. It is not a parcel-post bill in the interest of the American people. It is not such a bill as is an answer to the public demand all over this country for a parcel-post system. I say this bill should go to conference with all amendments disagreed to. If you take up one of the 126 Senate amendments and pass on it here before the bill goes to conference and before the amendments are thrashed out and understood thoroughly, at least by the House conferees, who are the ones who will come back and speak to the House, the Members of the House will not get a fair understanding of the matter.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired, and the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 107, nays 78, answered "present" 12, not voting 194, as follows:

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. ROTHERMEL with Mr. TOWNER.

Mr. GODWIN of Arkansas with Mr. SIMMONS.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina with Mr. MOTT.

Mr. HARRISON of New York with Mr. REYBURN.

Mr. EVANS with Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CONNELL with Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts.

Mr. BURNETT with Mr. FOCHT.

Mr. BRANTLEY with Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL.

Mr. AYRES with Mr. DRAPER.

Mr. ALLEN with Mr. DE FOREST.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota with Mr. LITTLETON.

Mr. BARTLETT with Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. BURGESS with Mr. WEEKS.

Mr. PUJO with Mr. MCMORRAN.

For to-day:

Mr. SIMS with Mr. KAHN.

Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania with Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts.

Mr. SHERLEY with Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio.

Mr. POU with Mr. PORTER.

Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL with Mr. CALDER on rule for Post Office bill.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 104, the nays 78, present 12, making 194; not a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I believe the automatic rule with reference to a call of the House operates.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Does the Speaker order a roll call under the automatic rule?

The SPEAKER. No; if we can get two more we will have a quorum.

Mr. MANN. I understood the Speaker to say something about the automatic rule, and the automatic rule has nothing to do with that——

The SPEAKER. There is no use in having another roll call.

Mr. MANN. It would if the automatic rule applies.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin appeared and answered to his name.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he answered "Aye," as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the ayes are 106, the nays 78, 12 present, making 196, a quorum; and the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Is 196 a quorum?

The SPEAKER. A quorum is 196.

Mr. MANN. I thought the Chair said yesterday that hereafter a quorum would be 197.

The SPEAKER. No; the full House is 394, but there are three vacancies, leaving 391. The swearing in of Mr. GREENE of Vermont did not change the number necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution before the conferees are named.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point of order that nothing is in order until the conferees are named.

Mr. MANN. I offer this resolution to instruct the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides that the Chair shall announce the conferees without an intervening motion.

Mr. MANN. And I want to show how autocratic this Committee on Rules is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not passing on the autocracy of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the fact that this rule is an exact duplicate of many resolutions that came from the Republican Committee on Rules.

Mr. MANN. On which you went to the country claiming that it was an outrage and indefensible, and now you are doing the same thing.

The SPEAKER. The election of 1910 is past and gone.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but there is another one coming.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will announce the conferees.

The Clerk read the names of Mr. MOON of Tennessee, Mr. FINLEY, and Mr. WEEKS.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A mesage from the Senate, by Mr. Stuart, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the following joint resolution and bills:

H. J. Res. 356. Joint resolution to further continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 1, 1912, entitled "Joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies";

H. R. 23043. An act to patent certain semiarid lands to Luther Burbank under certain conditions; and

H. R. 1248. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey a certain frame building.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution and bill of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 356. Joint resolution to further continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 1, 1912, entitled "Joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies;" and

H. R. 23043. An act to patent certain semiarid lands to Luther Burbank under certain conditions.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 356. Joint resolution to further continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 1, 1912, entitled "Joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies."

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, August 16, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on examination and survey of Skagit River, Wash., from Sedro Woolley to Baker (H. Doc. No. 909), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3952) for the purpose of repealing so much of an act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indians located in Kansas City, Kans., providing for the sale of a tract of land located in Kansas City, Kans., reserved for a public burying ground under a treaty made and concluded with the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians on the 31st day of January, 1855, said section of said act relating to the sale of said land be, and the same is hereby, repealed, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1187), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 4679) to amend section 95 of the "act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1188), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 26235) to authorize the city of Chicago to construct a bridge across the Little Calumet River, at Indiana Avenue, in said city, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1194), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 25937) making the first Monday in September (Labor Day) a legal holiday, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1189), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3843) granting to the coal-mining companies in the State of Oklahoma the right to acquire additional acreage adjoining their mine leases, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1190), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CONRY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 17481) granting right of way through the Fort Shafter Military Reservation and Pearl Harbor Naval Station, Territory of Hawaii, to the Pearl Harbor Traction Co. (Ltd.), reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1191), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. AKIN of New York: A bill (H. R. 26289) fixing the price for the transportation of passengers within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SULZER: A bill (H. R. 26290) to reduce postage rates, improve the postal service, and increase postal revenues; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. JACKSON (by request): A bill (H. R. 26291) for a progressive property tax on the holdings or possessions of multimillionaires; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LOUD: A bill (H. R. 26292) to provide for the purchase of a site and the construction of a Federal building at Midland, Mich.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petition of the State Council of Pennsylvania, Order of Independent Americans, favoring passage of the Dillingham immigration bill; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, August 16, 1912.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. GALLINGER took the chair as President pro tempore under the previous order of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. BRISTOW and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

JUDGMENTS AGAINST INTERNAL-REVENUE OFFICERS (S. DOC. NO. 928).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an item for inclusion in the general deficiency appropriation bill for payment of judgments against internal-revenue officers, amounting to $93,477.17, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MONEY-LAUNDERING MACHINES (S. DOC. NO. 929).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of $60,000 for the installation, maintenance, and operation of money-laundering machines in the Treasury at Washington, D. C., and the subtreasuries during the fiscal year 1913, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 26278) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected,' and extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representatives and Senators in the Congress of the United States and limiting the amount of campaign expenses," approved August 19, 1911, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1 and 3 to the bill (H. R. 17595) to amend sections 1 and 118 of act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary"; disagrees to the amendment of the Senate No. 2; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. CLAYTON, Mr. WEBB, and Mr. STERLING managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. MOON of Tennessee, Mr. FINLEY, and Mr. WEEKS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a resolution adopted by the Maritime Association of the Port of New York, favoring the enactment of legislation at this session of Congress providing for the building of at least two battleships, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. LODGE. I present a memorial signed by 1,844 employees of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., of Quincy, Mass., remonstrating against the granting of American registry to foreign-built vessels engaged in foreign trade. I move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CRAWFORD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13016) for the relief of the West Kentucky Coal Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1041) thereon.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 4309) for the relief of Dommick Taheny and John W. Mortimer, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1042) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 7473) for the relief of Rufus F. Hull; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 7474) granting a pension to Mary E. Lock; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 7475) granting a pension to George Walters; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CRANE:

A bill (S. 7476) to correct the military record of Maj. Horace P. Williams; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan:

A bill (S. 7477) granting an increase of pension to John G. K. Ayers (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WETMORE:

A bill (S. 7478) granting a pension to Nettie W. Sisson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL (H. R. 25970).

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment providing that in computing the length of service which shall entitle warrant or petty officers to longevity pay under the eighth section of the act approved April 16, 1908, etc., all service rendered under the official designation "pilot" in the Revenue-Cutter Service shall be included, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CATRON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,100 for additional vault facilities in the Federal building at Santa Fe, N. Mex., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

HOOKWORM AND SOIL POLLUTION.

Mr. BOURNE (for Mr. TILLMAN) submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 27), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Senate document room 2,000 copies on manila paper of a wall chart on hookworm and soil pollution.

TREATIES AND CONVENTIONS.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 380), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be prepared, under the direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations, a supplement to the compilation entitled "Treaties, Conventions, International Acts, and Protocols Between the United States and Other Powers, 1776–1909," to include treaties, conventions, important protocols, and international acts to which the United States may have been a party from January 1, 1910, to March 4, 1913, inclusive.

SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY (S. DOC. NO. 930).

Mr. LODGE. I present a paper, being a letter addressed to me from Truman G. Palmer, relative to the first beet sugar produced in America. The letter is short, and I ask that it be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On August 13, 1912:

S. 6412. An act to regulate radio communication.

On August 14, 1912:

S. 6926. An act to convey to the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. a portion of the military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, in the State of Arkansas;

S. 2117. An act to change the name of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to the Public Health Service, to increase the pay of officers of said service, and for other purposes;

S. 5817. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the county of Hill, in the State of Montana, the jail building and fixtures now upon the abandoned Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation, in the State of Montana;

S. 183. An act for the relief of G. A. Embry;

S. 1508. An act for the relief of the estate of Eliza B. Hause;

S. 4568. An act granting an increase of pension to Annie R. Schley; and

S. 4189. An act for the relief of the estate of Johanna S. Stoeckle.

On August 16, 1912:

S. 4007. An act for the relief of the J. Kennard & Sons Carpet Co.; and

S. 4032. An act for the relief of C. Person's Sons.

DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1 and 3 to the bill (H. R. 17595) to amend sections 1 and 118 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," disagreeing to amendment No. 2 and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. ROOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE subsequently said: A few minutes ago conferees on the part of the Senate were appointed by the Chair on the bill (H. R. 17595) to amend sections 1 and 118 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary." I ask unanimous consent that the name of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] may be substituted for mine as a conferee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 26278. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected,' and extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States and limiting the amount of campaign expenses," approved August 19, 1911, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business is closed.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the motion that came over from yesterday. In the meantime I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Culberson	Lodge	Pomerene
Bailey	Cullom	Martin, Va.	Sanders
Bankhead	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Shively
Borah	Curtis	Massey	Simmons
Bourne	Dillingham	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Foster	Oliver	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	Gallinger	Overman	Stone
Bryan	Heyburn	Page	Tillman
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	Penrose	Townsend
Catron	Jones	Perkins	Watson
Clapp	Kenyon	Poindexter	Works

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum. The list of absentees will be called.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, and Mr. NELSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Chair to submit to the Senate the motion pending, which is that to-morrow morning, immediately after the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3315, a motion which I entered yesterday and which came over automatically to-day.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Texas yield to me for a moment while I make a correction in the calendar, so that everybody will understand it?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think there is an error in stating the unanimous-consent agreement respecting Senate bill 6099. It seems to be stated as though it were to be taken up immediately after the routine morning business. I think the agreement was that it should be taken up at 4 o'clock this afternoon. The calendar ought to be changed in that regard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The RECORD shows that that was the agreement, that it should be taken up at 4 o'clock.

Mr. CUMMINS. I make this statement in order not to interfere with the unanimous-consent agreement in regard to the Coos River Dam bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas moves that the bill (S. 3315) to prohibit corporations from making contributions in connection with political elections and to limit the amount of such contributions by individuals or persons be made a special order for to-morrow, immediately following the routine morning business. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and it is so ordered.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BOURNE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, before that motion is put, I should like to make an inquiry regarding the provision in the bill as it passed the Senate fixing the rate of postage on periodicals. I believe the amendment adopted in the Senate was not reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. BOURNE. It was offered by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; and that is part of the bill upon which the Senate is now asked to insist and which will go to conference.

Mr. BOURNE. That was the amendment as adopted by the Senate and it is in the bill as it will go to conference.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What I should like to know is this, Whether, if we send the bill to conference now, we send it approving it in its entirety?

Mr. BOURNE. That is my understanding.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask if it is in order to except from the motion the amendment to which I have referred? If that matter can be appropriately taken up now, I should like to see it done. I am quite out of harmony with that provision, and I should like very much if we could again take the sense of the Senate upon it before it gets too far away. Will the Senator from Oregon kindly inform me as to that?

Mr. BOURNE. It is not the province of the chairman of the committee to decide that question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The question before the Senate is the question of insistence in the conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE] proposes that the Senate consent to the conference, insist upon its amendments, and that the conferees be appointed by the Chair. A provision attached to the bill by the Senate, for which, as I understand, the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] was responsible, distinguishing between the rate of postage upon periodicals and other publications, will then be in disagreement between the two Houses. Upon that question I should like very much to again take the sense of the Senate, and I desire to know whether this would be an appropriate time to do it.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, replying to the Senator from Michigan I will say that I assume that that is a question that the Senate itself must determine. The chairman of the committee has no voice in that matter at all. As I understand, the conferees are instructed by the Senate to do their utmost to see that the Senate amendments are retained.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, a motion to recede or to concur is first in order, but I do not see exactly how this amendment can be dealt with in that way, because if this amendment should be receded from by the Senate it would then, as I understand—the chairman of the committee will correct me if I am wrong—leave the provision of the House bill stand, which does not abolish the "blue-tag" system.

Mr. BOURNE. That is the understanding I have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the conferees are not yet appointed, and even if it were competent to instruct them, against which the precedents of the Senate run pretty uniformly, it could not be done now.

Mr. NELSON. I want to suggest to the Senator from Michigan that the bill ought to go to conference, and if, as is quite likely, the conferees may agree on eliminating this amendment which is objectionable, it will not be necessary to have a separate vote. If they should fail to do that, we would have an opportunity to vote on that question, but at this time I think it is premature to bring up the matter.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That may be, Mr. President, but in order that I may not lose the opportunity to dissent from that amendment, and that we may not send the conferees of the Senate into conference with any suggestion that that item is to be insisted upon, I have made this suggestion. I think, however, that it is impossible to divide the question at this juncture; and so I simply indicate my hope that the conferees may see fit to modify that provision of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only desire to make clear to the Senator from Michigan that if this amendment is abandoned it throws the whole question of that section into conference; it would restore the House provision. The House provision leaves the "blue-tag" system as it now is in operation; and if the Senator's request were to be acceded to it would leave the condition of things worse than at present, from the Senator's point of view.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I quite agree with the Senator from Massachusetts, but I simply wanted to indicate my hope that the conferees would not feel bound to consider the action of the Senate irrevocable on this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing now before the Senate except the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE].

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say that, in my opinion, it would be better that the House provision in that respect should prevail than that the amendment which the Senate adopted should prevail, because, while it leaves the "blue-tag" provision intact, it does not increase the rate on a large number of publications and leaves the old rate of 1 cent a pound on others. The amendment adopted is, in my opinion, an unjustifiable discrimination as between periodicals that are printed biweekly or monthly and those that are printed weekly, while the present "blue-tag" system does not, in my judgment, discriminate nearly so badly as that does.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE] moves that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. BOURNE, Mr. PENROSE, and Mr. BANKHEAD conferees on the part of the Senate.

COOSA RIVER DAM, ALA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, Senate bill 7343 is now before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 7343) to authorize the building of a dam across the Coosa River, Ala., at the place selected for Lock No. 18 on said river.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few remarks on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], and at the same time to present an amendment, of which I gave notice when the bill was previously before the Senate.

The only question at issue is whether this grant shall be without consideration to the Government and without reservation by the Government of the right to prevent a monopoly, to prevent extortion in case during the practically perpetual life of the grant conditions should arise demanding such regulation, or, on the other hand, whether it should be a clear gift—an absolute surrender on the part of the Government. I do not think there is any influence or any interest that is opposed to the passage of the bill if reasonable conditions should be attached to it.

There is a great deal of misunderstanding throughout the country as to the so-called conservation policy, the charge being constantly made that it seeks to prevent the development of the country. That is not the case at all. On the contrary, it seeks to encourage the development of the natural resources of the country, and it seeks to direct that development along such lines that the benefits will be preserved for the public welfare and that an undue portion of the profits shall not go to individual interests.

The proposition in this bill is that a great water-power company, which controls all the water power in the State of Alabama and no doubt is interested in water powers in many other States, shall be granted by the Government the use of the waters of the Coosa River, which will afford a minimum of 10,000 horsepower, and on an average perhaps 15,000 horsepower, which will be of a value to the grantee under this bill of $15 a year per horsepower.

It is a most valuable franchise which is sought here, and yet the Senators who are urging the passage of this bill insist that it shall be given to this company without consideration, and that the Government, when it has granted this franchise, which they come here seeking, shall have no further control, no further word as to the matter and as to the terms upon which it shall be used. It seems to me that the mere statement of the proposition shows its unreasonable character.

It is a simple proposition. I apprehend that the Alabama Power Co., or the Alabama Traction Light & Power Co., which, by the way, was incorporated under the laws of the Dominion of Canada, a foreign corporation, and which holds the stock of the Alabama Power Co.—to whom this bill proposes to grant this right—I apprehend that that company is interested in this matter for financial reasons, and that it is not concerned particularly in constitutional questions as to whether whatever compensation shall be paid shall be collected by the United States or by the State of Alabama.

It is intimated on the part of those who are favoring this bill that they have no objection to the payment of compensation; that they have no objection to a reasonable regulation of the operation of this plant under the reserved power in the Government to regulate rates and to prevent extortion and monopoly; but they insist that those rights should be placed in the State government instead of in the Federal Government. It is inconceivable to me that this company, which is investing its money in this proposition upon a commercial basis, if it really is willing to pay a reasonable compensation for this grant and is willing to submit to reasonable regulation, should be concerned as to whether that regulation should be by the United States or by the State.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I, of course, do not know what the power company's views are, neither am I concerned about the power company's views, nor am I opposed to regulation and control, but I agree, particularly with what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] said the other day, that this is one of the most important subjects with which we have to deal; and I believe that it must be dealt with under strict regulation and control. I am, however, one who is greatly concerned as to whether or not the benefits of natural resources shall go to the States in which the natural resources are located or to the National Government to be exhausted and utilized by the increasing of bureaucratic powers. The more you feed them the more they want.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am perfectly willing to yield to any inquiry from the Senator in regard to anything I may say, but I prefer that the Senator should not make his speech on this subject in the middle of my remarks. If the Senator desires to ask a question I will yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator said they were not concerned about who regulated it. I desire to say the Senate is interested—some Senators, at least—as to whether the proceeds shall go to the State or whether they shall go to the National Government. I am in favor of regulation and control, I think, just as much as is the Senator, but I do believe that the natural resources located within the States should be of benefit to the States, and that the amount collected should go into the State treasury instead of into the National Treasury.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I am in accord with the Senator from Idaho to the extent that I believe a reasonable portion of the returns from the natural resources located in the States should go into the treasury of the States where the property is located. I am not in accord with him—and I do not know that he intended to raise that question by his remarks—that the sovereignty over this property, which now belongs to the United States Government, can not be retained in the United States Government upon condition when a grant is made. I believe that it is in the interest of the country as a whole, and in the interest of the people of the several States where these properties are located, that the power to regulate and the power to collect a reasonable compensation should be retained by the Federal Government, but I do agree that under a just and wise policy a reasonable portion of the proceeds collected from the natural resources should be paid into the treasuries of the States. That policy is already in force, to a large extent, with reference to the forest reserves of the country, from which, under the law, 25 per cent, I believe, of the collections from the sale of timber and other forest products is paid into the treasury of the State where the forest reserve is located.

I do not desire at this point, and I did not intend at this point, to discuss the question which the Senator from Idaho has just raised, but I will digress long enough to say that in the general question of conservation of natural resources the cry that is made that the Federal Government is locking up the resources of the country to the detriment of the States where they are located is, in my opinion, from observation of the operation of the laws, utterly without foundation in logic or in fact. On the contrary, a just policy of conservation by the Federal Government, providing reasonable regulation, economical development, and conditions which will insure that the operations will inure to the benefit of the public, instead of being entirely for the benefit of some private individual, is for the interest of the people of the community where the property is located and for their interest primarily.

The conditions in many of the Eastern States in which public lands have long ago been disposed of indicate the truth of what I have just said. They are spending a great many million dollars out of the treasuries of the States to buy lands in order to create forest reserves, because it is for the benefit of the people in those States, and how can it be said that where the Government owns land in the Western States, for which it is not necessary to pay a dollar in order to get the benefits of reasonable forest regulations, the same benefits will not accrue to those States by the establishment of reasonable forestry laws and reasonable regulations as to the preservation of the forests and of the flow of the streams, when the Eastern States are spending money out of their treasuries to bring about the condition which the Western States acquire without the payment of a dollar?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield for an inquiry.

Mr. BORAH. I simply wish to say, if the Senator will permit me to insert a single sentence, that, so far as I am concerned, I am not opposed to the creation or maintenance of forest reserves wherever there are forests. I am in full sympathy with that view.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very glad to know that, because I think the country has misunderstood the Senator's attitude in regard to that.

Mr. BORAH. The country could not have misunderstood the Senator's attitude if the country had taken the time to read what the Senator said on the subject. I have said repeatedly here that I am only opposed to retaining in the reserves those lands upon which there are no trees, upon which nature never was able to grow a tree, and upon which, I believe, no one can grow a tree.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is nobody in the Senate, I will say, with whom I less desire to have a controversy than the Senator from Idaho. It is not exactly pertinent to the question that is before the Senate now, but I remember a very short time ago when a certain amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill was pending in the Senate which would have required the Chief Forester to segregate out of the forest reserves all lands which are suitable for agriculture, the Senator from Idaho favored that provision, the effect of which would have been to have destroyed, to a large extent, the forest-reserve policy in the most heavily timbered sections of the West, in those regions where the timber is thickest and of most value, because, of course, the land where those trees grow is suitable for agriculture. The Senator, as I understand, was in favor of segregating those lands from the forest reserves and restoring them to all the conditions which have resulted in some of the great lumber companies of this country acquiring vast areas of that character of property, particularly in the State of Washington and in the State which the Senator represents.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho has never advocated at any time, either directly or indirectly, the elimination from the forest reserves of the timbered lands. All the eliminations would have to take place under the department. I only desired the elimination of that which the department would say was fit for agriculture. I am sure the Senator from Washington would not say that the Chief Forester and the Agricultural Department would eliminate heavy forested lands under that kind of a proposition. If that was the interpretation which they put upon it, I should not urge it; but I was urging the elimination of those lands upon which there are no trees, upon which there are no forests.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is no disagreement about that. There was a great difference, however, in the language of the amendment, which required the Chief Forester, I apprehend——

Mr. BORAH. The language of the amendment——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment; let me finish the sentence—which required him to eliminate all the lands which were suitable—the amendment contained the word "suitable"—for agriculture. That, had it been adopted, would have excluded timbered lands, as well as others, from the reserves.

Mr. BORAH. No timber lands could have been excluded under such a rule as that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There never has been such a rule.

Mr. BORAH. And the ruling of the department could never have been to that effect. The misrepresentation made by the bureau was to that effect, in order to insure a misunderstanding abroad and to willfully mislead the public.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, as indicating the entire agreement between the Senator from Idaho and myself as to the interests of the State in this matter, I have incorporated, largely at his suggestion, in the amendment of which I have given notice to introduce to this bill:

That the said power company, its successors and assigns, shall pay to the United States 1 per cent of the net profits derived from light, heat, power, or other proceeds of said work, to be ascertained and collected by the Secretary of War; and one-half of all such collections made by the Secretary of War shall be paid by him into the treasury of the State of Alabama.

I am at a loss to see why any company willing to submit to reasonable regulations, or anyone concerned in preserving for the State a reasonable share of the profits of these natural resources, should object to the adoption of that amendment to the bill.

Mr. President, it is urged by those who advocate this bill—as if it were of vital consequence to the grantees—that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to collect profits from the development of power in a stream, but that the use of the waters belongs to the State. The Senator from Ohio seemed to me to completely answer that proposition when he called attention to the fact that you are here asking for a grant from the Federal Government, which necessarily admits an implied right on the part of the Federal Government to withhold the grant if it sees fit. If it can reject it absolutely, it can grant with conditions attached.

A mere practical consideration of the conditions surrounding the development of these powers makes it absolutely clear and conclusive that the Federal Government has the right to use the proceeds, or by-products, so to speak, created by the erection of dams for the improvement of navigation. In this case it is proposed to grant the privilege of erecting a dam to a private individual or a private company. But if the Government can grant that to a private company, of course it could erect a dam itself. Suppose it proceeded, in the improvement of the navigation of this stream, to erect this dam and develop this power, do Senators mean to say that the Government would not have a right to use the power flowing over the dam which it controls and owns and which it has itself erected?

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. REED. I am very much interested in the question the Senator is discussing. I have given it some consideration. Does the Senator think that because the Government has the right to control the navigation of a stream that that involves the right to absorb the water power of the streams?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That question is a very broad one. Undoubtedly it would not have the right to absorb the water power of the streams except as incidental to the exercise of the control and development of navigation.

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. President, let us turn it around. The riparian owner and the State have the right to control the use of the water power. Does that involve the right to control navigation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; that does not. I scarcely see what conclusion the Senator is going to draw from that.

Mr. REED. I am driving at what seems to me to be a very clear conclusion. If because the Government of the United States has the right to improve the river, so that boats may go upon it, and, having that right, it may then reach out and take over the water power as an incident to the control of navigation, it would seem equally clear, proceeding by the same process of reasoning, that we should say that as the riparian owner and the State have the right to control the use of the water power they might take over the control of navigation as an incident. In other words, to complete the thought, when you go beyond the legitimate exercise of a particular power and add to it everything else in the way of utility, as an incident, you come to a point where these two and separate, distinct rights would inevitably clash. It seems to me that forces the conclusion that each right must be strictly exercised, and that it does not carry with it any incident, because the moment you attach an incident to one right you get into a doctrine that will obliterate the other corresponding and coordinate right.

I should like to just get the Senator's view. I am not trying to provoke a discussion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I appreciate the Senator's point, and I am perfectly willing, so far as the logical conclusion is concerned, to let it stand without comment as he has stated it. So far as the control of the private riparian owner over navigation is concerned, that question is not open to discussion, because the control of the navigable waters of the country is vested in the Federal Government by the Constitution, and there is no process of reasoning by which it could be deduced that under any conceivable condition some private citizen could control the navigation of a stream. But suppose the Government, in the exercise of its power to control navigation, proceeds to put a dam in a river, as they are now considering doing in the Columbia River, for instance, where it has made a survey of a certain section of the Columbia River, which is a stream flowing a vast volume of water and a very swift stream, in which the power-development possibilities are very great.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment, and then I will yield to the Senator. In pursuance of this project for the improvement of the navigation of that great river the United States engineers have made a survey of a certain section of the river, we will say, between the town of Wenatchee and the mouth of the Snake River. The project includes also the erection of a large number of dams, and included in their estimate is the amount of water power that would be developed in the river by those dams.

Now, does the Senator from Missouri claim that when the Government has erected those dams in the Columbia River—and the same state of affairs is applicable to any other navigable water over which the Government has jurisdiction—that a private individual would have the right to come in under some grant by the State or under some authority claimed by him as a riparian proprietor, and, without compensation to the Government, use the power which has been developed by the Government work?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I did not intend to enter into an argument with my friend the Senator upon that question, but I fail to see how he can answer the logic of a situation by taking a hard case and asking what one claims with reference to that. The Senator does not come from that part of the country where a man is permitted to answer a question by asking another.

If the Senator wants my view, I think it is a question that is going to require very careful consideration, but I in my present frame of mind am unable to come to the conclusion, because the Government of the United States has the right to control a stream for the mere purpose of navigation and for no other purpose, that that gives to the Federal Government the right to absorb all other legal rights which attach to the stream, any more than it gives the possessors of the other legal rights the privilege and power of superseding the Government in its control of navigation. The two rights must be separately exercised and one must not be used to the exclusion of the other.

So it would seem to drive to this conclusion, that if the Government have the power only to control for the purposes of navigation, the limit of their power must be the limit of their right, and that as their power is limited to controlling navigaton when they build a dam, in the use of that dam they must be confined to the limitations of the power that enable them to build it, and that the other rights connected with the stream itself rest where they rested before the Government in control of navigation constructed the dam.

So if the Government in controlling navigation did create water power, water power would go with that control of the stream which has always been vested by law in the State and in the riparian owners. However unfortunate that may be for the Government, it seems to me that is exactly where the law would necessarily lead us.

Now, I am interrupting in this lengthy way because the Senator asked me a question and I can not answer in just a word. If he will pardon me one word further. [After a pause.] Well, Mr. President, I will just let the answer stand at that. Some other Senators want to follow, I understand.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I beg to suggest to the Senator from Washington that there are only about 30 minutes of time remaining now under the unanimous-consent arrangement, and it seems to me that the other side ought to have an opportunity to present their views briefly on this question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have used very little of the time this morning. Most of the time has been used by Senators who have interrupted me.

Pursuing the inquiry which the Senator from Missouri has just discussed, the conflict between the State's power over the water in the streams and the rights of riparian owners, and the rights of the Federal Government to control navigation, of course these powers must be operated so far as possible in harmony with each other; but the point is occasionally reached in the practical operation of those various powers when one comes in conflict with the other, and the question arises as to which one is paramount. Whether rightly or wrongly, the courts of this country and the practices and precedents of the country have yielded to the rights of the Federal Government in this and in all other cases where the clear rights of the Federal Government came in conflict with the rights of the States or of private parties. In other words, the control of the Federal Government over navigation in the streams can not be hampered or interfered with by the right of any other power or individual in the water of the stream. A man has a right to take water out of a stream for irrigation; he can appropriate it; and the law of the West in that regard is that the prior appropriator of unappropriated waters in a stream can take it for purposes of irrigation, but he can not, contrary to the regulations of the Federal Government, take such quantity of water out of a navigable stream for the purposes of irrigation as would destroy the navigability of that stream.

Mr. President, the case which I cited as to the Columbia River the Senator from Missouri says is a hard case. It is not different in principle in any degree from the case involved by this bill. There is not any difference in principle in a case where the Government erects a dam, as far as its rights to dispose of the products of the dam are concerned, from the case where it grants that right to an individual or to a corporation. There is nothing of value in the flow of the water at the point where this dam is proposed to be erected at the present time. There is no power there. The power is created by the dam, by the franchise and the operation under the franchise which the Government is asked to grant in this bill, by reason of raising the water so that it will have a fall from the artificial plane to which it is raised by the dam, and so the water power is created. It is created under the grant of the Government. If the Government can reject the application it can grant it upon condition; and when it is conceded that it is reasonable that the Government should be reimbursed—either the State or the Federal Government—and that there should be vested in one or the other the power to prevent monopoly and extortion, I fail to see, if those who make this concession are sincere, why they should object to either one of these amendments. The amendments would not in any way impede the development of this stream. They would not in any way prevent the erection of that dam. It can not be conceived that the Government would impose unreasonable restrictions as to rates to be charged for this power. It can not be said that the reimbursement to the Government of 1 per cent of the net profits is an unreasonable compensation to be paid to the public.

The Government, not only in this stream but in other streams, is asked to expend the money of the people in improving navigation, and no doubt will be asked to expend it in the improvement of the navigation of this stream perhaps, at other points, to extend the navigation which may be created by this dam. It is not unreasonable to ask that the parties who acquire this valuable property in the stream from the Government should pay into the Treasury a reasonable share of the profits from that property for the purpose of aiding the Government in its general policy of river and harbor improvement.

Now, Mr. President, I want to call attention very briefly to a letter from the Secretary of War in regard to the policy which is involved in this and a large number of similar bills pending now in the House of Representatives in what is called an omnibus water-power bill, upon which the issue of paying a reasonable compensation and of reserving in the Government the right to regulate charges is involved, and which is before the country. I will read just a few lines.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. If the Senator from Washington will permit me, I should like to know about how much time it will take?

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator from Alabama objects to my discussion of the bill, I will take my seat.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I do not object.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I want to say in doing so, that while I am perfectly willing and more than willing to accommodate the Senators from Alabama so far as anything in which they are personally interested is concerned—and it would be a matter of great pleasure to me to concede the passage of any bill in which they are interested so far as it is consistent with principle—I, however, resent the proposition of putting through the Senate of the United States legislation of a nature which involves a principle of a general character upon a personal appeal to the Senate by distinguished Senators who are entitled to consideration. I resent this manner of disposing of a question which is of national interest and importance, which involves the question of whether or not this company is going to be excepted from the principles which the people of this country are attempting to establish as to the public properties of the country, so that when it is granted away to the extent of millions of dollars the Government shall be reimbursed to a reasonable extent.

Mr. President, I ask leave, in view of the insistence and interruptions of the Senators from Alabama, that I may conclude my remarks now and extend them in the RECORD to a brief extent, and print such papers as are in my possession. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There is no possible way to allow remarks to be extended in the RECORD not spoken on the floor of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about to suggest that, so far as the Chair knows, that privilege has never been granted to a Senator.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I shall not object to the Senator occupying all the time he desires, although I did want to make a few remarks on the bill before the vote was taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are 25 minutes remaining of the hour, the Chair will take the liberty of stating.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it is impossible to discuss the question with any clearness when one is reminded every moment or two that he ought to conclude his remarks and allow the other side to speak. If it is contrary to the rules of the Senate to substitute what I desire to say here by printing it in the RECORD, it certainly is not contrary to the practice of the Senate to allow me to print in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of War and a statement from the National Conservation Association containing a statement of the general principles involved in this bill, and I ask that consent.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I did not mean to object to such a request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 21, 1912.

Hon. W. C. ADAMSON,
Chairman, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In accordance with the request contained in your letter of May 2, 1912, I have the honor to submit my views upon H. R. 24028, authorizing and permitting the Tennessee Hydro Electric Co., its successors and assigns, to build and maintain dams and water-power development in and across Clinch and Powell Rivers, in Anderson County, State of Tennessee.

I transmit herewith a report of the Chief of Engineers upon this subject. From this report it appears that the proposed dams may be of considerable pecuniary and commercial value and that this commercial value, in any case, will probably increase with the passage of time and the development of the surrounding country. It also appears that the stream on which the proposed dams are to be constructed is navigable to a small extent, especially for rafting of logs, and that at some future date it is possible that the river may be developed as a combined navigation and water-power improvement.

There is no provision made in the inclosed bill providing for any compensation to the Federal Government in return for the grant of the privilege, nor is there any provision made to reserve to the Federal Government the right to control the charges for the water-power service to the consumers in default of adequate regulation on the part of local authorities to protect the public interest. I believe that these are important defects in the bill, and, without their correction, do not recommend its passage.

It is improvident, in my opinion, to allow the entire cost of the future improvement of this river, if made, to fall upon the general taxpayers of the country, when that burden could so easily be reduced by exacting proper compensation for the water-power privileges granted on the river by the Federal Government.

The principles which should guide the granting of water-power privileges have now been comprehensively laid down in the final report just rendered of the National Waterways Commission. After long hearings and exhaustive study, that commission, composed of Members of both parties in both Houses, has unanimously reported that a grant for water-power development constitutes a special privilege for which the Government is entitled to proper compensation; that the water power developed on waters subject to Federal jurisdiction should be correlated to the development of navigation; and that in view of the growing intimate relations between the hydroelectric business and the interests of navigation, the Federal Government should reserve the right to control, in the public interests, the relation between the operating company and the consumer.

In the opinion of the Chief of Engineers, the interest of navigation also requires a relocation of the dams specified in the bill, and he has indicated on the copy of the bill, which I inclose herewith, the amendments on this point which he considers essential.

I therefore recommend that the bill be not passed in its present form.

Very respectfully,

HENRY L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

NATIONAL CONSERVATION ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C.

The omnibus dam bill, H. R. 25882, and other similar current measures seeking to grant rights to dam navigable streams for the creation of water power are in their present form hurtful to the public interest, and should be amended as hereinafter suggested or defeated.

The essence of the policy of conservation is the use of natural resources for the public good. It is self-evident that our vast water powers still unutilized should be harnessed to meet the demands of our increasing population and the needs of legitimate industry. The National Conservation Association has always strongly favored the prompt development of water powers, but the right to develop them should be granted under conditions just to the public as well as to the water-power corporations.

The bills in question are unfair to the public. They involve rights of enormous commercial value, a value which the passage of time and the growth of the country will greatly increase. Yet it is proposed to place these natural assets in the hands of great corporate interests without requiring compensation to the public for value received, and without controlling the price to be charged to the consuming public. The men to whom these rights are to be given can well afford to pay for what they get.

The recent report of the Commissioner of Corporations on the water-power industry has shown the unmistakable tendency toward monopolistic control of water power in this country. A number of the beneficiaries under these bills are allied with the controlling water-power interests. Monopoly tends to extortion. The only safeguard lies in requiring fair compensation to the public which grants the privilege, and the reservation by the National Government of the power to prevent unjust charges to the consumer.

All will admit that the capital invested in these plants is entitled to fair returns, and that the energy and intelligence engaged in operating them should be well paid. But that these assets of the Nation should be turned over to private interests without adequate public regulation is intolerable.

The authority to grant these water-power privileges clearly carries with it the duty to secure just compensation for the privileges granted and to protect the public against extortion. In his report to Congress on one of these bills the Secretary of War well says:

"There is no provision made in the inclosed bill providing for any compensation to the Federal Government in return for the grant of the privilege, nor is there any provision made to reserve to the Federal Government the right to control the charges for the water-power service to the consumer in default of adequate regulation on the part of local authorities to protect the public interest. I believe that these are important defects in the bill, and, without their correction, do not recommend its passage.

"It is improvident, in my opinion, to allow the entire cost of the future improvement of this river, if made, to fall upon the general taxpayers of the country, when that burden could so easily be reduced by exacting proper compensation for the water-power privileges granted on the river by the Federal Government."

Enlightened public opinion in the United States is overwhelming in support of this view.

For several years the friends of conservation have demanded that the water-power interests should be required to pay the public a reasonable compensation for valuable rights granted to them by the Government. The power interests have asserted their claims to get what they wanted without paying for it. The passage of any of these bills would constitute a precedent of the utmost value to the power interests and seriously and perhaps permanently dangerous to the general welfare. There is nothing to be gained and much to be lost by allowing such bills to pass.

The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in its favorable report on the omnibus dam bill does not question the justice of Secretary Stimson's recommendations. It asserts, however, that the substance of them "is fully covered by the provisions of the general dam act of 1910." The committee is mistaken. Neither of the two conditions to a grant recommended by the Secretary of War, as quoted above, is covered by the general dam act, and neither condition can now lawfully be imposed, as a mere reading of the act will show. That additional legislation is required is conclusively demonstrated by the report of the National Waterways Commission, which specifically recognizes the constitutional power of the Federal Government to exact just compensation for the privilege conferred by it and to reserve the right to control, in the public interest, the relations between the operating company and the consumer, and specifically recommends legislation to these ends. This commission was composed of Members of the Senate and House, and its report containing these recommendations was signed, among others, by Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, who, as the author of the House report, now asserts that the Secretary of War, under existing law, has the power which the National Waterways Commission found additional legislation was required to confer.

It is urged in defense of the proposal to donate these valuable rights to the power interests that under the terms of the general dam bill Congress may at some future date take back what it now proposes to give away. The fallacy of this argument is evident. Obviously, if these rights are to be recalled at some uncertain period, there is no reason why they should be granted in the first place. To recall them will necessarily be followed by litigation and dispute and by disappointment to many investors, the value of whose investment will be unsettled.

The two amendments to these bills suggested by the Secretary of War are essential to protect the public. First, the Secretary of War should be authorized to impose a reasonable rental or charge for the privilege granted, to be used for the development of the stream in respect to which the privilege is granted or waters connected therewith. In fixing this charge due allowance should be made for fixed and operating expenses, maintenance charges, depreciation, and a reasonable return on the capital invested. Second, the Federal Government should reserve the right to control the charges for service to the consumer in the event that the law and authority of the States or the municipalities where the service is rendered prove inadequate to protect the public interest.

With these amendments, against the justice of which there is no valid argument, the bills will promote the public interest, and should pass. Without these amendments they are unduly favorable to the water-power interests and unjust to the people, and they should be defeated.

NATIONAL CONSERVATION ASSOCIATION,
By GIFFORD PINCHOT, Its President.

JULY 27, 1912.

The Alabama Power Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, is authorized by this bill to construct a dam on the Coosa River, in that State, about 7½ miles above the city of Wetumpka.

The Alabama Traction, Light & Power Co. (Ltd.), was incorporated January 5, 1912, under the laws of Dominion of Canada. A prospectus of the above company shows that it owns or controls the entire capital stock and bonds of the Alabama Power Co. and its subsidiaries, the Birmingham, Montgomery & Gulf Power Co. and the Muscle Shoals Hydro-Electric Co. This company was formed "to acquire and operate hydroelectric power plants and to supply electric energy for light, power, and heat to Birmingham, Montgomery, Mobile, and other important cities and towns in Alabama, and to build, acquire, and operate lighting and tramway systems as occasion may offer." The Birmingham, Montgomery & Gulf Power Co. and Muscle Shoals Co. possesses a charter granted in 1900 by the State of Alabama, unlimited in time, and not forfeitable for nonuse, giving the right (a) to build dams and reservoirs on the Tallapoosa River or its tributaries; (b) of eminent domain; (c) to distribute electricity in all cities and towns in Alabama; (d) to acquire, by purchase or contract, stocks, bonds, and other securities of any electric railway or electric light company in Alabama; (e) to exercise all powers belonging to manufacturing companies under the Alabama law; and (f) to exemption from taxation for 10 years from commencement of its works.

The company controls water powers on the Tallapoosa, Coosa, and Tennessee Rivers capable of developing about 400,000 primary horsepower for 10 hours daily during the driest season on record for 50 years. No other water powers of importance are operating within the proposed field; in fact, the company controls all the power possibilities on the Tallapoosa River, except two small plants near the lower end, which are now fully utilized. It is proposed to make the first development (of 60,000 horsepower) at Cherokee Bluffs, on the Tallapoosa River. Estimates by the experienced engineers figure the cost of the first development at $83 per horsepower, including a masonry dam 850 feet long and 130 feet high, creating a storage reservoir with a capacity of 65,000,000,000 cubic feet.

The power sites on the Coosa River was located within a short distance of the proposed transmission line between Cherokee Bluffs and Birmingham, and can be connected with it whenever the capacity of the Tallapoosa River development is exhausted. The development at Muscle Shoals, on the Tennessee River, has potential power far in excess of any present demand. Owing to the magnitude of the development and the length of dams necessary, the total cost of construction will be considerable, and, as the United States Government has under consideration extensive improvements on this portion of the river, it is not proposed to proceed with this development.

The first development should be completed not later than October 1, 1913, and arrangements are projected under which it should be possible for the company to deliver about 15,000 horsepower from other sources before January 1, 1913.

Capital stock authorized, $30,000,000; of which $5,000,000 is 6 per cent cumulative preferred; outstanding, $12,000,000 common and $1,000,000 preferred; par of both issues, $100.

The Alabama Power Co. was granted by Congress authority to construct a dam on the Coosa River March 4, 1907. (Public, No. 247, vol. 34, p. 1288.)

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington seems not to recollect, or to understand, that this dam is to be built under the general dam act, and that act may be changed or altered or amended at any time, and the general principles that he is discussing and for which he is contending can be incorporated in it and this company be bound by them.

It is said here on the floor that this would create a monopoly down there. That might be a plea to those who do not understand the situation, but the fact is that the Coosa River is not navigable at all where this dam is to be built, and for 116 miles above——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator just allow me a moment?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the river is not navigable, why does a grant from the Federal Government have anything to do with a stream that is not navigable?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. If the Senator will just wait a moment I will explain. It is not navigable at all for 116 miles, from a little below Gadsden to Wetumpka, on account of the steepness and the shoals in the river. It is the project of the engineers to make it navigable by building six high dams between these points, and this is only one of the six. It is probably less than one-sixth of the power that would be developed by these six dams. So there is no monopoly. Even if there was a monopoly there we have a tremendous power at Mussel Shoals, on the Tennessee River in the same State, much larger than all the power on Coosa River, and we have a great power on the Warrior River. So the building of one dam is scarcely a drop in the bucket.

Then, the solicitude of Senators in regard to the protection of the people of Alabama moves my heart. This dam is in nearly the center of the State, the State being 300 miles long from north to south, and 150 miles wide, and the people to be affected are citizens of Alabama alone. I maintain that whilst the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] feel largely interested in taking care of the rights of the people down there, the Senators from Alabama are not wholly without consideration for them.

This power that is to be developed there by building this dam without any cost to the Government at all, the power to be developed is contracted to another company—14,000 horsepower, which is supposed to be the limit. This is certainly above the estimate of power by the engineers. It is to be delivered to the Alabama Cyanamid Co. for the purpose of manufacturing fertilizers, which are greatly needed everywhere in the United States, and are not produced at any point except in New York to a limited extent.

There will be no power for distribution amongst the people. It is not to be used for light and heat, or any such purpose as that, because this fertilizer company will practically absorb the whole output of the power there.

I ask leave of the Senate to put in the RECORD a short extract showing what constitutes the calcium cyanamid that is manufactured for fertilizers. I am glad to say this is one of the most peculiar companies in the United States, because whilst they are about to invest $3,000,000 in this plant for the purpose of manufacturing this fertilizer, they are not knocking at the doors of Congress for any soothing sirup in the way of protection upon their product. It will be an immense benefit to the people of Alabama and the surrounding States, and in fact the whole southern belt of the country to have this fertilizer take the place of the nitrate that they have been getting from South America, the price of which is rising every year, and is becoming more and more necessary as well as more and more expensive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the request of the Senator from Alabama will be granted to insert certain matter in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MANUFACTURE OF CYANAMID.

A mixture of lime and coke is heated in an electric furnace. At a temperature of 6,000° F. the lime and coke combine and form calcium carbide. It is a dazzling, white-hot liquid as taken from the furnaces. After cooling the carbide is crushed, packed in steel vessels, and again heated by electricity to redness. Pure nitrogen, obtained from the atmosphere by the liquid air process, is now added and combines directly with the carbide forming calcium cyanamid. On cooling, the mass is removed from the vessels in which it is contained, is ground and treated by a special process to eliminate every trace of unchanged carbide. Its free lime is then converted into stable organic compounds. The final material is granulated and packed in bags.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am laboring at some disadvantage, having been necessarily absent. I understand the Senator's position is that this dam should be built without any burden or any right to place a burden upon the use of the water.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. The dam is to be built entirely by this company and at its own expense.

Mr. HEYBURN. All that is asked of Congress is the permission to use a navigable stream?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. That is all.

Mr. HEYBURN. An attempt is being made to authorize the Government to charge for the use of the water?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. That is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. HEYBURN. I shall take pleasure in voting against any amendment that places a burden upon it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, the people of Alabama are always glad to have the assistance of the Federal Government, within its constitutional functions, in their aid, but we have found from experience that whenever it is attempted to interfere with the domestic affairs of the State, or those which are within the reserved rights of the State, it has brought nothing but disaster. We are greatly obliged to the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Washington for their aid in taking care of our people, but the State of Alabama has power to regulate the charges of this company, and to collect the toll from them, that will be required, and we do not want that right interfered with by the Federal Government.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I only desire to say, the Senator from Alabama need not reiterate his thanks to me for my interest in the people of Alabama. My interest in this bill is based upon the concern which the people of my State have in the precedent which is to be established here.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. If the Senator will observe what I said, this dam is to be built under the general dam act, and will be always liable to that act which may be amended or changed, as the Senator suggests, if he can get the votes in Congress to do it. So the place to legislate is on the general dam act and not on this local act at all.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the fact that the Congress has at this session passed an act entitled "An act to extend the time for the construction of a dam across the Pend Oreille River, Wash." This bill was almost identical in its purposes with the bill now under consideration, and was approved by the President on May 20, 1912.

This Coosa River is wholly within the State of Alabama except a short distance from Rome, a beautiful and thriving city in the State of Georgia. It flows into the Alabama near Montgomery. This dam will not only be of great benefit to the country in the way of the development that will follow, but it will improve the navigation of the Alabama River, because it will conserve the water there in the dry season to make the Alabama navigable all the year round, and for that reason we have great interest in this matter.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio presents a most important question. I think the Senate of the United States should very seriously consider it before entering upon any such course as is provided for in this amendment. It is proposed, as I understand the amendment, to invest in an officer of the National Government the right to regulate and control the distribution and use of water within one of the States. I think the National Government has no right or jurisdiction to interfere with the distribution or use of the water at all. Of course it has the right to protect the navigable character of the stream, and to impose any conditions which may be necessary for the purpose upon anyone seeking the right to construct any obstruction in the stream, but if the National Government imposes as a condition the right of a Federal officer to enter upon the fixing of rates at which water shall be supplied to the people of a State, it seems to me a very serious departure from conditions as they exist at the present time.

So far as I know, it is recognized as a right upon the part of the States to regulate the distribution of the water and to fix the rates for which it shall be supplied. It is said that if the States neglected to perform that duty it should be done by the Government, but it does not follow by any means. There is no reason why the Government should enter upon a jurisdiction that does not belong to it because the State which has the right to exercise jurisdiction over any matter shall refuse or neglect to take that step.

So with respect to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington, the United States Government has no more right to sell or dispose of the water of a stream for the purpose of irrigation, for example, than it has the right to fix the rate for which water shall be furnished. It is a matter about which the National Government has no jurisdiction whatever. It has no right to interfere with the disposition, distribution, or rate for which water shall be furnished to the inhabitants of a State.

For that reason I am disposed to oppose and vote against both these amendments, leaving it to the State of Alabama, if it so desires, to fix and determine the rates for which water shall be supplied to the inhabitants of that State.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I entirely agree with what the Senator has said in reference to the rights of the Federal Government in connection with these streams. I call his attention to the fact that Congress has repeatedly recognized what the Senator is saying by this legislation. We have put in different acts providing for the appropriation of water for Indian lands a provision that the appropriation shall be made by the Government of the United States under the laws of the State, clearly recognizing by our legislation that the State owns the water, that the State controls the water, and that the Federal Government has not anything to do with it except, as the Senator has stated, in connection with its power to regulate commerce.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have never heard the right of the State in this respect questioned. This is certainly an effort upon the part of the Government to trespass upon the rights of the States to determine this question of the supply and distribution of water; it is a very serious matter and one that the Senate ought to carefully consider before it enters upon that field.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has the time expired at which this bill is to be voted on, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are 14 minutes left.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, Mr. President, I do not want half that much time. I simply want to restate this case as it is. The State of Alabama granted to the Alabama Power Co. a charter to build this dam. The State has reserved the right to regulate it in all particulars except as to navigation; the State concedes the paramount right of the Government to control as to navigation; but as to the surplus waters of the State, which are to create this power, the State of Alabama has provided in the charter that they shall regulate the toll, the price, the tax, and everything else in connection with it under their charter and under the laws of Alabama. They may impose a tax of one to three or five dollars per horsepower on the power produced by this dam.

Anyone can see, Mr. President, what confusion would be created if the Government of the United States were to go to Alabama and undertake to impose a tax upon the power created by this dam upon the sham pretext, perhaps, that we will divide it with the State. Mr. President, we do not want any partnership whatsoever in this business beyond that which relates to navigation. The State of Alabama is perfectly competent to take care of this business, and she has reserved the right to take care of it.

The Alabama Power Co. proposes to construct this dam at its own expense, costing $1,622,000. The money is ready to be drawn upon for the work. There is no fake business here, Mr. President; there is no purpose of speculation here, to sell out to somebody without having put any money into the enterprise; and the work is already being carried on by a large corps of surveyors now in the field. This company, by constructing this dam at its own expense, pays to the Government of the United States the equivalent of $6.48 upon every horsepower they can create in the saving they make to the Government in the construction of the dam. The interest at 4 per cent amounts to $6.50 per horsepower. It seems to me that that is a sufficient contribution to the Government for the privilege of using the surplus water. Navigation is provided for under the direction of the Secretary of War. The dam must be built in accordance with the provisions of the general dam act. Congress may alter, amend, or repeal at any time it chooses.

Mr. President, if any other conditions are to be imposed upon this company, if they are to be required to pay a tax to the General Government beyond that which they have already consented to pay, an equivalent of $6.50 per horsepower every year as long as the water flows, they can not go on and would not go on, I apprehend, because the conditions already imposed by the State and the money that they have already put up to construct the dam are all, Mr. President, that any set of business men in this country can undertake to do.

They do not ask this legislation simply as a privilege, but they ask it as a matter of right and justice to the Government and to the people of Alabama.

I have nothing more to say, Mr. President. I am ready for the Senate to vote, and I hope it will vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1, on page 2, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the rights hereby conferred shall not be assigned or transferred except upon the written consent of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That the Federal Government reserves the right to control the charges for service to consumers in the event that the public interests may so require.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I sincerely hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, after section 1, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That the said power company, its successors and assigns, shall pay to the United States 1 per cent of the net profits derived from light, heat, power, or other proceeds of said work, to be ascertained and collected by the Secretary of War, and one-half of all such collections made by the Secretary of War shall be paid by him into the treasury of the State of Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I express the hope that that amendment may not be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the building of a dam across the Coosa River, in Alabama, at a place suitable to the interest of navigation about 7½ miles above the city of Wetumpka."

BILLS OF LADING.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I should like at this time—I do not desire to call up the bill at this moment, as it might interfere with other matters—I should like to have an agreement that to-morrow at the close of the morning business—I know of no unanimous-consent agreement to interfere——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that a special order has been agreed to, which is the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], to take up a bill immediately after the morning business.

Mr. CLAPP. To-morrow?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To-morrow.

Mr. CLAPP. Then I ask that following the consideration and disposition of the bill involved in the unanimous-consent request asked by the Senator from Texas for to-morrow the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 957) relating to bills of lading. That bill has been reported a long time, and certainly one phase of it is such as demands immediate attention at the hands of Congress. I think it will not involve any very lengthy discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that, following the special order which will come up immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow, the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be read.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota if he will not allow me to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the vocational educational bill before his bill is considered?

Mr. CLAPP. As the President of the Senate stated the other day, the habit has grown up here of interrupting the Chair in the statement of a matter. Just as soon as the matter for which I ask consideration is stated, I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 957) relating to bills of lading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. For what day, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For to-morrow, following the special order.

Mr. PAGE. I would ask the Senator from Minnesota if he will not yield to my unanimous-consent request—that is, that Senate bill No. 3, to which I have referred, be first considered? That is a bill for which I have for a long time patiently been awaiting consideration. I hope the Senator will allow that bill to have preference.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not see how——

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will allow me to say a word, the trouble is I can not make a disposition of this matter in that way. It would be for the Senate to say whether it would permit the unanimous-consent agreement to be made. My request for unanimous consent does not involve that we shall vote at a particular time, but it simply involves that we shall proceed at that time to the consideration of the bill. It will be open to the Senate, if the bill should lead to extended debate, to displace it with some other measure.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There is a conference report here which I desire to call up. I do not want to preclude the Senator from Minnesota from making his request, but I shall be compelled to object if one unanimous-consent agreement is to be superimposed upon another in this complicated way. I can not tell how long this conference report will take in discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I shall have to object on that ground, and on that ground only.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. CLAPP. Then I desire to submit the following request for unanimous consent: That on Monday next, following the close of the routine morning business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 957, being the bill relating to bills of lading, its consideration not to interfere with appropriation bills or conference reports.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. PAGE. If the Senate will grant unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 3 be taken up immediately following the consideration of that bill, I shall have no objection, but I hope the Senate will give me that consent in connection with this consent.

Mr. CLAPP. Let me suggest to the Senator from Vermont, that the objection which was made to my first request was that it followed indefinitely another request. I think if the Senator from Vermont would prefer a request for Tuesday, making it definite, to follow the close of the routine morning business, at least the objection made to my first request could hardly be made to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the consideration of the bill for which unanimous consent has just been given, the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 348, being the bill (S. 3) to cooperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades, and industries and home economics in secondary schools; in maintaining instruction in these vocational subjects in State normal schools; in maintaining extension departments in State colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. LODGE. Is the request to dispose of the bill or merely to take it up?

Mr. PAGE. I wish to add the condition that it shall not interfere with the consideration of appropriation bills or conference reports.

Mr. SMOOT. The request is only for the consideration of the bill, and not for the disposition of it?

Mr. PAGE. The consideration of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. If the consideration of the bill proceeds until 2 o'clock, it becomes the unfinished business, does it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE IN INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I call up the conference report on the disagreeing action of the two Houses on House bill 21969.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If I can do so without prejudice, I will yield.

Mr. KENYON. As the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] has been successful in securing unanimous consent, I desire to ask that Calendar No. 838, being the bill (S. 4043) to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors in certain cases, be made a special order for December 16, to be taken up and considered after the morning hour, not to interfere with the Archbald case. I do not believe the bill can receive consideration at this session, and hence I do not want to impose it upon the Senate; but I do want a hearing on this bill. It is a bill to regulate the shipment of intoxicating liquors into prohibition States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the request, as I understand, is that the bill be made a special order for that day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the conference report on the Panama Canal bill be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the report of the conference committee on the Panama Canal bill, which will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 13, 15, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 48, 50, 51, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 14, 28, 47, 49, 63.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 9 of the amendment, after the word "and," insert the words "govern the"; in lines 23 and 24 of the amendment strike out the colon after the word "qualified" and strike out the words "Provided, That he be subject to removal at the will of the President"; in line 27 of the amendment strike out the word "and," and after the word "operation" insert a comma and the words "and protection." In the first line of the last paragraph of the amendment strike out the words "The President"; capitalize the letter "b" in the word "before"; in the same line and line 2 of the paragraph strike out the words "shall cause the commission of arts to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the commission of arts may"; and in the same line, after the word "report," insert the words "to the President"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 11 and 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the two said Senate amendments and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That section 4132 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4132. Vessels built within the United States and belonging wholly to citizens thereof; and vessels which may be captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize, or which may be adjudged to be forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States; and seagoing vessels, whether steam or sail, which have been certified by the Steamboat-Inspection Service as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo, not more than 5 years old at the time they apply for registry, wherever built, which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, being wholly owned by citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, and no others, may be registered as directed in this title. Foreign-built vessels registered pursuant to this act shall not engage in the coastwise trade: Provided, That a foreign-built yacht, pleasure boat, or vessel not used or intended to be used for trade admitted to American registry pursuant to this section shall not be exempt from the collection of ad valorem duty provided in section 37 of the act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes." That all materials of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction or repair of vessels built in the United States and all such materials necessary for the building or repair of their machinery and all articles necessary for their outfit and equipment may be imported into the United States free of duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided further, That such vessels so admitted under the provisions of this section may contract with the Postmaster General under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce," so long as such vessels shall in all respects comply with the provisions and requirement of said act.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the following part of Senate amendment 16: "nor be less than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the canal," and agree to the same with the following amendment: Insert, in lieu of the words just quoted, the words "nor be less than the equivalent of 75 cents per net registered ton"; and that the Senate recede from that part of its amendment numbered 16 striking out the words "The toll for each passenger shall not be more than $1.50.

Amendment numbered 17: That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out in line 3 of the amendment, the word "alleged." In lines 10, 11, and 12 of the amendment strike out the words "off without proceeding to execution. All such claims, whether by agreement or after judgment, shall be paid"; and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amendment the words "the allowance and prosecution of"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amendment the word "and" and insert in lieu thereof the words "or the"; and on page 12, line 11, of the bill, after the word "judge," insert the word "thereof"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amendment the words "his assistants" and insert in lieu thereof the words "may appoint one assistant when necessary"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "canal" the words "or elsewhere"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "route" the words "or elsewhere"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the amendment strike out the words "ship engaged in or" and insert in lieu thereof the word "vessel"; in lines 1 and 2 of the amendment strike out the words "by the terms of this act"; in line 2 of the amendment, after the word "coastwise," insert the words "or foreign"; add to the amendment the following: "Suit may be brought by any shipper or by the Attorney General of the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"If the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be of the opinion that any such existing specified service by water other than through the Panama Canal is being operated in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and that such extension will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on the route by water under consideration, the Interstate Commerce Commission may, by order, extend the time during which such service by water may continue to be operated beyond July 1, 1914. In every case of such extension the rates, schedules, and practices of such water carrier shall be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and shall be subject to the act to regulate commerce and all amendments thereto in the same manner and to the same extent as is the railroad or other common carrier controlling such water carrier or interested in any manner in its operation: Provided, Any application for extension under the terms of this provision filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission prior to July 1, 1914, but for any reason not heard and disposed of before said date, may be considered and granted thereafter."

Transpose the order of amendments 61 and 62, so that amendment numbered 61 follows amendment numbered 62.

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOSEPH L. BRISTOW,
F. M. SIMMONS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
W. C. ADAMSON,
T. W. SIMS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I regret very much that I was unable to sign the conference report. One of the members of the conference committee on the part of the other House also found himself unable to sign it. I think I ought to state to the Senate why I could not agree with the other Senate conferees on the report.

Mr. President, as I said in the discussion on this bill when it was before the Senate, we were called upon to pass legislation authorizing the opening of the canal, the conversion of the construction force into an operating force, the proper care and control of the canal, and to provide for the fixing of tolls upon vessels passing through it. That was a comparatively simple proposition. A bill had been prepared by the authorities on the Isthmus and the counsel of the commission which, if it had been passed, would amply have provided for those subjects. Opportunity has been taken, however, to attach to this bill provisions amending the interstate-commerce law of the United States, and other amendments have been attached to it which I do not consider germane, which did not originate in the proper committee, and upon which no hearings have been held in the proper committees of the two Houses of Congress.

The bill as it stands now, in my opinion, is a violation of our treaty with Great Britain—the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. I could not vote for the bill, if it were unobjectionable in other respects, so long as it contained that provision. I think the provision exempting from tolls our coastwise ships through the canal is a clear violation of that treaty, and that of itself would be enough to prevent me voting for the bill if it were otherwise satisfactory.

Of course the acceptance of this conference report is a vote to pass the bill as amended in accordance with the report. No further amendment can be made. This conference report as a whole must be accepted or rejected. I am perfectly satisfied that it is better for the country from every point of view, much as I had hoped that legislation could be had upon this important canal question at this session, to reject this conference report, to let the matter go over until the next session, at which time, after a more thorough investigation and consideration of the important amendments that have been added to this bill, safer and more mature action may be taken.

As will be noted, the conference report recommends that the Senate recede from its amendment providing for the exemption from tolls of American vessels passing through the canal engaged in the foreign trade, and to that extent it is a better bill than when it went to conference.

Section 11 of the bill proposes to substitute, if the agreement of the conferees is accepted by the Senate, for what was known in the Senate as the Bourne amendment a provision prepared by the conference committee. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to what the provision of section 11 is as recommended by the conferees. A print of this bill as it will stand if the conference report is agreed to has been placed upon the desk of each Senator with the inscription on it, "Ordered printed as agreed to in conference," and on page 19 of that bill, at line 10, the substitute to which I refer is found. I will ask the Secretary if he will be kind enough to read what I send to the desk, commencing with the word "jurisdiction," in line 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine questions of fact as to the competition or possibility of competition, after full hearing, on the application of any railroad company or other carrier. Such application may be filed for the purpose of determining whether any existing service is in violation of this section and pray for an order permitting the continuance of any vessel or vessels already in operation, or for the purpose of asking an order to install new service not in conflict with the provisions of this paragraph. The commission may on its own motion or the application of any shipper institute proceedings to inquire into the operation of any vessel in use by any railroad or other carrier which has not applied to the commission and had the question of competition or the possibility of competition determined as herein provided. In all such cases the order of said commission shall be final. If the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be of the opinion that any such existing specified service by water other than through the Panama Canal is being operated in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people and that such extension will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on the route by water under consideration, the Interstate Commerce Commission may, by order, extend the time during which such service by water may continue to be operated beyond July 1, 1914. In every case of such extension the rates, schedules, and practices of such water carrier shall be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and shall be subject to the act to regulate commerce and all amendments thereto in the same manner and to the same extent as is the railroad or other common carrier controlling such water carrier or interested in any manner in its operation: Provided, Any application for extension under the terms of this provision filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission prior to July 1, 1914, but for any reason not heard and disposed of before said date, may be considered and granted thereafter.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now, Mr. President, the language just read at the desk is intended to give opportunity to such railroad companies as might otherwise be precluded by the language of section 11, commencing at page 18, line 18, and running down to the part where the Secretary began to read, to exempt themselves, if they can prove certain things to the satisfaction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, from the operations of the first part of section 11. It will be noted that the first part of section 11 provides that from and after the 1st day of July, 1914, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier to operate by water, either "through the Panama Canal or elsewhere," all over the United States, "with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic"; and "each day in which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense."

I say the rest of the language of this part of section 11 is intended to provide a way by which the railroad may exempt itself from the inhibition imposed by the first part of section 11. That method is that the railroad company may bring an application to the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine the fact whether it does or might compete with the steamboat line which it controls, and "the commission may, on its own motion or the application of any shipper, institute proceedings to inquire into the operation of any vessel" under their control. Then, in line 24, it says, "In all such cases the order of said commission shall be final."

I myself have serious doubt whether an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission ordering a railroad to cease to operate its lines of steamboats can be made a final order under the constitutional provisions for due process of law and the taking of property without due process of law. But if it can be sustained in law, it seems to me it is a tremendously dangerous power to confer upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, because if they can, without any appeal, issue an order that a certain railroad shall not operate its line of boats, in my opinion it may be a taking of property without compensation and without due process of law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut will suspend a moment. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Recognizing the very great importance of the conference report now before the Senate, and having been assured that debate upon it will probably be brief, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Connecticut will proceed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now, Mr. President, let us imagine the plight of a railroad company which has adapted its trade and is accommodating its customers and its shippers through long-established lines of trade by its rail and its water-owned boats, being told by Congress at this time that on July 1, 1914, it shall be unlawful for them to continue to operate their boats along the established channels of trade, and each day of such operation shall constitute a separate offense, unless they shall come down here and themselves institute a lawsuit before the Interstate Commerce Commission and prove to the satisfaction of the commission some positive things and some negative things. And what will they have to prove in order to prevent themselves from being outlawed by this act of Congress? They will have to prove that the specified service by water is being operated in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and that such extension will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on the route by water under consideration.

Mr. President, any railroad company in possession of and operating a line of steamboats must come down here before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and they have to prove that if they get an extension of time it will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on the route. Can any railroad company possibly ever prove any such thing? Would any two men ever agree about it, if the situation can be pictured, of a great railroad company with millions of dollars invested in these boats, coming down before the Interstate Commerce Commission to ask to be allowed to continue its steamboat line in operation as heretofore? Every shyster and striking lawyer, every gambler and blackmailer in the large cities and on the exchanges, every holder-up of corporations can organize a little coterie and make some sort of a financial showing, and go before the commission and say, "if it was not for this railroad-owned line of steamboats on this route, we stand ready to put on a line to-morrow."

The commission look at the law which says that they must prove that if they continue to run their operation will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition. The mere fact that they are operating the road, although it be in the interest of the public and although the commission find that it is for the natural convenience of the commerce of the people, reduces competition. If they are reducing competition, which they certainly are by the mere existence of the operation, the commission have no discretion, because the railroad company have to prove that they come within all the things provided in this statute.

You will notice there are not disjunctives between these things that the railroad company must prevent; they are conjunctives. It does not say if the lines are being operated in the interest of the public, or to the advantage and convenience of commerce, or if the extension will not exclude or prevent competition, but it says "and" in every case. The railroad company in order to be allowed to do business has to prove, as I said, that it will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition. Reduce means the diminution of competition. Exclude or prevent would mean absolute prevention of competition. But here they must prove that the operation of their line does not even reduce competition. So, in my opinion, the passage of this amendment would be nugatory, and section 11 would stand staring every railroad company in the face, providing that "from and after the 1st day of July, 1914, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever in any common carrier by water operated through the Panama Canal," with which it might compete.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will permit me, where, for instance, the Pacific Mail stock is on the market, how could you prevent any man from going on the open market and buying 1 or 1,000 shares or any other quantity of it? We could not enact a law to prevent that. It would be a violation of a man's right to make a contract. The bill is absolutely unworkable.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If I understand the point made by the Senator from Idaho correctly, he has touched upon a somewhat different feature, but to my mind one quite as objectionable, to wit, that no common carrier by water or other vessel owned by or controlled by any railroad company may be allowed to pass through the canal.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will permit me, I was intending to apply it more directly to the point under consideration by the Senator in this, that that is an admitted element of competition existing now and will be existing when the canal is opened, and it will continue to exist as long as that line of steamships operate upon the ocean. So that would come within the last enumerated provision of the bill and the result would be to diminish competition.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I agree to what the Senator says. The effect of the prohibition against steamships controlled by railroads only that are subject to our interstate-commerce laws passing through the canal is to allow every railroad in Canada, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific, roads subsidized by their Government, and active competitors of our own transcontinental roads both by rail and water, and to allow any steamship company or common carrier by water in which any railroad company was interested in Mexico or Central America or anywhere else, not subject to the jurisdiction of our Interstate Commerce Commission, to go through the canal freely, but we absolutely bar any common carrier by water in which any United States of America railroad has the slightest interest, and leave that great canal free to the foreign commerce carriers by water in which railroads may have an interest or which they may absolutely dominate.

Whatever may be the merits, and there may be some, depending upon the conditions in each case—whatever may be the merits of excluding railroad-owned ships from going through the Panama Canal—there certainly is no merit in allowing foreign railroad-owned ships to go through the canal and excluding and putting the ban of outlawry upon our own railroad-owned ships.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Is the Senator certain that he is right in his contention that a foreign railroad-owned ship could go through this canal and a United States railroad-owned ship could not?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am perfectly certain myself.

Mr. REED. I call the Senator's attention to this: Laying aside for the present the question of treaty construction, it is our canal, operated through our country; over it we have complete and absolute jurisdiction; and if we see fit to say that no railroad-owned ship can go through it, why can we not say that with reference to a ship that sails under the flag of another country as well as we can say it to one sailing under our own flag; and have we not in fact said that in this bill? I simply wanted to get the Senator's views, not to argue the question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, whichever horn of the dilemma the Senator from Missouri chooses to take in this matter, we are in a bad enough plight. I do not think anybody can answer the Senator's question better than the bill itself does. It provides that no common carrier by water in which any carrier subject to the interstate-commerce law has any interest shall go through the canal. If the Senator thinks the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States has any jurisdiction over the railroads of Central America and Mexico and Canada, except such minor parts of the Canadian roads as may make a slight detour or loop into the United States, I could not convert him from his opinion. I think absolutely as to every common carrier by water in which any foreign railroad may have any interest, direct or indirect, or which may be owned by the company, it leaves the canal open to them and bars out our own ships.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he does not think it is competent under the treaty for us to impose the same condition or conditions upon the use of this canal by foreign nations that we impose upon its use by our own citizens?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Whatever may be the power of Congress in the way of enumerating the classes of vessels which may navigate the canal or imposing conditions of traffic through the canal, the fact is this bill does not do it. This bill does not pretend to say to any foreign railroad-owned steamboat that they can not go through the canal, because it limits it to railroads under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission of this country, and the foreign roads are not under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do.

Mr. OLIVER. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if I am right in supposing that the vessels of the American-Hawaiian Line, which are upon the route, to go through this canal, are not actually the property of the Tehuantepec Railroad?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. With a modification that is true. They are not actually the property of the Mexican Tehuantepec Railroad Co., but at the time the Senate passed the bill I put into the RECORD a letter from the president of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co., Mr. Dearborn, in which he said that in order to buy some new vessels—and his line now consists of 26 of the handsomest steamers afloat—and at the time he built some extra ones he was compelled to apply to the Tehuantepec Railroad Co., which crosses the Isthmus of Tehuantepec in Mexico, for financial assistance, and he paid them in the stock of the steamship company. I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania for recalling that to my mind.

That situation to-day presents what I might call the horrible example produced by the attempt in this bill to throttle railroad traffic and to change the lines of traffic in this country, to strangle the natural lines of communication that have been built up and established here through a long series of years, authorized repeatedly by legislation. It shows the reductio ad absurdum of this sort of legislation, "while you wait," "right off the bat." I tried to show it before when the bill was up for consideration. I have not the slightest idea that anything I can say now can remedy the situation, but at the same time I feel compelled to say it, because they are my views, and as I am in the embarrassing position of being compelled to vote against the report of the conference committee of which I am a member I do not want to leave any reason to suppose that I do it from any motives of petulance or anything of that kind.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield further to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the Senator to say that he was opposed to the House provision with reference to railroad-controlled ships. I understood the Senator was opposed to the Senate amendment to that provision of the House bill, and I understand the Senator is opposed to the conference agreement with reference to that provision. Does the Senator object to telling the Senate how he would solve this question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Not the slightest. I had stated that before. I object to this provision in the bill because I objected to the House provision, and they are the same, and for the same reason I object to them both. The House provision, section 11, absolutely barred any railroad-owned steamship from going through the canal. The Senate provision barred all over the country any railroad from having any interest in any steamboat with which it did or might compete. The Senate amendment limited that inhibition to the Panama Canal and let the railroad and steamboat situation through the rest of the United States alone, and provided that no railroad should operate a steamship in which it had an interest or a line of steamers through the Panama Canal with which it might compete. To that extent the Senate provision was better than the House provision, in my opinion, and I voted for that limitation, but I am opposed to any limitation of time.

The Senator asks in what way I would suggest that we go about remedying such grievances as may be shown to exist. I would go about it not with a sledge hammer or a baseball bat; I would not go about it by throwing together in a bill as we have done here numerous heterogeneous matters of legislation affecting a great many different subjects outside of the jurisdiction of the committee of which I am a member and which reported this bill.

If it be so that Congress and the country and the people we represent, or attempt to, have suddenly come to the point where they want the common carriers by rail in the transportation business to divest themselves of attempting to do any transportation by water; if the people of the country think they will get better service by having steamboats run and organized and owned and controlled by ownership entirely separate from the railroads upon which they have got to rely for the distribution and the collection of their own cargoes; if the people of the country have come to that decision, I think then even the people of the country would want us, their representatives, to take the situation up and consider it carefully, systematically, with all the evidence we could get, employing the best experts in the world to advise us, and even if the operation of a steamboat of a railroad in a certain section of the country did violate somebody's preconceived academic theory about what ought to be, if in fact the result was beneficial to the people and the people wanted it kept that way, I think legislation ought to be framed with a view of doing the least possible harm to a complicated and long-existing situation, some parts of which to-day are good for the people, and I have no doubt some parts of it oppressive and ought to be remedied.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I understand the Senator's position is about this: He does not deny that there is an evil, he does not deny that that evil ought to be remedied, but he is opposed to the provisions in this bill upon the theory that that remedy ought to be applied in a separate measure and not a measure dealing with the operations of the canal.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator, I think, does not completely state my position, but parts of what he says are true and I will differentiate it if I can. I do not admit that some things are wrong about the ownership of the steamships owned by railroads, because I do not know personally; but I will say to the Senator I have no doubt that in certain sections of the country heretofore, and possibly now, the operation of steamships which are owned by railroads is oppressive and there are wrongs about it. There are specifical instances I do not care to go into. I have heard that the operation of some of the great steel and iron companies by steamboats on the Lakes was oppressive and drove other people off.

But, Mr. President, be it so, when the operation of the railroads was oppressive, when they made agreements with each other in the interests of keeping up rates, and when they made rebates and committed all sorts of unjustifiable discriminations, we did not rush in and pass a bill slap-bang, stopping the railroads from running or ordering them to sell their property or anything of the kind. We provided a commission with authority. We inhibited the rebates. We let the railroads go on, and we provided a commission to supervise them.

I think if we could have three months to consider this matter, if it could be referred to an expert commission to make a study of it as the House has proposed to do, it would be well. They have appointed a special committee to investigate carefully this whole subject and report to Congress. Without waiting for that, we go right ahead and pass a bill that the railroads must get rid of all their steamboats, with which they might compete, by July 1, 1914.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then the Senator thinks we ought to have some further investigation about this matter before we legislate. I will ask the Senator if it is not true that we have had the Interstate Commerce Commission vested with powers to deal with these questions; if that commission did not substantially prepare the conference provisions which deal with this question; and if he thinks a commission appointed by Congress with a short study of this question would be able to as fully master it in all its details and work up a plan that would remedy these evils that would commend itself to the judgment of Congress and the country to a greater extent than the plan worked out by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and which is embodied in this conference report?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator has either asked one very long question or he has asked several shorter ones.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator does not exactly understand my question, I will repeat it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would not ask the Senator to do that, but I will say——

Mr. SIMMONS. I can make it clear.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am perfectly willing the Senator should, but my doubt was whether I could remember them all. If the Senator will prod my memory if I skip one of them, I will endeavor to give my views about it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me state again it is my understanding that the provision we are now discussing in the conference report was practically prepared by the Interstate Commerce Commission or by members of that commission. The Senator says that we need further light upon this subject before legislating upon it, and to that end we ought to appoint probably a commission, or the committees in charge of the measure ought to give it further investigation. My question is, if I can get the attention of the Senator——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I hear everything the Senator says.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does he think the committees of the two Houses having this matter in charge or a commission appointed by the two Houses to investigate it would, after the short investigation that they would probably be able to give it, be better prepared to solve this question in a way satisfactory to the country than the commission who have practically prepared the provision in the conference report which he is now discussing?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the Senator's first question, if I can recollect the order in which the questions occurred, was as to whether the Interstate Commerce Commission had prepared this provision of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. That was not a question. I said that it was my understanding they had done so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The chairman of the commission before our committee, the Senator will recollect, Judge Prouty, stated when I asked him if he would recommend Congress to enact this section, that he had never seen it until I had handed it to him; that he had not had time to read it and did not know what it contained; and after he had read it I asked him if he or Mr. Lane had drawn it and sent it over to the House——

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood it was with reference to the conference-report provision.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am speaking about how section 11 came to get in the bill. The commissioner said that he had submitted something along that line from which he thought this had been drawn, his recommendation having formed a basis to the other House. This amendment, known as section 11, had been put on—he did not say this, but I say it now—on the floor of the House without any discussion or hearing whatever upon it, and no railroad and no steamship company and no shipbuilding company in the country had had any opportunity to be heard upon the question before it was put through very hastily and sent over here.

Now, I understand the Senator to say that the provision which the conference committee has substituted for the so-called Bourne amendment was drawn by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; and I will say further—and I think the Senator will bear me out in the statement—that Judge Prouty did say that he had not examined section 11; that it appeared from statements made to the conferees on the part of the Senate by the conferees on the part of the House that that provision had either been prepared in part by the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission or had been prepared by the other House after consultation with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and suggested that Judge Prouty meant nothing more than that he had not read over section 11 after it had been put in the bill. It should not be taken as a statement of Judge Prouty that the committee had nothing to do with preparing that section, which he seems not to have read, as a part of the bill at the time he was delivering his testimony or statement to the committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I hear what the Senator says, but I know nothing about how the provision which is now in the conference report was drawn or who drew it. I am ignorant about it. I do not care who drew it. I am not criticizing it because it was drawn by anybody, but I am criticizing what it now provides.

I say, if the Interstate Commerce Commission obeyed the mandate of Congress, no railroad company which is now operating a line of steamships which had either competed or which might compete with itself for traffic could ever get the Interstate Commerce Commission to say, "Your time for doing that shall be extended five years more, because we find that you do not reduce competition."

No man can be, if I may say so without offense, so devoid of common sense as to say that in operating a railroad and operating a line of steamboats with it, with whom it either does or may compete, the Interstate Commerce Commission can find that the continuance of the operation of that line of steamboats does not reduce competition. It necessarily does so, because, if the steamboat service was not there, somebody would come and put on some boats and get the traffic from these railroads. It is a perfectly self-evident proposition.

Mr. President, I do not want to devote my whole time to that one question, but I do say that Judge Prouty stated before the House committee that in certain sections of the country, notably the New England section, in connection with the operation of the Long Island Sound steamboats by the New York & New Haven Railroad, he would not interfere with that situation, as he thought the public was getting better service than they would if the road was compelled to sell its steamships; but under the language of this bill, if he is a lawyer, he would be compelled to decline to allow them to continue after July 1, 1914, because they do or may compete with themselves, and they do reduce competition, for if they do not do that, then other boats would come in and compete.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator think that those words should be construed to mean that any competition whatever was excluded? In other words, that the language "neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition" means that there should be no competition of any kind, or does he construe that language to mean that, if the railroad owning the water carriers, in its rates, in its terminal facilities, in everything connected with the operation of that carrier, did not create a condition that was more suppressive of competition than a carrier under private and individual control would exclude, prevent, or reduce competition, it should not apply to that condition?

I have had it in mind, by the way, that that had reference to a condition of competition created by the railroads which would suppress private competition, and that that condition of railroad competition would no more tend to prevent other competition than if the carrier was in private ownership; that the terms used in this provision would not be construed by the commission to apply to the exclusion of the railroad.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, that discloses one of the curious features about this whole school of thought that is after the railroads in these days. Of course, any company could put on all the boats they wanted and could operate them. There would not be any law to check them. We do not legislate against a great partnership putting on $50,000,000 worth of boats if they want to, and running them either on the seas or up any of our rivers; it would be welcome, no matter how powerful they were; but if a railroad attempts to do it, it must be prevented. The Senator's suggestion that the railroad-owned ships, unless they produce substantially a monopoly, do not intend——

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I did not say "become a monopoly." I said unless they are operated so as to produce a different kind of competition than that which might be expected from individual ownership that I did not think the commission would hold that the language I have quoted would exclude the railroads from operating them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The facts are, of course, that where the railroad company owns the docks and the hoisting apparatus, and has the power to fix its time-table to run trains to connect with its steamboats on its own wharves, running special trains for its passenger traffic and accommodating its time-tables from the factories to catch the steamboats at the time they leave for their destinations, it has necessarily a great advantage over any independent operator.

Mr. SIMMONS. But, Mr. President, right there, if the railroad wants to continue that business for a legitimate purpose, and not for the unlawful purpose of suppressing competition, does not the Senator think that, in order to meet the requirements of the conditions, they would so permit the use by their competitors of their terminal facilities and they would so regulate their own rates as to bring about that just and desirable condition of competition against which this provision was leveled? This provision was not leveled against fair competition on the part of the railroads, against such competition on the part of the railroads as might be expected from a private individual, but it was leveled against that character of competition on the part of the railroads which the private individual could not reasonably be expected to meet.

If the railroads enter this business for legitimate purposes, and if they desire to continue in it for only legitimate purposes, why would they not, when called up by the commission, create those conditions of competition which would be fair, just, and reasonable? If they did that, I think under that provision the commission would be authorized to permit them to continue.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I could talk for an hour here, using general and vague terms, such as "what is fair and just and reasonable and right between man and man," and so forth, and I would not be any wiser when I got through with such a disquisition as to what words to put into a statute the construction of which might deprive some corporation of twenty-five or fifty million dollars of its property. What I am talking about is not whether or not a railroad company ought to be compelled to allow its competitors to use its own terminal facilities and wharves and hoisting apparatus which it has built for its own purposes in competing with its competitors. There is a different section in this bill where it is attempted to amend section 6 of the interstate-commerce act, which does just what the Senator says ought to be done—compels all the railroads to turn over their terminal facilities to their competitors, and so forth. No private citizen would be compelled to do such a thing. If I had had the foresight to go and buy a large strip of water front in a big city, had gone into business on it, and was making a profit competing with some man who did not have such an advantageous site, Congress would not have compelled me to throw open my docks to my competitors unless I had utilized my water rights, my wharf facilities in a kind of business which was public in its nature, like the warehousing business, or grain elevators, or something of that kind, which was essential to interstate commerce and other traffic; but if a railroad company in its foresight acquires a dock, Congress says, "If somebody else wants to put on a steamboat and has not a good terminal facility you must throw that open to your competitor."

I had not, however, intended to branch out upon that subject at all. I say, in answer to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], who says that if the railroad companies conducted their business in a fairly competitive way, and so forth, there would be no criticism of the railroad companies, I say the railroad company can not conduct its business by common carriers by water at all after 1914 under this bill unless the Interstate Commerce Commission shall say that it is—operated in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people and that such extension will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on the route.

The Senator asks me if I do not think the words "to reduce" mean practically to prevent. I say that if they do there would be no sense in having them in the bill. The bill already contains the words "exclude and prevent." No other construction can be placed upon this but that the railroad has got to prove that it does not reduce at all the competition by water on that route.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BRISTOW. I hate to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not regard it as an interruption, for I am very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not want to keep the Senator from Connecticut on the floor longer than he wants to occupy it, but it seems to me that when the railroad company puts on a steamship line it is increasing competition instead of reducing competition; and unless that steamship line is used to destroy and drive off and keep out other competition, it is legitimate and all right, and will be permitted by the commission. The fact that it has a line there and that there is another line there, or if there is not another line there, unless that line is used to keep another line off, it is increasing competition. I can not myself see how the Senator can construe this term "to reduce" as being antagonistic to railroads operating lines, provided they are operated in a legitimate commercial way, and not used to destroy or crush out or to drive off other people.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, in this class of legislation—which we have not time here to examine in detail and which if any sound business man was attempting to get construed for the operation and guidance of his affairs, he would take to the most skilled legal talent in this country and get their professional opinion, and, it may be, have some litigation instituted in order to constitute a precedent or to construe the law and make it more certain that he was not going to be put out of business by the final order of the Interstate Commerce Commission within 20 minutes after he had made his investment—if in this highly complicated mass of legislative provisions we are to have the provision on lines 24 and 25, on page 19, that "in all such cases the order of said commission shall be final," what is going to happen to the transportation business of this country? We do not all know the conditions and terms under which the rail and water lines are put together. In some instances it is a case of ownership, and in others of leases. For instance, President Mellen, of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, testified before our committee that when the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. acquired the Old Colony Railroad, which, if I recall, was the owner of the Fall River Line of steamboats, the acquisition was made by a lease—a 99-year lease, I think—and in that lease there was a condition that the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. should always maintain the Fall River Line of steamboats in good condition, and if for any reason a breach of contract between the parties, or any other reason, the lease should be determined and the Old Colony road should have to take back its Fall River Line of steamboats, the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. would deliver them back in as good condition as they were received. Suppose the Interstate Commerce Commission ordered them to stop that business, to stop operating those boats, to tie them up to the dock, they could not sell them under the lease, and what is to be done?

The attorney for the Southern Railroad Co., Mr. Thom, representing not only the Southern Railroad but one of a committee representing a great number of the principal railroads of this country, cites in his testimony, which very few Senators will read—and, of course, I do not say that in a spirit of criticism, but I mean very few Senators can find the opportunity to read the mass of testimony taken before the committee—Mr. Thom cites instance after instance where all along the Atlantic coast the Southern States service between the Atlantic coast points in the Southern States and New York would be absolutely demoralized. The counsel for the Pennsylvania Railroad cites cases all along their lines where there are ferryboats, lighters, and tunnels, all of which do or may compete with each other. The ferry service between New York and Jersey City on the Pennsylvania Railroad may compete with the tunnel under the river. There are the most complicated situations all over the country such as those involving the Western Transit Co. on the Great Lakes, controlled by the New York Central system; and we are proposing to put through here, without power to amend, and almost without power to discuss, amendments which were voted on, as Senators know, under a unanimous-consent agreement, which provided that no matter what was proposed and sent up to the desk at the hour of 5 o'clock, or whatever it was, having arrived, voting should begin, and Senators were compelled to vote "yes" or "no" upon the most complicated propositions, and a number of us voted "yes" on some of them which I think we would never vote for again if we had time to realize what they meant, if anybody could find out what they did mean.

In my opinion, for a safe, sane, and staid legislative body like the United States Senate almost to kick through a piece of legislation affecting the arteries of commerce and trade and finance all over this country in almost a trivial spirit, a do-not-care, do-not-want-to-look, do-not-want-to-investigate spirit, is a revelation to me. I had hoped that we would have here a careful consideration and revision and a second hearing in calmness and deliberation of matters on which the House might have been hasty or mistaken.

Mr. SIMMONS. Before the Senator leaves that, of course, when Congress declares a policy, as it has in this case, that the railroads shall not be permitted to own water carriers in competition with them, some inconvenience to the rail carriers in divesting themselves of their property in water transportation is to be expected. There is no proposition that they shall lose any part of their property, however. It is only the public policy that they shall not use it in a particular way. The bill does not provide that the judgment of the Interstate Commerce Commission with reference to anything affecting the property rights of the railroads shall be final. When the Senator complains of that provision with reference to the judgment of the commission being final, he ought, I think, to distinguish between the character of controversy in which that judgment which is to be final is rendered, so as to show that it does not involve a property right. Of course, if it involves a property right, we can not confer upon that commission, which is an administrative body only, a power of final decision. The only power of final decision that we invest the Interstate Commerce Commission with is as to the matter of privilege which the act confers. Under the provision prohibiting railroad-owned ships from engaging in water transportation, if the railroads see fit to avail themselves of the privilege granted by the bill of extending their operations in violation of this principle established in the bill, they can do that by application to the Interstate Commerce Commission; and if the Interstate Commerce Commission finds that certain conditions exist with reference to their use of their water carrier, then the commission may extend the time in which the railroads may operate in violation of the principle and policy enunciated in the bill. With reference to that decision as to whether they will grant to the roads this indulgence, or whether they will extend to them this privilege, this bill does give the Interstate Commerce Commission's decision the effect of a final decree or judgment. I think there can be no legal or other objection to that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, where the legislature of a State had authorized one of its corporations to acquire and operate steamboat property, and the Interstate Commerce Commission should issue an order preventing it from doing so on the ground that it was not for the public benefit or that it reduced competition, I should say that it was a property right that was being affected. I do not think it is necessary in order to constitute a property right that the commission should have authority to confiscate the property and take it and use it for themselves. I am clearly of the opinion that that would be a property right.

The Senator from North Carolina has asked me what I would do to find out whether abuses did exist and to remedy such as were found to exist, hurting the general business of the country as little as possible. Mr. President, I would appoint either a joint committee of Congress or a commission of experts who had not already made up their minds about this matter and who were not affected by any disagreements with the parties over whom they were to act as judges.

I do not think there is any haste about this matter. The country has lived and prospered for quite a number of years with good railway and steamboat service, and I do not think there is any such haste about dismembering the transportation system of this country as would compel action upon this measure at this minute. I would appoint that commission and ask them to report to Congress when they knew enough about it to report. Then I would give the judgment of that commission great weight in the questions upon which it was expert.

Mr. President, referring now for a moment to the other amendment, which will be found in the print of the bill as agreed to in conference, on the desk of each Senator, on the bottom of page 20, the so-called Reed amendment, it provides:

No vessel permitted to engage in the coastwise or foreign trade of the United States shall be permitted to enter or pass through said canal if such ship is owned, chartered, operated, or controlled by any person or company which is doing business in violation of the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," or the provisions of sections 73 to 77, both inclusive, of an act approved August 27, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," or the provisions of any other act of Congress amending or supplementing the said act of July 2, 1890, commonly known as the Sherman Antitrust Act, and amendments thereto, or said sections of the act of August 27, 1894. The question of fact may be determined by the judgment of any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in any cause pending before it to which the owners or operators of such ship are parties. Suit may be brought by any shipper or by the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. REED. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. REED. The language of the first two lines has been changed, has it not?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will compare it with the bill as it passed the Senate to see. The Senator asked that some changes be made, I believe, did he not?

Mr. REED. I did not ask for any change in that part of it. I asked to have three or four words added at the end of the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has the Senator the bill before him as it passed the Senate?

Mr. REED. I have not. That is the reason I ask the Senator. I am just going on my recollection. I can get the bill in a moment. I have it in my desk.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have it here now, and I will read to the Senator the provision as it was inserted in the Senate. The Senator refers, I presume, to the interpolation of the words "or foreign." I will read, Mr. President, in order that it may appear in the RECORD, a few words of the amendment as it was put on the bill in the Senate to cover the Senator's suggestion that the language was changed in the first few lines.

Mr. REED. The point I am making is that the criticism which I think the Senator intended to make of the bill as it now stands is a criticism that must be based upon the terms made in conference and not upon the amendment as originally drawn, because the amendment as I drew it read in this way:

No ship engaged in or permitted by the terms of this act to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States—

Mr. BRANDEGEE (reading)— shall be permitted to enter or pass through said canal if such ship is owned, chartered, operated, or controlled by any person or company which is doing business in violation of the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890—

And so forth.

Mr. REED. That, of course, if the Senator will pardon me, limited the operation of the bill to vessels that were American, because no other vessel than an American vessel could engage in the coastwise trade under the terms of this bill or any other law. If the conferees have changed that so as to make the amendment applicable to all vessels passing through the canal, then manifestly it can not be charged to the author of the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I had not made any point at all. I was proceeding to read the amendment when the Senator from Missouri stated that the point he apprehended I was about to make, which was something that he had imagined, but which I had no intention of suggesting——

Mr. REED. I think it is somewhat a substantial thing whether the Senator mentioned it or not or whether the Senator intended to make it or not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I did not intend to make it. I think the amendment as proposed by the Senate conferees, to wit, the provision that—

No ship engaged or permitted by the terms of this act to engage in the coastwise—

And, as the conference report provides—or foreign trade of the United States shall be permitted to enter or pass through the said canal if such ship—

Meaning there a coastwise or foreign-trade ship—

is owned, chartered, operated, or controlled by any person—

To make it short, is violating the Sherman antitrust law.

I think the provision, as reported by the conferees, adds greatly to what objections I would have to it, if the words "or foreign" were not in, because I think it doubles the injury that will be done by the operation of the amendment.

Of course, Mr. President, if we have spent $400,000,000 upon this canal connecting two free oceans for the purpose of boycotting it and driving away from the use of it every vessel of any commercial importance that would carry tonnage enough to pay any tolls, I think this bill will go a long way in that direction. How absurd it is to say that no vessel shall be permitted to enter or go through the Panama Canal if its owners have violated the Sherman antitrust law? A vessel appears there in the night in a storm and wants to go through the canal. The man comes out to collect the tolls, if the ship is not engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States, and asks the captain who the owners of the vessel are. The captain says he does not know; he was employed by the superintendent or by a shipping house. Well, the canal man asks, "Have any of its owners ever violated the Sherman antitrust law"? The captain replies that he does not know. How is it to be shown which vessels are eligible to enter the canal and which are not? I do not believe it is possible to tell whether a railroad is interested in any vessel that goes through the canal.

Mr. CLAPP and Mr. ROOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield, and to whom?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield first to the Senator from Minnesota, who I think rose first.

Mr. CLAPP. I simply want to say that I have not read this conference report. I inquire, must the man in charge of the ship prove affirmatively that the owner has not violated the law?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, of course, Mr. President, I did not make this report at all, and I feel no responsibility for it.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator is discussing the report.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; the Senator himself is raising a question that I have not yet raised, which shows that there will be a diversity of interpretation upon what the section does mean, in my opinion.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator has just raised that question by picturing a ship in a storm ready to enter the canal and held up by an inquiry on the part of the toll gatherer as to whether or not the owner ever violated the law. Now, unless the law requires that the man in charge of the ship shall prove innocence, the picture conjured up by the Senator really has no place in this discussion. I had supposed it was only after a conviction for a violation of the law that the prohibition would apply.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, he could——

Mr. CLAPP. And my question goes right to the argument which the Senator was making. I have not examined the report, and I am not certain as to what it means in that respect.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The act provides on page 21, line 13, that—

The question of fact may be determined by the judgment of any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in any cause pending before it to which the owners or operators of such ship are parties. Suit may be brought by any shipper or by the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to ask the Senator, in view of that language, does he think that anybody else except a court of competent jurisdiction would have the power to decide?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know whether the ship would be put out before or after.

Mr. SIMMONS. When the act provides quite specifically as to how the question of whether the ship is owned by a concern operating in violation of the antitrust law shall be determined, does the Senator contend that some official of the Panama Canal could decide that question or undertake to decide it?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The act provides that these vessels shall not go through if their owners have violated the law, not whether they have done so heretofore, but whether they are doing so now; and there is no way of determining that by the judgment of a court.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, it seems perfectly plain that the custodian of the canal is prohibited from permitting a ship to enter it if it is owned by anybody who has violated this statute. He violates the law if he permits it to enter. The question of fact is to be determined by a court of competent jurisdiction in the United States, and he must detain the ship until the court has decided it. He can not allow the ship to enter. The ship goes to the entrance of the canal, and, if it is one of the class described here, he must, under pain of indictment and conviction and imprisonment for violating the law, forbid the ship to enter until a court of competent jurisdiction has decided that it has not violated the Sherman law.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, if this amendment to the bill, which is such an awful thing in the mind of the Senator from New York——

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, it is not an awful thing; it is a ridiculous thing; it is an absurd thing.

Mr. BRISTOW. Then, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] why he voted to incorporate it in the bill when it was before the Senate?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I voted for it, Mr. President, because I told the Senator from Missouri that I would let it go to conference, but it never occurred to me in my wildest dreams that the conferees would vote to keep it in. I did it to save time on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. REED. If I do not interrupt the Senator——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Not at all.

Mr. REED. This amendment may be very absurd and very ridiculous in the mind of the Senator from New York, but somehow or other I imagine it is not its absurdity so much as its virility that is disturbing these gentlemen. If I thought the amendment as absurd as the two constructions which have been placed upon it are absurd, I should be very much ashamed of its authorship. If by any stretch of the imagination it could be so absurd as to warrant the construction that the governor of the canal is required to halt a vessel at the entrance of the canal and inquire into its ownership and as to whether the owner had violated the antitrust act, and determine that question as a condition precedent upon evidence then and there to be presented to and passed upon by him—this construction is, of course, in the face of the plain language of the bill, which declares that the question of fact shall be determined by the judgment of a court—if the amendment I offered is as absurd as that kind of distorted and senseless construction, I would surely think we certainly had reached a point where the end of all that is ridiculous had been attained. If I thought the bill was as absurd as the construction given to it by the Senator from New York, I would be embarrassed indeed. Here is a provision which says that no vessel, the owners of which have violated the antitrust act, shall enter the canal. Then it proceeds to say that that question shall be determined by a court of competent jurisdiction. Determined when? Manifestly it means before the vessel enters, before it makes application for entry, and no court on earth will hold that it applies to a vessel, the owners of which have not been convicted of violating the act. Every vessel sailing the high seas under the flag of any civilized nation will be presumed to have a right to enter the canal. The general provisions of this act give to all vessels the right to enter the canal. That fixes the status and measures the rights of all law-abiding vessels. Then follows this clause which declares that no vessel shall be permitted to enter the canal if a court has determined as a question of fact that its owners have violated the antitrust law of the United States. This amendment may be an absurdity; it may be ridiculous; it may engage the risibilities of Senators, but the House of Representatives did not strike it out, and the conferees did not strike it out, and about the only people I have heard of outside of Congress who have criticized it have been the class of men who have criticized every bit of antitrust legislation that has ever been placed upon the statute books.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, the House did not strike it out, because it had not yet been to the House. As the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce said, the House would not take it up until the Senate had finished with it. It has been printed in the RECORD. The Senator is correct in the statement that there is a provision that—

No vessel permitted to engage in the coastwise or foreign trade of the United States shall be permitted to enter or pass through said canal if such ship is owned, chartered, operated, or controlled by any person or company which is doing business in violation of the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890.

"Which is doing business." That contemplates the status of the owners at the time the vessel attempts to enter the canal.

The Senator from Missouri says what this means is that there shall not be allowed the privilege to any vessel which has been convicted of a violation of the antitrust act. But the bill says nobody shall do it if the person or company is doing business in violation of the Sherman law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question. Suppose the language of some statute was that nobody who was a thief could do certain things. Would he not at once construe that to mean anybody who had been convicted of a theft? Would he allow a mere allegation to control the construction of the law? This language is: Nobody who is doing business in violation of the law. Does it not follow necessarily that the presumption of innocence accompanies up to the time a person is convicted by a court of competent jurisdiction of having violated it?

So, even if the amendment had not said, as it does in a later place, that this question is to be determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, necessarily, by all the presumptions of the law, it must be determined by some court before the allegation would become a fact. It must be a fact existing in the law, not a mere charge made at the time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know what the Senator means by a fact existing in the law, but if the contention of the Senator is that the inhibitions of this amendment apply against such owners as may have heretofore been convicted of a violation of the Sherman law, I understand what he means. But I think it is utterly untenable. By the provision in lines 16 to 20 it is provided that the question of fact—that is, whether these people are doing business in contravention of the Sherman law or not—"may be determined by"—may be; looking to the future—not has been determined.

The question of fact may be determined by the judgment of any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in any cause pending before it to which the owners or operators of such ships are parties.

The inhibition is against the entering or passing through the canal. How would it be enforceable?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It could not be enforced against anybody except such people as had been convicted. My objection to the provision at the time was really exactly the opposite of what is now presented. The fact that they had violated the antitrust law could not appear unless they had been convicted, and upon conviction a decree of dissolution would have followed, and then they would have ceased, within the contemplation of the law, to be a trust.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It does not provide if they have violated that act. Neither the Senator from Missouri nor the Senator from Mississippi will declare it is the intention of this act that no vessel owned by anybody who has violated the Sherman law shall not go through the canal.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand the amendment, it is anybody whose status then is that of having been convicted of being engaged in business, then and there, contrary to that act. The point that struck me was that if the company had been convicted of doing business in violation of the Sherman antitrust law a decree would have followed probably for a dissolution of the trust, and I thought this would not be operative.

My reasoning was exactly opposite to that of the Senator from Connecticut. It is true it does use the language "may be convicted." I thought that referred to this; and I think perhaps the Senator will agree with me that if the charge were made for the purpose of preventing the use of the canal by some company in a trust, then that charge, if decided by any court of competent jurisdiction to be well taken, would prevent thereafter the passage of those ships through the canal.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, when this amendment was pending it had to be corrected several times at the desk before it satisfied its author and before we could understand it clearly. You will remember, it was presented without having been submitted in print and without explanation. I had some serious doubts about it at that time, because I did not understand it. I was quite in sympathy with the idea expressed by the Senator from Missouri that ships which are violating the law should not have the privilege of using this canal.

Under sections 5 and 6 of the interstate-commerce law, which the section under consideration amends, certain penalties are provided for a violation of this prohibition against the use of the canal by illegal combinations. This indicates to me, at least, that if the boats pass through the canal, and it is determined afterwards that those boats had violated the law, the penalty would attach. Congress would be considered as having had in mind the fact that it had prohibited a certain act as unlawful; and of course the penalty could not be imposed until the act had been legally determined as being unlawful.

Mr. ROOT. What penalty is there?

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I may be permitted, while I am on my feet, I will suggest another matter which the Senator has discussed. I am not entirely pleased with the conference report, which proposes to change the Senate's action on the ownership of boats and boat lines owned by railroad companies other than those passing through the canal. I think the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Georgia was a much better provision than the one the conferees have adopted. It seems to me that there are many conditions to be considered. The very object, I think, that the Senator had in mind—at least it was the one I had in mind—was that boats owned by railroads not to operate through the canal should not be permitted to continue such ownership if their operation was shown to be detrimental to the people. If it is conceded that this proposed power can be conferred upon the commission—and I submit that the present amendment is open to the same constitutional objection, viz, that we are conferring, or proposing to confer, upon a commission the power of legislation—the power to look into these questions and determine whether such ownership of boats is detrimental to the people or not, we have added to that the extra condition whether they are competing or interfering with competition in some way.

It was clearly stated before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals by Commissioner Prouty that the present lake condition is more desirable than it would be if we divorced the railroads from their lake boats, but that it might be true, if such separation is compelled, that Marshall Field & Co. or some other concern might put on a boat line, and the result might be temporarily to reduce rates on packet freight, but the commissioner stated positively it would be a detriment in the long run. Can the commission under this conference provision look into the question broadly and determine whether this possible lessening of competition will be detrimental or beneficial, or must it decide it at the moment and according to the letter of the law?

I think the Senate provision has not been improved by the conferees, and I wish that their amendment might be eliminated. As I say, I do not find so much objection to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, because, if I construe it properly, it can only have the effect, after the act shall have been determined to be a violation of the law, to invoke the penalty prescribed.

Mr. REED. It follows the judgment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. So the offending boat goes through the canal at its peril. Simply because it gets through the canal without being stopped by the operators, does not signify that it has escaped the penalty of the law.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I do not want to——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have not yielded the floor, but I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. I will wait.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator want to take the floor in his own right?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir.

Mr. THORNTON. May I interrupt the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, while we are on the subject of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, I wish to give my reasons for supporting it, as I did, at the time it was passed. I voted for it because I believed its enactment would have a tendency to restrain the elimination of competition of independent steamship lines through the Panama Canal. I mean independent steamship lines engaged in the coastwise trade. The Senate had determined to forbid any vessel that was controlled or owned by a railroad to pass through the canal if it engaged in any coastwise trade.

As I said in my address to the Senate on the subject of this bill in general, I could not see how the granting to railroad owned or controlled ships, such as the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., the only ones that were in consideration under the restrictions that were placed by the committee amendment, could possibly stifle competition; and I was very clear that if it did have a tendency to do so the danger could be obviated by a proper regulation of those vessels of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. I believe it is quite possible for even independent steamship lines to form a combination and throttle in that way competition between themselves, just as it has already been done by them on the Atlantic coast, and it was in order to help prevent that condition that I voted for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, what we ought to do is to open this canal for operation. We ought to allow every vessel that plows the seas to go through that canal as they would upon either ocean. We ought not to attempt to dictate either to our own people or to the people of foreign nations how their ships should be owned, in what proportion, or by whom. The owners of foreign ships have a right to own ships in their own country. We have no more business to say that a foreign ship any railroad might have an interest in shall not go through that canal than we have a right to say that unless the owners are of a certain religious denomination the vessels shall not go through the canal. All attempts at restriction of the use of that great waterway other than to charge for the service rendered to the vessels in putting them through; all attempts to inspect her registry or ownership, whether we approve the cargo she has aboard, if it is a lawful cargo; all attempts to pry into the business secrets or to dictate as to the tastes or habits or desires of the shippers are perfectly preposterous.

Furthermore, the treaty provides that the canal shall be free and open to the ships of commerce and of war of all nations upon equal terms, so that there may be no discrimination with reference to conditions of traffic or otherwise. No human language could be plainer than that we were to build the canal and throw it open to the vessels of all nations upon equal terms as to its traffic. We can not set up in this case a standard of public policy in this country, commendable as we may think it is, like the Sherman law or any other act, and say to all the nations of the world, "You shall not go through there unless you comply with this branch of public policy of this country that water transportation shall be divorced from steam and rail transportation." Other nations are sovereign, as we are, and they have a right to determine those questions for themselves.

When we are called upon simply to provide machinery for the furnishing, opening, operation, and putting through the vessels, and the Congress of the United States pounces upon that opportunity, regarding it as a necessity to have the canal opened in time to verify the predictions of our engineers and in time to celebrate with a great international exposition on the waters of the Pacific Ocean, which shall have been wedded to those of the Atlantic by this great waterway, we have grabbed the emergency presented to the United States Government and are throttling the opening of that canal unless the legislation providing for it shall be made a vehicle to accomplish the views of people upon entirely extraneous subjects. There is no occasion to make the opening and running of the canal an excuse for making men honest or enforcing different criminal statutes of the United States or promoting any other object.

Mr. CULLOM. Or ideas.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Or ideas or fads. It should stand upon its own basis. If all could see it as I see it, we would open the canal and let all vessels go through upon equal terms, whether owned by railroads or not. If the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad wants to put on a great line of steamships running from Boston through the canal to the Pacific coast, thereby furnishing cheap transportation and an interchange of the products of both those sections of the country by rail and water route, competing with all the other transcontinental lines for the business and giving cheap rates, why should they not do it?

It seems to me this whole vexed question of the alleged keeping up of railroad rates by employing a fake steamship line to engage in fake competition with themselves and running the steamboat line not to make money for its stockholders but as a blind by which it may be enabled to drive off other competitors and keep its own rates up would be absolutely solved beyond question or peradventure if you would allow the railroads to put on vessels to compete with each other and as hard as you have a mind to; but do it under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission as to your numbers and rates, just as the railroads themselves are now put under their jurisdiction; and if the Interstate Commerce Commission is so busy that it can not attend to the business, solve the problem by putting on some other commission or enlarging the present commission.

The truth is the traffic through that great Panama Canal will never be throttled by the operation of steamboats bought by the railroads. What is well known, I put in the RECORD the other day a report of the Committee of the House on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries upon the pools and combinations existing among the ships on the ocean.

Here is the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., who wants to put on four great 37,000-ton steamers plying between New York, going through this canal, stopping at San Francisco, taking on some fuel, taking off passengers and freight, and then on to Hongkong, Manila, and oriental points, loading there with oriental traffic, coming back and delivering it in San Francisco, then down the coast and through the canal back to New York. That is the line that alone is maintaining the American flag upon the high seas to-day. When the San Francisco exhibition is opened and the ships and navies of the world come over here to help celebrate the accomplishment of that great event, the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. is to lie off at anchor in the harbor, and so we of all the nations and of all the ships can not pass through our own American canal because a railroad company controls the stock.

Mr. President, the last report of the National Waterways Commission, which has studied this whole subject, recommended, in conclusion, what I will ask the Secretary to please read to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read, as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The rapid increase in the ownership and control of railways over boat lines calls for immediate regulation, so that the advantage derived may not be used to eliminate competitors and to raise water rates. As has already been stated, two widely different policies for the control of this situation are now before Congress. One would absolutely prevent railways from owning or controlling any boat line with which they were in competition; the other would give the Interstate Commerce Commission such control over the activities of railway-owned boat lines that the public would be protected against the abuses which might arise. The latter policy is constructive, while the former is destructive and overlooks the benefit which we are striving to secure, namely, cheaper transportation. The main question with the public should be not so much who furnishes the transportation as that it should be adequate and cheap. If the latter policy is pursued, it will mean an increase of transfer traffic between the railways and waterways which otherwise could not be developed. The railways have the capital to invest in water transportation, and they have the traffic to exchange with water carriers. To prevent their participation in water transportation would be to force more of the traffic to go by rail. (P. 578, final report National Waterways Commission.)

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the country will be better off, in my judgment, if this conference report should not be accepted, but either recommitted or rejected. What would be quite sufficient to provide for all that we started to provide for in the opening and operation of this canal would be accomplished by a short resolution, which I send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read, as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That until Congress shall otherwise provide, the President is authorized, as the progress of work on the Panama Canal may seem to justify, to proceed with the organization and training of a competent force to man the locks and operate said canal when completed and ready to be opened for use and operation.

The President is also hereby authorized to establish facilities for the repair and supply of our own Government's vessels and such others as may use the canal, and to install wireless telegraphy, making such agreements with private wireless telegraph companies as may be necessary to secure freedom from interference, the cost of any of which may be paid from appropriations either for the construction or the maintenance and operation of the canal.

The President is further authorized to give public notice, by Executive order or proclamation, that the tolls to be charged vessels for passage through the Panama Canal shall not exceed $1.25 per ton, net registry measurement, or the equivalent thereof.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The only haste about this legislation or any of it was that involved in creating an operating force from the present skilled constructing force so that the services of the men engaged upon the work there now and familiar with it could be continued when the canal is opened and that they should not leave the Isthmus and the zone.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to complete just one more sentence about this resolution, and then I will yield.

The only other feature that required immediate attention was the notification to the commercial world and those contemplating the construction of great ships, the completion of which will take about two years, that the tolls to be charged should not be beyond a certain sum, and upon that basis they could go ahead with their shipbuilding. The President in this resolution is authorized to notify them that the tolls shall not in any event be over a dollar and a quarter a ton, and then if it was anything less it would be to their advantage. Everybody would be safe. The canal could be completed, opened, and operated, and the community would be notified of the tolls. That is everything that was proposed to be contemplated in this legislation. The question of the revision of the courts down there and such minor questions can be determined at any time. In the meantime an investigation should be made of this whole subject of water and rail transportation, and justice could be done the subject by the Congress of the United States.

Of course I do not offer that resolution now to be passed. I say that the whole thing could be remedied if this report was rejected or recommitted and that resolution passed by Congress.

Now I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. The only purpose for which I desired to interrupt the Senator was to inquire whether he offered the resolution as a substitute for the conference report——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, no.

Mr. SIMMONS. Or as a substitute for the bill or in what way he meant to bring the resolution before the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not offer it at all. It would be utterly out of order and unparliamentary to offer it. The conference report must be voted up or down; it must be accepted or not accepted, without amendment. I say if it were voted down some such provision as that would answer every need of the canal as to its completion and opening without involving at all these controverted subjects and without incurring the ill will of all the nations who want to use it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator suggest that we drop this proposed legislation and adopt that resolution?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If I had my way I would not hesitate one moment. I think it would be a public calamity to have the conference report adopted. I think it is a work of devastation and destruction, and it will hang over our heads for a long time if we accept the report.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I am very much interested in the argument made by the Senator from Connecticut. When the canal shall have been completed we will have invested in it somewhere probably between six and seven hundred million dollars. I appreciate all that he said as to the necessity and the importance of inviting trade through the canal. But, Mr. President, I do not believe that it should be made our master. I believe that it should be made our servant. All regulations in free government are based upon the theory that there is a small number of men who possess the capacity and who will override the interests of the many unless they are regulated. That is the theory upon which all regulations rest. Whenever we undertake to regulate we are met by the people who are more directly interested in the subject of regulation with the proposition that the regulation means the total annihilation of the business to be regulated. When we passed the antirebate law of 1903 we were told this; when we passed the railroad legislation of 1906 we were told this; and yet the business of the country has gone on.

Now, the trouble is that neither a House committee nor a Senate committee can fairly consider how far the alleged injury may be speculative or may be real. I do not charge these men with conjuring up consciously injury that will not result, but it is one of the peculiarities of human nature that when they live off the benefactions of Government they become in a certain sense fearful of the withdrawl of such benefactions, and it robs the individual to a certain degree of his courage. So it has happened in the past that a great many of the direful calamities that were predicted did not follow the proposed legislation.

The Senator from Connecticut says that instead of passing this bill we ought to appoint a commission and let that commission thoroughly investigate this entire question. Mr. President, that is just what we are doing now, with the additional qualification that we are making the situation, if the bill is valid, somewhat elastic; and instead of Congress, upon uncertain information, attempting to lay down a rule that shall apply upon the Sound of Long Island, apply upon the Great Lakes, apply upon the western coast, without any elasticity whatever, the bill as reported, if valid, affords that elasticity, that recognition of a difference in conditions in a nation occupying the area that we do, with our varied conditions, and that is one of the desirable things to meet in legislation if there is any way of meeting it.

Congress could not by a congressional act lay down one rule for New England and another rule for the Great Lakes and another rule for the Pacific coast. The only way that that recognition of difference of conditions can be obtained is by referring it to a commission, which may exercise a certain amount of discretion, which may take into account a condition that exists in New England, as it may vary radically from a condition which exists on the Great Lakes or exists on the Pacific coast.

I confess this goes further in the authority conferred upon the commission than many of us have ever felt that we could go, and I am not certain we can, under the Constitution, confer the broad power upon the commission which this act confers. In our interstate-commerce regulation, in our contemplated trust regulation, we never have felt that we could confer that broad authority upon the commission which is conferred by this bill.

There are Members of this body who have given the subject thought and who believe that it can be done. For one I am willing to yield my doubt and pass the bill and appeal to the only final tribunal, which is the courts, with the suggestion that if this provision stands the scrutiny of the courts we have done more in this session to solve the question of regulating transportation and to solve the trust problem than has been done in all the years which have preceded the enactment of this legislation, because every time that we have been confronted with this question we have been confronted with the fact that a great Nation, extending from one ocean to the other, from our northern boundary to our southern boundary, presents a difference of conditions which calls for a difference in the application of legal principles and legislative policy.

If this provision is sustained, we have gone far toward solving that problem, and for one I desire to express my pleasure at the fact that we have gone thus far in this matter, and it is sufficiently sanctioned by the opinion of lawyers in this body that we can not be said to be experimenting with the courts upon it. We have reached a point where we have found a solution, if valid, of one of the greatest difficulties involved in the trust and transportation proposition.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, just a minute. The only material difference between the conference report as presented and the bill as it passed the Senate is that what is known as the Bourne amendment has been somewhat changed, so as to place the burden of proof on the railroads instead of on the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Bourne amendment sought to give the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority to prevent a railroad from owning a steamship line if the ownership of that steamship line was used to suppress or destroy competition. The bill as it passed the House placed an inhibition on any railroad company from owning any steamship line that competed or could compete with its rail.

The Senate, by an amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] amended that so as to restrict this inhibition to the Panama Canal only. Then the Senate adopted the Bourne amendment, which purported to give the Interstate Commerce Commission authority to examine into other conditions where a railroad company owned a steamship line, and if it found that the ships were used for the purpose of destroying competition, to require the railroad company to dispose of those ships. The Bourne amendment was re-formed so as to make it unlawful and to forbid railroads from owning such competing steamship lines, and then conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority, upon application from the railroad company, to except certain lines from that inhibition if the commission found that it was in the interest of the public to do so.

That is the only material change which has been made in the bill since it passed the Senate. The other statements which have been made by the Senator from Connecticut simply cover the discussion we had for days and days and weeks before; and I think the Senate is very familiar with the different points of view of that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the report.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, before the Senate votes I desire to say just a word.

Some days ago when the canal bill was before the Senate there was from time to time some running discussion relating to the decay of the merchant marine, and relating to efforts that had been made at different times to resuscitate that enterprise.

I remember that at one time during those periodical and somewhat spasmodic discussions the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], now occupying the chair, and some other Senators on that side of the Chamber, took occasion to express their profound sorrow, amounting almost to despair, at the failure of the repeated efforts which had been made to rehabilitate the merchant marine, and upon one occasion, at least, I am sure on more than one, the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] rather taunted Senators on the floor who had at times opposed the effort they had made because they were opposed to the plan or plans they had advocated with subsidies as a basis, by saying that no effort had been made or intelligent plan suggested by those of us who were not in favor of their particular line of policy, that we simply stood in the attitude of opposing without proposing anything.

I said once that at that very time, during that very discussion, a bill was introduced in the House of Representatives by one of my colleagues, Judge ALEXANDER, of Missouri, which did propose a plan, at least official in character, to authorize the purchase, ownership, and registry of foreign-built ships for over-seas trade, and there was one step along the line of progress that many of us believe in.

I find on examining this conference report that the bill introduced by Representative ALEXANDER, which I think, although I am not at this moment certain of it, has been favorably reported in the House by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, has been written into this report. A provision in the conference report now before the Senate is almost a literal transcript of the Alexander bill. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] offered an amendment to the bill when it was pending here which embodied the main idea of what was in the Alexander bill and in other bills and measures that have been proposed from time to time, and it was adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, the amendment that I offered was a bill which I had already introduced in the Senate and which had been pending for several months, and might have been considered by the committee.

Mr. STONE. Well, I was certainly not seeking to depreciate what the Senator from Mississippi had done.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not think that. I thought the Senator was trying to enforce the idea that in one of the Houses, at any rate, we had been trying to proceed constructively toward the upbuilding of the merchant marine by enabling ships to fly the American flag. I merely wanted to reinforce it by saying that there had been bills pending, not only in one House, but in both, introduced by Democrats, and this amendment, which went to conference and which formed the basis of the present agreement, was one of those bills which had been introduced in the Senate and had been pending for some months, but had received no sort of consideration, of course, from any committee.

Mr. STONE. That does reenforce what I was saying, and in the way suggested by the Senator. The provision, as it appears in the conference report, embodies an amendment proposed to the canal bill which was agreed to by the Senator from Mississippi. It goes further by providing a more comprehensive and complete statute for the inauguration and enforcement of this proposed law, which I hope very much will become a law actually.

I want to say just this much, so that it may go into the RECORD, that the fact—for it is a fact—that movements upon this line have been made in the past, and that measures of this character were pending in Congress as expressive—I will not say altogether of a Democratic policy—but as expressive of the policy of Senators and Representatives, without special regard to party, who do not believe in the policy of reviving our merchant marine through subsidies, but through what we consider a more intelligent and practical method, and one more likely to result in accomplishing the great purpose we all should have very close to our hearts—the rehabilitation of the American merchant marine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. OLIVER. Before the vote is taken on the conference report I wish to send to the desk and to have read an editorial from one of the leading newspapers of the country, published in this morning's edition, apropos of the pending bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the paper will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

A dishonorable, destructive bill——

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire from what paper that is?

Mr. OLIVER. It is from the New York Sun of this morning.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the editorial as follows:

The conference committee on the Panama Canal bill supplies the quantitative test to national dishonor, makes a horizontal reduction of it. The Senate amendment giving free tolls to American ships in foreign trade is taken out. Free tolls to American coastwise vessels remain.

This is not the equality stipulated by the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. This is not the principle declared by Mr. Taft last December—he can not need to be reminded of it—that the tolls "must be the same for all."

The United States can not save its reputation in the eyes of the world by this peddling and haggling. It must keep its solemn engagements wholly or bear the shame of breaking them.

The conference sticks to the original attack on the railroads, indeed makes it fiercer, if anything. Steamships owned by them are excluded from the canal. The great railroad systems of New York and New England may continue to hold, but at the mercy of the Interstate Commerce Commission, their steamships not operating through the canal. That body is to decide beyond appeal.

In a hodgepodge of unrelated provisions alien to what should be the purpose of this bill we have not the patience to pick out more. Enough to say that in its outlawry of great systems of transportation, in its aim to divert a national enterprise built with the taxpayers' money into a means for the injury of some, in the vain belief that railroads can be injured without hurting other interests, in its practical boycott of the vast region whose traffic must make its way to the canal by the transcontinental railroads or not at all, in the letter and spirit of its most salient and important provisions it is the most muddleheaded and the maddest raid of ignorance and demagogy against American commerce and industry. It has this two-headed distinction, that it hits both the honor and the pockets of the United States.

Mr. Taft knows how to veto. He never had and it may be long before a President has again the chance to forbid as dishonorable and destructive a collection of fraud as this Panama Canal bill. But if Congress has any sense left it will let all but the administrative sections of the bill lie over.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish to make an observation. Many Senators believe the habit of inserting editorials of this or any other character into the RECORD is of doubtful propriety. The insertion of this editorial into the RECORD tends to emphasize the idea that a rule applies one way to one Senator and another way to another Senator. About a week since I submitted an able, temperate editorial from a metropolitan newspaper, the New York American, advocating freedom from tolls for American coastwise ships passing through the Panama Canal. Objections were made. The Senator from Pennsylvania, by placing this editorial into the RECORD without objection, accentuates that if I were uncharitable I might suspect that a rule or habit here applies one way as to him and another way as to myself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, I ask by whom is this editorial introduced? Is it a part of a speech that is being made upon the floor, or how?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asked that the editorial be read from the desk, and unanimous consent was given for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I merely want to say that if I had heard the request, unless this is going to be a portion of a speech about to be made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, I certainly would have objected, just as I objected the other day to a similar request made by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. I do not think that newspaper squibs ought to be sent to the desk to be made a part of the RECORD, except where a Senator is making a speech and quotes them as a part of his remarks.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not want to deprive the Senator of the privilege of objecting. He can object if he so desires. If he does, however, I will read the editorial as a part of my own remarks, because it expresses so exactly what I think that I feel it ought to be presented for the consideration of the Senate and that it ought to go into the RECORD.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I understand the attitude contained in this newspaper clipping—I think I heard a part of it—if it exactly expresses the opinion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, he has such a low opinion of his colleagues in both Houses as to constitute a very remarkable thing indeed. This article, if I caught it aright, is scurrilous in its nature, insulting and offensive to a majority of the House of Representatives and a majority of the Senate of the United States. Part of its language is that its provisions are "peddling and haggling"; it is "a hodgepodge of unrelated provisions." We are all fools, I suppose, in the opinion of the New York Sun and in the opinion of the Senator from Pennsylvania—

In a hodgepodge of unrelated provisions, alien to what should be the purpose of this bill, we have not the patience to pick out more. Enough to say that it is outlawry—

Outlawry! We are, then, not only fools, but we are dishonest; we are robbing somebody of some property interest of some sort—in its outlawry of great systems of transportation, in its aim to divert a national enterprise built with the taxpayers' money into a means for the injury of some, in the vain belief that railroads can be injured without hurting other interests, in its practical boycott of the vast region whose traffic must make its way to the canal.

And so forth.

In the letter and spirit of its most salient and important provisions it is the most muddle-headed and the maddest raid of ignorance and demagogy.

Now, this represents the opinion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, if his last utterance was not unthoughted, of his colleagues in the House and in the Senate. They are demagogues; they are ignorant; they are fools; and they are dishonest.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for putting this article into the RECORD, as he has done, whether he objects to it or not. He had read a great part of it. That, Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a moment.

Mr. OLIVER. That article says nothing whatever about any Member of the House of Representatives or of the Senate individually, or of the House or of the Senate collectively, but it does stigmatize this piece of legislation in the language which I believe ought to apply to it. I say again—and I withdraw nothing that I did say—that it expresses just exactly what I think of this proposed legislation. I withdraw not one word of what I said. Now, the Senator from Mississippi can make the best of that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Mississippi could not make the best of it; that would be impossible. It is easy to make the worst of it. If the legislation is itself "a hodgepodge of unrelated provisions, alien to what should be the purpose of this bill"; if it is really "the maddest raid of ignorance and demagogy" that this newspaper can think of; if it is a national dishonor, as a part of it is alleged to be; if it is mere "peddling and haggling," then the men who have passed the legislation, who are the equals in character and intelligence and patriotism and honor of the man who wrote the editorial, or of the Senator from Pennsylvania, must be themselves fools, unpatriotic, dishonest, peddlers, and hagglers.

I rose for the purpose of answering the very fair complaint of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. The other day, when he wanted to put a newspaper article in the RECORD, not as a part of his speech, but merely by sending it up to the desk to be put into the RECORD, I objected, as he has said, and had I heard the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I should have objected to it. As the Senator from Arizona has said, what he wanted to put in the RECORD was a temperate criticism of Congress. This is a scurrilous, insulting, offensive, vituperative article, holding up the representatives of the people to the American people as asses, dishonorable, unpatriotic, peddlers, and hagglers.

I did not mean to criticize the Senator from Pennsylvania further than to say that when he said that this article expressed exactly his view, then it must necessarily follow that his view of his colleagues in both Houses is as unfavorable as the view of the writer of the editorial, and from the logic of that conclusion nothing, it seems to me, can detract. No man is more in favor of the absolute freedom of the press than I am, nor do I complain when newspapers call me, individually, anything they please. I have never answered one of them yet. I believe it is good that they should be free. I agree with Thomas Jefferson, that error is not dangerous so long as reason is left free to combat it, but I do think that the policy of inserting in the RECORD, not as a part of a speech, not as a part of an argument, scurrilous, offensive, and vituperative articles against the legislative body itself, with no possible purpose except to insult its membership, is not a good precedent to follow in the future.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I simply want to say that the extremely superlative epithets used by the Senator from Mississippi are his, and not mine, and that, of course, in introducing this editorial and asking that it be placed in the RECORD, it was hardly necessary for me to say that I meant no reflection upon any Member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives, nor upon the Senate nor upon the House; but I did characterize this product of the concrete wisdom or unwisdom of Congress in the terms which I think it deserves.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I transfer the pair which I have with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] to the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. He being absent from the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DU PONT (when Mr. RICHARDSON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] is absent from the city. He is paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. If present and free to vote, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer the general pair I have with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. On account of his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WETMORE (when his name was called). I have a general pair for this week with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER], not extending, however, to matters involving a two-thirds vote. I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have a general pair with him, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. For the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] I announce that he is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. PERCY]. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. GORE. I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON].

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER], and that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—48.

Ashurst	Cummins	Massey	Smith, Ga.
Bacon	Curtis	Myers	Smith, Md.
Borah	Fletcher	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Bourne	Foster	Newlands	Smith, S. C.
Bradley	Johnson, Me.	Overman	Stone
Bristow	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Swanson
Bryan	Jones	Perkins	Thornton
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Pomerene	Tillman
Chilton	Kern	Reed	Townsend
Clapp	La Follette	Shively	Watson
Crawford	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Williams
Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	Works

NAYS—18.

Briggs	Cullom	Lippitt	Root
Burnham	Dillingham	Lodge	Smoot
Burton	du Pont	McLean	Warren
Catron	Gallinger	Oliver
Crane	Heyburn	Penrose

NOT VOTING—28.

Bailey	Dixon	Hitchcock	Poindexter
Bankhead	Fall	Lea	Rayner
Brandegee	Gamble	McCumber	Richardson
Brown	Gardner	O'Gorman	Sanders
Clark, Wyo.	Gore	Owen	Stephenson
Clarke, Ark.	Gronna	Paynter	Sutherland
Davis	Guggenheim	Percy	Wetmore

So the conference report was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday passed a resolution (S. Res. 379) changing the name of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals to that of the Committee on the Panama Canal, because on consultation with the financial secretary of the Senate I find it might complicate the standing of the clerk of the committee.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAN JUAN, P. R.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Out of order, I ask leave to submit a report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. That committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 7472) increasing the limit of cost for the erection of a United States post-office and courthouse building at San Juan, P. R., directs me to report it favorably.

Mr. WARREN. As that bill is only a few lines in length, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to increase the limit of cost for the erection of a United States post-office and courthouse building at San Juan, P. R., to $457,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I send to the desk a letter from the Harlan & Hollingsworth Corporation, of Wilmington, Del., in reference to the Panama Canal, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD without being read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered in the absence of objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

HARLAN & HOLLINGSWORTH CORPORATION,
Wilmington, Del., August 14, 1912.

Hon. HENRY A. DU PONT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: This corporation, the original iron shipbuilding yard in America, employers of upward of 2,000 workmen, views with the greatest alarm that portion of the Panama Canal bill, recently passed by the Senate of the United States, which provides for the purchase of foreign-built vessels to be used in foreign commerce under American registry, and most earnestly opposes its enactment into a law.

The effect of the passage of this bill will be the building of all vessels of that class in foreign shipyards, where the cost of both labor and material is much less than in this country.

In a ship complete practically every commodity is to be found, and consequently every trade is employed in its construction and equipment. One hundred million dollars is a conservative figure representing the investment in American shipyards, and 100,000 souls an equally conservative estimate of those dependent for their maintenance on the wages earned therein.

The industry of which we form a part is the only large one that has not heretofore had the benefit of protection, and as a result has had a very hard and discouraging struggle for existence. The preference given by free tolls to American built and owned vessels would undoubtedly stimulate the building of an American merchant marine in American shipyards by American workmen, and afford some adequate return for the patriotism, zeal, and capital that has been for years expended in our shipyards, with but pitiful financial returns, and would be a source of prosperity to the country at large, thus in a measure recompensing the people, whose means have been so lavishly expended in the construction of the Panama Canal.

The enactment into law of the section of the bill in question will pass over that source of prosperity to the shipbuilders and workmen of foreign countries.

We submit that the free-ship amendment was injected into the canal bill—though not having the slightest connection with it, being a separate issue and one quite important enough to command national attention—justifying the shipbuilder's natural inquiry, "Why was it inserted in this measure and passed by the Senate in this reckless manner?"

It was passed improperly and without due consideration and without consultation of those qualified to know the facts, and we most urgently insist that the best interests of our and all allied industries will be best subserved by the rejection of the bill in question, the passage of which will sound the death knell of our long-deferred but thoroughly deserved dreams of prosperity.

We respectfully but most emphatically request that you use your best endeavors to prevent the enactment into law of the above-mentioned discriminating free-ship section of the Panama Canal bill.

Very respectfully,

HARLAN & HOLLINGSWORTH CORPORATION,
PERSIFOR FRAZER, Jr., Vice President.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on House bill 18642.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
August 14, 1912.

The President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill H. R. 18642, an act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," with his objection thereto, the House proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the same; and

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same. The objection thereto of the President is herewith transmitted to the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move the passage of the bill, notwithstanding the veto of the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the question. The question is, Shall the bill pass the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. PENROSE. On that question, the vote is to be taken by the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON], and on an ordinary question I should feel, of course, bound by every consideration that binds a gentleman to observe the pair. But, in my opinion, a pair is only made in contemplation of an equality of votes, and in a case where 1 vote can only be neutralized by 2, I do not believe a pair can fairly bind. Under that conviction I feel it my duty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I had an understanding with him before he left town that if any matter came up in which I was entitled to one other upon the other side, as equivalent for my pair, and I was not furnished with it, I should feel at liberty to vote. He agreed with me in that, and I therefore will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], but on a question like that of a veto, I am relieved from the operation of the pair, and I will accordingly vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I am not only relieved by my pair in a case of this character, but, as I understand the purpose of pairs, that of equalizing votes, in all cases requiring a two-thirds vote, I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when Mr. OWEN's name was called). I desire to announce for the day that the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I see that other Senators, in view of the peculiar conditions that exist now, of two for one, are breaking their pairs. Notwithstanding that fact, I do not feel like breaking my pair. I transfer it to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] and will vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I am embarrassed in determining what to do. I can not arrange a pair such as it seems should be arranged on a vote of this kind. I regard this as an exceedingly important question, and, in a large way, a party question. I feel constrained to observe my pair with the Senator from Wyoming. I do not feel at liberty to vote. If I did, I should vote "yea." But under the circumstances I shall withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], but, under the arrangement which I have with that Senator, either of us is at liberty to vote upon questions which require a two-thirds vote whenever that one votes in the negative. I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WETMORE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER] for this week, but as it does not extend to matters involving a two-thirds vote, I will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DU PONT. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] is absent from the city. If he were present and free to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BRANDEGEE (after having voted in the negative). I have been furnished the additional part of my pair, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] being offered me in addition to the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I therefore transfer both of those Senators as paired with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the absence from the city of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and that he is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I was unable to be present when this bill was under consideration by the Senate. Nor have I been able to give to the subject since that time such investigation as to enable me to arrive at any clear judgment as to the particular rates fixed in the bill. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. CLARK] is unavoidably absent and is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], as he has stated. If here my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GORE. I wish to state that I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON]. I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before announcing the result of the vote the Chair will take occasion to say that by an oversight the veto message was not read, which the Chair thinks always has been done heretofore, and the Chair, unless there be objection, will order that the veto message be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and in the Journal of the Senate, and the bill also.

The message of the President of the United States and the bill are as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return, with my objections, H. R. 18642, a bill entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved August 5, 1909."

This bill provides for a complete revision of Schedule C of the tariff law, relating to metals and manufactures of metals. In committee and in the consideration of the majority who passed the bill the important part of it seems to have been the basic manufactures of iron and steel, and most of the information which was obtained and discussed was in reference to that manufacture. The truth is that iron and steel as primary products are less than one-third in value of the subject matter covered by it; and that there may be no misunderstanding in regard to this, I present, as an appendix, a table prepared by the Census Bureau showing that included in Schedule C are 59 allied industries of sufficient importance to justify separate classification, study, and report by the Census Bureau, all of which are directly affected by the bill under consideration.

If only the primary products of iron and steel were affected by this bill, or if they constituted the larger part of the values involved in Schedule C, the consideration of the bill for purposes of approval or disapproval would be easier, but it is not within my power to separate these various industries. The bill is presented to me as a whole and must be approved or disapproved as a whole.

The table furnished showed that "foundry and machine-shop products," which are secondary products of the iron and steel industry, are made by more than 13,000 competing establishments, with an invested capital of more than a billion and a half dollars, with more than a half a million wage earners employed, and producing nearly a billion and a quarter dollars in value of products annually. Every dollar of this capital and every workman employed in the industry is directly affected by the bill, and I can not find, either in the report of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House or, to any extent, in the discussion of the schedule, that serious consideration has been given to the effect of this revision on this particular branch of the industry, and the same thing is true of more than two-thirds of the industries covered by the schedule.

It appears in the discussion of this revision now presented to me for consideration that no public hearings have been given by the Ways and Means Committee of the House, on the ground that it would thereby cause delay. The Ways and Means Committee avowed that the principle of protection had not been considered, but that in framing the present revision of the metal schedule the committee had "adopted the general principle of reducing all duties to a revenue basis, so far as practicable, except in those cases where more cogent consideration than those relating to the fiscal policy of the Government dictated the transfer of given items to the free list." This makes a clear-cut issue between the protective policy and that of a tariff for revenue only, and without fuller information, therefore, I am obliged to treat this bill as a revenue bill, and one in which the consideration of preserving the industry by maintaining a tariff necessary to do so had little weight. There is nothing to show me that the duties provided in the bill will equal the difference in the cost of production here and abroad in the great lines of industries, and that the wages of workmen will not be reduced by a measure which avowedly discards entirely the principle of fair protection. It should be noted that the labor employed in the secondary industries, which has had so little consideration in this bill, is in a large measure high-grade, skilled labor, commanding a high level of wages.

This schedule was included in the general tariff revision of 1909, at which time public hearings were given, attended by importers, domestic producers, employees, and consumers, and the rates then on many of its items were heavily cut, ranging from 10 to 75 per cent, and it would seem now that a thorough study of each one of these separate industries should at least be made, that the Executive and Congress as well might act wisely and intelligently upon them, in order to avoid a further revision at an early date when the facts concerning them could be ascertained.

The products of many of these industries affected by this bill do not enter directly into the daily consumption of the people. The consumers of these products are, to a large extent, manufacturers using these articles in further processes of production. There is no evidence of any widespread demand from such consumers for a revision of the rates on these articles, and for this reason a sufficient time may well be taken to give the study to the respective industries which their importance would seem to demand.

I am not prepared to say that there are no items in this schedule which might not well be reduced, but the general average ad valorem rate of duty under it, taken as a whole for the year 1911, is 32.03 per cent, as against 37.97 per cent in 1896 under the Wilson law, or an apparent reduction of 15.6 per cent of the Wilson duties. The Dingley rates for this schedule in 1909 were 38.09 per cent, showing a reduction in 1911 for the present law of 15.9 per cent of the Dingley rates. Indeed, there is no year since 1883 when the Government statistics show as low an ad valorem rate of duty for this schedule as is shown in 1911, and it does not appear that schedule statistics were kept prior to 1883, so that no comparison can be made prior to that time.

There is little logical relation between the reductions made by this bill in the schedule. For example, steam engines and machine tools in the present law are dutiable at 30 per cent. In this revision steam engines are reduced to 15 per cent, and the whole machine-tool industry is put on the free list, without any reason whatever being given in the report of the Ways and Means Committee in either case for such action.

The term "machine tools" has already been the subject of much litigation, and its scope should be clearly defined before the great variety of articles which it now seems to cover are placed on the free list.

The expansion of our foreign trade would seem to demand that a transfer to the free list, like the one made in this bill, of such an enormous range of undetermined products and the opening of the best market in the world to free and unrestricted competition should not be made without at the same time at least securing, as is the case now of specified agricultural implements, the privilege of a like free entry into the markets of our competitors.

It is further difficult to understand by what process of reasoning it is possible to justify a transfer to the free list of a great line of finished articles, while nearly every one of the crude products from which they are made are retained on the dutiable list.

A bill for a complete revision of this schedule was presented to me a year ago in the extra session of this Congress. Many increases and decreases of rates are now made from those named in the former measure. The changes are not explained and indicate the hasty method pursued in the preparation of both. Is it not fair to ask, either on the basis of protection or revenue, which was right?

On the whole, therefore, I am not willing to approve of legislation of this kind, which vitally affects not only millions of workingmen and the families dependent on them, but hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of stocks of goods in the hands of storekeepers and distributors generally, without first providing for a careful and disinterested inquiry into the conditions of the whole industry.

From the outset of my administration I have urged a revision of the tariff based on a nonpartisan study of the facts. I have provided the means for securing such information in the appointment of a Tariff Board. Their thorough work, already completed on several schedules, has justified my confidence in this method. The principle is indorsed by chambers of commerce and boards of trade in almost every city of importance in the country. The proposed bill has not been framed on the basis of any such study of the industry.

Avowedly its rates are fixed with no consideration of anything but revenue. The principle of protection is disregarded entirely, and, therefore, it is not too much to say that the effect of these sweeping changes on the welfare of those engaged in these varied industries has been disregarded.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 14, 1912.

An act (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the day following the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid the rates of duty which are prescribed in the paragraphs of this act upon the articles hereinafter enumerated, when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), and the said paragraphs and sections shall constitute and be a substitute for paragraphs 117 to 199, inclusive, of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

DUTIABLE LIST.

1. Iron in pigs, iron kentledge, spiegeleisen, wrought and cast scrap iron and scrap steel, 8 per cent ad valorem; but nothing shall be deemed scrap iron or scrap steel except second-hand or waste or refuse iron or steel fit only to be remanufactured; ferromanganese, chrome or chromium metal, ferrochrome or ferrochromium, ferromolybdenum, ferrophosphorus, ferrotitanium, ferrotungsten, ferrovanadium, molybdenum, titanium, tantalum, tungsten or wolfram metal, and ferrosilicon, 15 per cent ad valorem.

2. All iron in slabs, blooms, loops, or other forms less finished than iron in bars, and more advanced than pig iron, except castings; muck bars, bar iron, square iron, rolled or hammered, round iron, in coils or rods, bars or shapes of rolled or hammered iron not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 10 per cent ad valorem.

3. Beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, car-truck channels, T T columns and posts or parts or sections of columns and posts, deck and bulb beams, and building forms, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel, whether plain, punched, or fitted for use, or whether assembled or manufactured, 15 per cent ad valorem.

4. Boiler or other plate iron or steel, and strips of iron or steel, not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, sheets of iron or steel, common or black, of whatever dimensions, whether plain, corrugated or crimped, including crucible plate steel and saw plates, cut or sheared to shape or otherwise, or unsheared, and skelp iron or steel, whether sheared or rolled in grooves, or otherwise, 15 per cent ad valorem.

5. Iron or steel anchors or parts thereof; forgings of iron or steel or of combined iron and steel, but not machintd, tooled, or otherwise advanced in condition by any process or operation subsequent to the forging process, not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 15 per cent ad valorem; antifriction balls, ball bearings, and roller bearings, of iron or steel or other metal, finished or unfinished, 25 per cent ad valorem.

6. Hoop, band, or scroll iron or steel not otherwise provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 15 per cent ad valorem.

7. Railway bars, made of iron or steel, and railway bars made in part of steel, T rails and punched iron or steel flat rails, railway fish plates or spliced bars made of iron or steel, 10 per cent ad valorem.

8. All iron or steel sheets, plates, or strips, and all hoop, band, or scroll iron or steel, when galvanized or coated with zinc, spelter, or other metals, or any alloy of those metals; sheets or plates composed of iron, steel, copper, nickel, or other metal with layers of other metal or metals imposed thereon by forging, hammering, rolling, or welding; sheets of iron or steel, polished, planished, or glanced, by whatever name designated, including such as have been pickled or cleaned by acid, or by any other material or process, or which are cold rolled, smoothed only, not polished, and such as are cold hammered, blued, brightened, tempered, or polished by any process to such perfected surface finish or polished better than the grade of cold rolled, smoothed only; and sheets or plates of iron or steel, or taggers iron or steel, coated with tin or lead, or with a mixture of which these metals, or either of them, is a component part, by the dipping or any other process, and commercially known as tin plates, terne plates, and taggers tin, 20 per cent ad valorem.

9. Steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, and slabs, by whatever process made; die blocks or blanks; billets and bars and tapered or beveled bars; mill shafting; pressed, sheared, or stamped shapes, not advanced in value or condition by any process or operation subsequent to the process of stamping; hammer molds or swaged steel; gun-barrel molds not in bars; alloys used as substitutes for steel in the manufacture of tools; all descriptions and shapes of dry sand, loam, or iron-molded steel castings; sheets and plates and steel not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 10 per cent ad valorem.

10. Steel wool or steel shavings, 20 per cent ad valorem.

11. Grit, shot, and sand made of iron or steel, that can be used as abrasives, 20 per cent ad valorem.

12. Rivet, screw, fence, and other iron or steel wire rods, whether round, oval, flat, or square, or in any other shape, and nail rods, all the foregoing in coils or otherwise, including wire rods and iron or steel bars, cold rolled, cold drawn, cold hammered, or polished in any way in addition to the ordinary process of hot rolling or hammering, 10 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That all round iron or steel rods smaller than No. 6 wire gauge shall be classed and dutiable as wire.

13. Round iron or steel wire, all wire composed of iron, steel, or other metal except gold or silver, covered with cotton, silk, or other material, corset clasps, corset steels, dress steels, and all flat wires, and steel in strips, not thicker than No. 15 wire gauge and not exceeding 5 inches in width, whether in long or short lengths, in coils or otherwise, and whether rolled or drawn through dies or rolls, or otherwise produced, and all other wire not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment; iron and steel wire coated by dipping, galvanizing, or similar process with zinc, tin, or other metal, 20 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That articles manufactured wholly or in chief value of any wire or wires provided for in this paragraph shall pay the rate of duty imposed in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment upon any wire used in the manufacture of such articles: And provided further, That no article made from or composed of wire shall pay a less rate of duty than 20 per cent ad valorem: And provided further, That barbed and all other fence wire and wire fencing and baling wire shall be exempt from duty; telegraph, telephone, and other wires and cables composed of metal and rubber, or of metal, rubber, and other materials, 20 per cent ad valorem; wire heddles or healds, 25 per cent ad valorem.

14. No article not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment which is wholly or partly manufactured from tin plate, terne plate, or the sheet, plate, hoop, band, or scroll iron or steel herein provided for, or of which such tin plate, terne plate, sheet, plate, hoop, band, or scroll iron or steel shall be the material of chief value, shall pay a lower rate of duty than that imposed on the tin plate, terne plate, or sheet, plate, hoop, band, or scroll iron or steel from which it is made, or of which it shall be the component thereof of chief value.

15. No allowance or reduction of duties for partial loss or damage in consequence of rust or of discoloration shall be made upon any description of iron or steel, or upon any article wholly or partly manufactered of iron or steel, or upon any manufacture of iron or steel.

16. All metal produced from iron or its ores, which is cast and malleable, of whatever description or form, without regard to the percentage of carbon contained therein, whether produced by cementation, or converted, cast, or made from iron or its ores, by the crucible, Bessemer, Clapp-Griffith, pneumatic, Thomas-Gilchrist, basic, Siemens-Martin, or open-hearth process, or by the equivalent of either, or by a combination of two or more of the processes, or their equivalents, or by any fusion or other process which produces from iron or its ores a metal either granular or fibrous in structure, which is cast and malleable, excepting what is known as malleable-iron castings, shall be classed and denominated as steel.

17. Anvils of iron or steel, or of iron and steel combined, by whatever process made, or in whatever stage of manufacture, 15 per cent ad valorem.

18. Automobiles, bicycles, and motorcycles, and finished parts of any of the foregoing, not including tires, 40 per cent ad valorem.

19. Axles, or parts thereof, axle bars, axle blanks, or forgings for axles, whether of iron or steel, without reference to the stage or state of manufacture, not otherwise provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 10 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That when iron or steel axles are imported fitted in wheels, or parts of wheels, of iron or steel, they shall be dutiable at the same rate as the wheels in which they are fitted.

20. Blacksmiths' hammers, tongs, and sledges, track tools, wedges, and crowbars, whether of iron or steel, 10 per cent ad valorem.

21. Bolts, with or without threads or nuts, or bolt blanks, finished hinges or hinge blanks, and spiral nut locks and washers, whether of iron or steel, 15 per cent ad valorem.

22. Card clothing not actually and permanently fitted to and attached to carding machines or to parts thereof at the time of importation, when manufactured with round iron or round steel wire, tempered or untempered and including that manufactured with plated wire or other than iron or steel wire, or with felt face, wool face, or rubber face cloth containing wool, 30 per cent ad valorem.

23. Cast-iron pipe of every description, cast-iron andirons, plates, stove plates, sadirons, tailor's irons, hatter's irons, and castings and vessels wholly of cast iron, including all castings of iron or cast-iron plates which have been chiseled, drilled, machined, or otherwise advanced in condition by processes or operations subsequent to the casting process but not made up into articles; castings of malleable iron not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment; cast hollow ware, coated, glazed, or tinned, 10 per cent ad valorem.

24. Chain or chains of all kinds, made of iron or steel, 20 per cent ad valorem.

25. Lap-welded, butt-welded, seamed, or jointed iron or steel tubes, pipes, flues, or stays, cylindrical or tubular tanks or vessels, for holding gas, liquids, or other material, whether full or empty, flexible metal tubing or hose, not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, whether covered with wire or other material, or otherwise, including any appliances or attachments affixed thereto, welded cylindrical furnaces, tubes or flues made from plate metal, and corrugated, ribbed, or otherwise reenforced against collapsing pressure, and all other iron or steel tubes, finished, not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 20 per cent ad valorem.

26. Penknives, pocketknives, clasp knives, pruning knives, budding knives, erasers, manicure knives, and all knives by whatever name known, including such as are denominatively mentioned in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, which have folding or other than fixed blades or attachments, and razors, all the foregoing, whether assembled but not fully finished or finished, 35 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That blades, handles, or other parts of any of the foregoing knives, razors, or erasers shall be dutiable at not less than the rate herein imposed upon knives, razors, and erasers. Scissors and shears, and blades for the same, finished or unfinished, 30 per cent ad valorem: Provided further, That all articles specified in this paragraph shall, when imported, have the name of the maker or purchaser and beneath the same the name of the country of origin die-sunk conspicuously and indelibly on the shank or tang of at least one or, if practicable, each and every blade thereof.

27. Sword blades, and swords and side arms, irrespective of quality or use, in part of metal, 30 per cent ad valorem.

28. Table, butchers', carving, cooks', hunting, kitchen, bread, butter, vegetable, fruit, cheese, carpenters' bench, curriers', drawing, farriers', fleshing, hay, tanners', plumbers', painters', palette, artists', and shoe knives, forks and steels, finished or unfinished, with or without handles, 25 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That all the articles specified in this paragraph, when imported, shall have the name of the maker or purchaser, and beneath the same the name of the country of origin indelibly stamped or branded thereon in a place that shall not be covered thereafter.

29. Files, file blanks, rasps, and floats, of all cuts and kinds, 25 per cent ad valorem.

30. Muskets, muzzle-loading shotguns and rifles, and parts thereof, 15 per cent ad valorem.

31. Breech-loading shotguns and rifles, combination shotguns and rifles, and parts thereof and fittings therefor, including barrels further advanced than rough bored only; pistols, whether automatic, magazine, or revolving, or parts thereof and fittings therefor, 35 per cent ad valorem.

32. Table, kitchen, and hospital utensils, or other similar hollow ware, of iron or steel, enameled or glazed with vitreous glasses, but not ornamented or decorated with lithographic or other printing, 25 per cent ad valorem.

33. Needles for knitting or sewing machines, latch needles, crochet needles, and tape needles, knitting and all other needles not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, and bodkins of metal, 25 per cent ad valorem; but no articles other than the needles which are specifically named in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment shall be dutiable as needles unless having an eye, and fitted and used for carrying a thread. Needle cases or needle books furnished with assortments of needles or combinations of needles and other articles shall pay duty as entireties according to the component material of chief value therein.

34. Fishhooks, 10 per cent ad valorem; fishing rods and reels, artificial flies, artificial baits, snelled hooks, and all other fishing tackle or parts thereof, not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, except fishing lines, fishing nets and seines, 30 per cent ad valorem.

35. Steel plates engraved, stereotype plates, electrotype plates, and plates of other materials, engraved for printing, plates of iron or steel engraved or fashioned for use in the production of designs, patterns, or impressions on glass in the process of manufacturing plate or other glass, 15 per cent ad valorem; lithographic plates of stone or other material engraved, drawn, or prepared, and wet transfer paper or paper prepared wholly with glycerin, or glycerin combined with other materials, containing the imprints taken from lithographic plates, 25 per cent ad valorem.

36. Rivets, studs, and steel points, lathed, machined, or brightened, and rivets or studs for nonskidding automobile tires, and rivets of iron or steel, not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 20 per cent ad valorem.

37. Crosscut saws, mill saws, pit and drag saws, circular saws, steel band saws, finished or further advanced than tempered and polished, hand, back, and all other saws, not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 12 per cent ad valorem.

38. Screws, commonly called wood screws, made of iron or steel, 25 per cent ad valorem.

39. Umbrella and parasol ribs and stretchers, composed in chief value of iron, steel, or other metal, in frames or otherwise, and tubes for umbrellas, wholly or partially finished, 30 per cent ad valorem.

40. Wheels for railway purposes, or parts thereof, made of iron or steel, and steel-tired wheels for railway purposes, whether wholly or partly finished, and iron or steel locomotive, car, or other railway tires or parts thereof, wholly or partly manufactured, 25 per cent ad valorem; ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, or blanks for the same, without regard to the degree of manufacture, 10 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That when wheels for railway purposes, or parts thereof, of iron or steel, are imported with iron or steel axles fitted in them, the wheels and axles together shall be dutiable at the same rate as is provided for the wheels when imported separately.

41. Aluminum, aluminum scrap, and alloys of any kind in which aluminum is the component material of chief value, in crude form, aluminum in plates, sheets, bars, and rods; barium, calcium, magnesium, sodium, and potassium, and alloys of which said metals are the component material of chief value, 25 per cent ad valorem.

42. Antimony, as regulus or metal, antimony ore, stibnite and matte containing antimony but not containing more than 10 per cent of lead, 10 per cent ad valorem on the antimony contents therein contained: Provided, That on all importations of antimony-bearing ores and matte containing antimony the duties shall be estimated at the port of entry, and a bond given in double the amount of such estimated duties for the transportation of the ores by common carriers bonded for the transportation of appraised or unappraised merchandise to properly equipped sampling or smelting establishments, whether designated as bonded warehouses or otherwise. On the arrival of the ores at such establishments, they shall be sampled according to commercial methods under the supervision of Government officers, who shall be stationed at such establishments, and who shall submit the samples thus obtained to a Government assayer, designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall make a proper assay of the sample and report the result to the proper customs officers, and the import entry shall be liquidated thereon, except in case of ores that shall be removed to a bonded warehouse to be refined for exportation as provided by law, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make all necessary regulations to enforce the provisions of this paragraph; antimony, oxide of, 25 per cent ad valorem.

43. Argentine, albata, or German silver, unmanufactured, 15 per cent ad valorem.

44. Bauxite, or beauxite, crude, not refined or otherwise advanced in condition from its natural state, 10 per cent ad valorem.

45. Bronze powder, brocades, flitters, and metallics; bronze, or Dutch-metal or aluminum, in leaf, 25 per cent ad valorem.

46. Copper, in rolled plates, called braziers' copper, sheets, rods, pipes, and copper bottoms, sheathing or yellow metal of which copper is the component material of chief value, and not composed wholly or in part of iron ungalvanized, five per cent ad valorem.

47. Gold leaf, 35 per cent ad valorem.

48. Silver leaf, 30 per cent ad valorem.

49. Tinsel wire, lame or lahn, made wholly or in chief value of gold, silver, or other metal, 10 per cent ad valorem; bullions and metal threads, made wholly or in chief value of tinsel wire, lame or lahn, 30 per cent ad valorem; fabrics, laces, embroideries, braids, galloons, trimmings, ribbons, beltings, ornaments, toys, or other articles, made wholly or in chief value of tinsel wire, lame or lahn, bullions, or metal threads, 40 per cent ad valorem.

50. Hooks and eyes, metallic, whether loose, carded, or otherwise, 15 per cent ad valorem.

51. Lead-bearing ore of all kinds, and lead dross, 25 per cent ad valorem upon the lead contained therein: Provided, That on all importations of lead-bearing ores the duties shall be estimated at the port of entry, and a bond given in double the amount of such estimated duties for the transportation of the ores by common carriers bonded for the transportation of appraised or unappraised merchandise to properly equipped sampling or smelting establishments, whether designated as bonded warehouses or otherwise. On the arrival of the ores at such establishments they shall be sampled according to commercial methods under the supervision of Government officers, who shall be stationed at such establishments, and who shall submit the samples thus obtained to a Government assayer, designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall make a proper assay of the sample and report the result to the proper customs officers, and the import entries shall be liquidated thereon, except in case of ores that shall be removed to a bonded warehouse to be refined for exportation as provided by law, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make all necessary regulations to enforce the provisions of this paragraph.

52. Lead bullion or base bullion, lead in pigs and bars, lead in any form not specially provided for in this section, old refuse lead run into blocks and bars, and old scrap lead fit only to be remanufactured; lead in sheets, pipe, shot, glaziers' lead, and lead wire; all the foregoing, 25 per cent ad valorem.

53. Metallic mineral substances in a crude state and metals unwrought, whether capable of being wrought or not, not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 10 per cent ad valorem; monazite sand and thorite; thorium, oxide of and salts of; gas mantles treated with chemicals or metallic oxides; and gas-mantle scrap consisting in chief value of metallic oxides, 25 per cent ad valorem.

54. Nickel, nickel oxide, alloy of any kind in which nickel is a component material of chief value, in pigs, ingots, bars, rods, or plates, 10 per cent ad valorem; sheets or strips, 20 per cent ad valorem.

55. Pens, metallic, 25 per cent ad valorem.

56. Penholder tips, penholders and parts thereof, gold pens, fountain pens, and stylographic pens; combination penholders, comprising penholder, pencil, rubber eraser, automatic stamp, or other attachment, 25 per cent ad valorem.

57. Pins with solid heads, without ornamentation, including hair, safety, hat, bonnet, and shawl pins; any of the foregoing composed wholly of brass, copper, iron, steel, or other base metal, not plated with gold or silver, and not commonly known as jewelry, 20 per cent ad valorem.

58. Quicksilver, 10 per cent ad valorem. The flasks, bottles, or other vessels in which quicksilver is imported shall be subject to the same rate of duty as they would be subjected to if imported empty.

59. Type metal, on the lead contained therein, and new types, 15 per cent ad valorem.

60. Watch movements, including time detectors, whether imported in cases or not, watch cases and parts of watches, chronometers, box or ship, and parts thereof, lever clock movements having jewels in the escapement, and clocks containing such movements, all other clocks and parts thereof, not otherwise provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, whether separately packed or otherwise, not composed wholly or in chief value of china, porcelain, parian, bisque, or earthenware, 30 per cent ad valorem; all jewels for use in the manufacture of watches or clocks, 10 per cent ad valorem; enameled dials for watches or other instruments, 35 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That all watch and clock dials, whether attached to movements or not, shall have indelibly painted or printed thereon the country of origin, and that all watch movements, lever clock movements with jewels in the escapement, whether imported assembled or knocked down for reassembling, and cases of foreign manufacture, shall have the name of the manufacturer and country of manufacture cut, engraved, or die sunk conspicuously and indelibly on the plate of the movement and the inside of the case, respectively, and the movements shall also have marked thereon by one of the methods indicated the number of jewels and adjustments, said number to be expressed either in words or in Arabic numerals; and none of the aforesaid articles shall be delivered to the importer unless marked in exact conformity to this direction.

61. Zinc in blocks or pigs and zinc dust; in sheets, and old and worn-out zinc fit only to be remanufactured, 15 per cent ad valorem.

62. Cans, boxes, packages, and other containers of all kinds, except such as are hermetically sealed by soldering or otherwise, composed wholly or in chief value of metal lacquered or printed by any process of lithography whatever, if filled or unfilled, and whether their contents be dutiable or free, 30 per cent ad valorem; but no cans, boxes, packages, or containers of any kind of the capacity of 5 pounds or under subject to duty under this paragraph shall pay less duty than if the same were imported empty; and the dutiable value of the same shall include all packing charges, cartons, wrappings, envelopes, and printed matter accompanying them when such cans, boxes, packages, or containers are imported wholly or partly filled with merchandise exempt from duty, except liquids and merchandise commercially known as drugs, and which is commonly dealt in at wholesale in the country of original exportation in bulk or in packages exceeding 5 pounds in capacity: Provided, That paper, cardboard, or pasteboard wrappings or containers that are made and used only for the purpose of holding or containing the article with which they are filled, and after such use are mere waste material, shall not be dutiable unless their contents are dutiable.

63. Bottle caps of metal, whether plain or colored, waxed, lacquered, enameled, lithographed, or embossed in color, 30 per cent ad valorem.

64. All steam engines, 15 per cent ad valorem; embroidering machines and lace-making machines, including machines for making lace curtains, nets, or nettings, 25 per cent ad valorem.

65. Nippers and pliers of all kinds wholly or partly manufactured, 30 per cent ad valorem.

66. Articles or wares not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, composed wholly or in part of iron, steel, lead, copper, nickel, pewter, zinc, gold, silver, platinum, aluminum, or other metal, and whether partly or wholly manufactured, 25 per cent ad valorem.

FREE LIST.

That on and after the day following the passage of this act the articles mentioned in the following paragraphs shall when imported into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila) be exempt from duty:

67. Iron ore, including manganiferous iron ore, and the dross or residuum from burnt pyrites.

68. Hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to lengths, or wholly or partly manufactured into hoops or ties, coated or not coated with paint or any other preparation, with or without buckles or fastenings, for baling cotton or any other commodity.

69. Barbed and all other fence wire and wire fencing and baling wire.

70. Cut nails and cut spikes of iron or steel, horseshoe nails, hobnails, and all other wrought-iron or steel nails not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, wire staples, wire nails made of wrought iron or steel, spikes, nuts, and washers, and horse, mule, or ox shoes, of wrought iron or steel, and cut tacks, brads, or sprigs.

71. Tungsten-bearing ores of all kinds.

72. Zinc-bearing ore of all kinds, including calamine.

73. Cash registers, linotype and all typesetting machines, machine tools, printing presses, sewing machines, typewriters, and tar and oil spreading machines used in the construction and maintenance of roads and in improving them by the use of road preservatives, all the foregoing whether imported in whole or in parts, including repair parts.

SEC. 2. That on and after the day following the passage of this act all goods, wares, and merchandise previously imported and hereinbefore enumerated, described, and provided for, for which no entry has been made, and all such goods, wares, and merchandise previously entered without payment of duty and under bond for warehousing, transportation, or any other purpose, for which no permit of delivery to the importer or his agent has been issued, shall be subjected to no other duty upon the entry or withdrawal thereof than the duty which would be imposed if such goods, wares, or merchandise were imported on or after that date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Less than two-thirds of the Senate having voted in the affirmative the bill fails to pass.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. BRISTOW. I send to the desk a concurrent resolution, which I ask to have given immediate consideration. It relates to the Panama Canal. On page 19, after the word "elsewhere," in line 7, I ask to have inserted by this concurrent resolution the following language: "With which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic."

Some question has arisen as to whether it relates back to the former clause, and there is no question as to what was the intention of the framers of the bill; and in order to make that clear, I ask that the concurrent resolution be passed.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 28) was read and considered by unanimous consent, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representative concurring), That the Committee on Enrolled bills of the two Houses be authorized to correct the enrolled bill of the House (H. R. 21969) entitled "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," by inserting in section 11, after the words "or elsewhere," where they occur the second time, the words "with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, who offered the resolution?

Mr. BRISTOW. I offered it. I offered it after consultation with the chairman of the committee in the House. It is simply to clear up what might be a misinterpretation of what the word "elsewhere" means. It means simply on this competing route.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives, which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
August 12, 1912.

The President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill (H. R. 22195) entitled "An act to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool," with his objection thereto, the House of Representatives proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the same; and

Resolved, That the said bill do pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same. The objection thereto of the President is herewith transmitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the message of the President.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

On December 20, 1911, I sent a message to the Congress recommending a prompt revision of the tariff on wool and woolens. I urged a reduction of duties which should remove all the excesses and inequalities of the schedule, but should leave a degree of protection adequate to maintain the continued employment of machinery and labor already established in that great industry. With that message I transmitted a report of the Tariff Board, which furnished for the first time the information needed to frame a revision bill of this character, and recommended that legislation should be at once undertaken in the light of this information.

Despite the efforts which have been made to discredit the work of the Tariff Board, their report on this schedule has been accepted, with scarcely a dissenting voice, by all those familiar with the problems discussed, including active representatives of organizations formed in the interest of the public and the consumer. Importers and merchants, as well as producers and manufacturers, have testified to the accuracy and impartiality of these findings of fact. For the first time in the history of American tariffs the opportunity has been afforded of securing a revision based on established facts, independent both of the ex parte statements of interested persons and the guesswork of political theorists.

My position has been made perfectly plain. I shall stand by my pledges to maintain a degree of protection necessary to offset the difference in cost of production here and abroad, and will heartily approve of any bill reducing duties to this level. Bills have been introduced into Congress, carefully framed and based on the findings of the Tariff Board, which, while maintaining the principle of protection, have provided for sweeping reductions. Such a bill was presented by the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee, which, while providing protection to the woolgrower, reduces the duty on most wools 20 per cent, and the duties on manufactures by from 20 to more than 50 per cent, and gives in many instances less net protection to the manufacturer than was granted by the Gorman-Wilson free-wool act of 1894.

Instead of such a measure of thorough and genuine revision, based on full information of the facts, and with rates properly adjusted to all the different stages of the industry, there is now presented for my approval H. R. 22195, "An act to reduce the duties on wool and the manufactures of wool," a bill identical with the one which I vetoed in August, 1911, before the report of the Tariff Board had been made. The Tariff Board's report fully and completely justifies my veto of that date. The amount of ad valorem duty necessary to offset the difference in the cost of production of raw wool here and abroad varies with every grade of wool. Consequently, an ad valorem rate of duty adjusted to meet the difference in the cost of production of high-priced wools is not protective to low-priced wools. In any case, the report of the Tariff Board shows that the ad valorem duty of 29 per cent on raw wool, imposed in the bill now submitted to me, is inadequate to meet this difference in cost in the case of four-fifths of our total wool clip. The disastrous effect upon the business of our farmers engaged in wool raising can not be more clearly stated. To maintain the status quo in the woolgrowing industry, the minimum ad valorem rate necessary, even for high-grade wool in years of high prices, would be 35 per cent.

The rate provided in this bill on cloths of all kinds is 49 per cent. The amount of net protection given by this rate, in addition to proper compensation for the duty on wool, depends on the ratio between the cost of the raw material and the cost of making the cloth. The cost of the raw material in woolen and worsted fabrics varies in general from 50 per cent to 70 per cent of the total value of the fabric. Consequently, the net protective duty, with wool at 29 per cent, would vary from 28.7 per cent to 34.5 per cent. In the great majority of cases these rates are inadequate to equalize the difference in the cost of manufacture here and abroad. This is especially true of the finest goods involving a high proportion of labor cost. One of the striking developments of the last few years has been the growth in this country of a fine-goods industry. The rates provided in this bill, inadequate as they are for most of the cloths produced in this country, would make the continuance here of the manufacture of fine goods an impossibility.

Even more dangerous in their effects are the rates proposed on tops and yarns. Tops are the result of the first stage in the making of raw wool into cloth. Yarn is the result of the second stage. Taken in connection with a rate of 29 per cent on wool and 49 per cent on cloths, the rates of 32 per cent on tops and 35 per cent on yarn, fixed in this bill, seem impossible of justification. They would disrupt, and to no purpose, the existing adjustment, within the industry, of all its different branches. It is improbable in the highest degree that raw wool would be imported in great quantities when the cloth maker can import his tops at a duty of 32 per cent and yarns at a duty of 35 per cent. The report of the Tariff Board shows the difference in relative costs to be uniformly greater than the amount of protection on yarns given by this bill. In a year of low prices, the net protection granted by the proposed rates would not be more than half the difference in costs. The free-wool act of 1894 gave a protective rate of 40 per cent on all yarns over 40 cents a pound in value, with free raw material. The present bill gives only 35 per cent on such yarns, with a duty of 29 per cent on the raw material.

The great increase in the imports of tops and yarns which would result from the rates in the bill now submitted to me would destroy the effect of the protection to raw wool and at the same time would be at the cost of widespread disaster to the wool combing and spinning branches of the industry. The last 15 years has witnessed a great growth of top making and worsted spinning in this country, and the capacity of the plants is now equal to domestic requirements. Under the rates proposed such plants could be continued, if at all, only by writing off most of the investment as a net loss and by a reduction of wages. To sum up, then, most of the rates in the submitted bill are so low in themselves that if enacted into law the inevitable result would be the irretrievable injury to the woolgrowing industry, the enforced idleness of much of our wool combing and spinning machinery, and of thousands of looms, and the consequent throwing out of employment of thousands of workmen.

In view of these facts, in view of the platform upon which I was elected, in view of my promise to follow and maintain the protective policy, no course is open to me but to withhold my approval from this bill. I am very much disappointed that such a bill is a second time presented to me. I have inferred from the speeches made in both the House and the Senate that the Members of the majority in both Houses are deeply impressed with the necessity of reducing the tariff under the present act on wool and woolens; that they do not propose to stand on the question of the amount of reduction or to insist that it must be enough necessarily to satisfy the principle of tariff for revenue only, but that they are willing to accept a substantial reduction in the present rates in order that the people might be relieved from the possibility of oppressive prices due to excessive rates. I strongly desire to reduce duties, provided only the protection system be maintained, and that industries now established be not destroyed. It now appears from the Tariff Board's report, and from bills which have been introduced into the House and the Senate, that a bill may be drawn so as to be within the requirements of protection and still offer a reduction of 20 per cent on most wool and of from 20 per cent to 50 per cent on cloths. I can not act upon the assumption that the controlling majority in either House will refuse to pass a bill of this kind, if in fact it accomplishes so substantial a reduction, merely because members of the opposing party and the Executive unite in its approval. I therefore urge upon Congress that it do not adjourn without taking advantage of the plain opportunity thus substantially to reduce unnecessary existing duties. I appeal to Congress to reconsider the measure, which I now return, without my approval, and to adopt a substitute therefor making substantial reductions below the rates of the present act, which the Tariff Board shows possible, without destroying any established industry or throwing any wage earners out of employment, and which I will promptly approve.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 9, 1912.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be printed in the RECORD without being read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It will be printed in the RECORD and the Journal.

The bill is as follows:

An act (H. R. 22195) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool.

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the 1st day of January, 1913, the articles hereinafter enumerated, described, and provided for shall, when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), be subjected to the duties hereinafter provided, and no others; that is to say:

1. On wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and on all wools and hair on the skin of such animals, the duty shall be 20 per cent ad valorem.

2. On all noils, top waste, card waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, yarn waste, bur waste, thread waste, garnetted waste, shoddies, mungo, flocks, wool extract, carbonized wool, carbonized noils, and on all other wastes, and on rags composed wholly or in part of wool, and not specially provided for in this act, the duty shall be 20 per cent ad valorem.

3. On combed wool or tops and roving or roping, made wholly or in part of wool or camel's hair, and on other wool and hair which have been advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, not specially provided for in this act, the duty shall be 25 per cent ad valorem.

4. On yarns made wholly or in part of wool the duty shall be 30 per cent ad valorem.

5. On cloths, knit fabrics, felts not woven, and all manufactures of every description made, by any process, wholly or in part of wool, not specially provided for in this act, the duty shall be 40 per cent ad valorem.

6. On blankets and flannels composed wholly or in part of wool the duty shall be 30 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That on flannels composed wholly or in part of wool, valued at above 50 cents per pound, the duty shall be 45 per cent ad valorem.

7. On women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths, bunting, and goods of similar description and character, composed wholly or in part of wool, and not specially provided for in this act, the duty shall be 45 per cent ad valorem.

8. On clothing, ready-made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, including shawls whether knitted or woven, and knitted articles of every description made up or manufactured wholly or in part, and not specially provided for in this act, composed wholly or in part of wool, the duty shall be 45 per cent ad valorem.

9. On webbings, gorings, suspenders, braces, bandings, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, edgings, insertings, flouncings, fringes, gimps, cords, cords and tassels, ribbons, ornaments, laces, trimmings, and articles made wholly or in part of lace, embroideries and all articles embroidered by hand or machinery, head nets, nettings, buttons or barrel buttons or buttons of other forms for tassels or ornaments, and manufactures of wool ornamented with beads or spangles of whatever material composed, on any of the foregoing made of wool or of which wool is a component material, whether containing india rubber or not, the duty shall be 35 per cent ad valorem.

10. On Aubusson, Axminster, moquette, and chenille carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, the duty shall be 40 per cent ad valorem.

11. On Saxony, Wilton, and Tournay velvet carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, the duty shall be 35 per cent ad valorem.

12. On Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, the duty shall be 30 per cent ad valorem.

13. On velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, figured or plain, printed on the warp or otherwise, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, the duty shall be 35 per cent ad valorem.

14. On tapestry Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, printed on the warp or otherwise, the duty shall be 30 per cent ad valorem.

15. On treble ingrain, three-ply, and all-chain Venetian carpets, the duty shall be 30 per cent ad valorem.

16. On wool Dutch and two-ply ingrain carpets, the duty shall be 25 per cent ad valorem.

17. On carpets of every description, woven whole for rooms, and Oriental, Berlin, Aubusson, Axminster, and similar rugs, the duty shall be 50 per cent ad valorem.

18. On druggets and bockings, printed, colored, or otherwise, the duty shall be 25 per cent ad valorem.

19. On carpets and carpeting of wool, flax, or cotton, or composed in part of any of them, not specially provided for in this act, and on mats, matting, and rugs of cotton, the duty shall be 25 per cent ad valorem.

20. Mats, rugs for floors, screens, covers, hassocks, bed sides, art squares, and other portions of carpets or carpeting, made wholly or in part of wool, and not specially provided for in this act, shall be subjected to the rate of duty herein imposed on carpets or carpeting of like character or description.

21. Whenever in this act the word "wool" is used in connection with a manufactured article of which it is a component material, it shall be held to include wool or hair of the sheep, camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animals, whether manufactured by the woolen, worsted, felt, or any other process.

SEC. 2. That on and after the day when this act shall go into effect all goods, wares, and merchandise previously imported, and hereinbefore enumerated, described, and provided for, for which no entry has been made, and all such goods, wares, and merchandise previously entered without payment of duty and under bond for warehousing, transportation, or any other purpose, for which no permit of delivery to the importer or his agent has been issued, shall be subjected to the duties imposed by this act and no other duty, upon the entry or the withdrawal thereof.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed. This act shall take effect and be in force on and after the 1st day of January, 1913.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, before discussing the President's veto, I digress to make a brief comment suggested by recent political events.

What is known as the progressive movement in this country originated in a number of the progressive Republican States of the North. During the last dozen or 15 years, while special interests have been increasing their hold upon the administrative side of Government in Washington, Progressive Republicans in many staunch Republican States have wrested the control of Government from these interests. In Wisconsin and Iowa and Washington, in Nebraska and Kansas, in Oregon, in California, in North and South Dakota, and in a number of other States there was builded up under Republican leadership and through Republican legislation what will be known in political history as the progressive movement in American politics.

It had, it is true, manifested itself here and there in Democratic States, and we have a body of men on the other side of this aisle who are Progressives and for whom I have the greatest respect; but, I repeat, history will record that the progressive movement developed within and had an identity with the Republican Party except in two States—Missouri and New Jersey.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Arkansas.

Mr. ASHURST. And in Arizona.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, Arkansas and Arizona have very recently made some advance in progressive statutes and constitutional provisions. Seven years ago, when I came to the Senate, I stood alone. But this movement to restore government to the people made wider and wider appeal and grew to have an influence and power sufficient to nationalize itself in legislation. It finally came to be represented by a group of Senators on this side of the Chamber who refused to be bound by party caucus action, and whose sole test of every question was: Is it in the public interest or is it against the public interest?

It was a splendid fighting force that held the balance of power in the Senate on legislation. That was the condition when something happened at Chicago a little while ago. And now it is proposed to divert, to destroy, that movement which gave every promise for the complete redemption of government.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will pardon me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With very great pleasure.

Mr. STONE. I was very much interested in what the Senator was saying, and my attention was attracted to a remark made by the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We can not hear what the Senator from Missouri is saying.

Mr. STONE. I did not quite understand one part of his remarks, and I thought he might feel disposed to make the statement clearer. He referred to the action at Chicago as intended to divert the progressive movement from the ends to which the Senator and his colleagues have been laboring. Did the Senator have reference to the convention which renominated President Taft or the one that nominated ex-President Roosevelt?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am exceedingly sorry that I left the Senator from Missouri in doubt. I hope I did not leave anyone else in doubt.

Mr. President, the conditions that the people complain of in this country have grown up mainly in the last dozen or fifteen years. The era of concentration and the upbuilding of the trusts and combinations began shortly after the enactment of the Dingley law of 1897.

On the day that Theodore Roosevelt was made President there were 149 trusts and combinations in the United States. When he turned this Government over to William H. Taft as President there were 10,020 great plants of this country organized in combinations. On the day Roosevelt became President the aggregate capitalization of these combinations was $3,784,000,000; on the day that he turned the administration over to his successor it was $31,672,000,000, more than 70 per cent of which was water.

Its power has gone on growing and spreading, the numbers multiplying. There has been no diminution of it under the present administration. The present administration has sought to apply the Sherman antitrust law more rigorously than any other administration that has preceded it. But, Mr. President, the time to have applied the Sherman antitrust law effectively was when the trusts were in their infancy, when there were only 149 of them, scattered here and there over the country; when they stood as individuals and before they had had their interlocking directorates; before they had fused and consolidated in one mass.

Now, Mr. President, I do not believe that the American people are going to find any measure of relief from the conditions which now menace by again placing in supreme command the man who was President during the very period when the trusts and combinations which dominate business and government were permitted to attain their greatest growth. I do not believe that the man who failed to enforce the Sherman law when it could have been most potential in destroying trust organization is the man to find the way out now. Does that answer the Senator?

Mr. STONE. That does fairly well. [Laughter.]

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That does fairly well, does it? [Laughter.]

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator stated that there were 10,020 great plants consolidated into trust organizations when the administration was turned over to President Taft. Has the Senator any statistics to show how many of those were good trusts and how many were bad trusts?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No, Mr. President; I have no way to differentiate, because none of the trusts is my friend. [Laughter.] If any of them were friends of mine, if any of them were supporting by big contributions my propaganda in this country, I could find an illustrious example for calling them good trusts. But I have no good trust angels—no Perkins, no Munsey, no Hanna. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the Republican progressive movement is the one vital thing in the political development of the last quarter of a century. It promised to redeem the party of Abraham Lincoln and restore government to the people.

Into this steadily advancing movement for political progress, Theodore Roosevelt thrust his ambition to be elected President for a third term. He proclaimed himself a progressive. Yet he had for years berated progressive leaders as "disturbers" and "demagogues" and "dangerous persons."

While strong Progressive Republicans were struggling in a dozen States to wrest the control of government from corporate power in combination, the influence of President Roosevelt's administration was invariably arrayed against them. His Federal appointees were the lobby agents of special privilege.

It is a fact in political history that progressive success in every Republican State was secured despite the powerful opposition of the Roosevelt administration during the seven years that he was President.

While Roosevelt was President every progressive Republican Senator and every progressive Member of the House of Representatives, as a candidate to succeed a standpatter, fought his way to a seat in the American Congress against the active influence of the President put forth to retain the reactionary in the public service, sometimes by verbal message, sometimes by open letter.

Every Progressive Republican Senator or Representative knows that he battled for progressive legislation, unsupported by President Roosevelt.

And, again, the little group of progressive Republicans in the Senate and House knows that it was not until long after Roosevelt returned from Africa, long after he had been beaten to a standstill in New York two short years ago, supporting a standpat ticket on a stand-pat platform, lauding, to quote the platform, "the progressive and statesmanlike leadership of William Howard Taft and his unfaltering and unswerving adherence to duty"—indeed, that it was not until after he had witnessed a demonstration of Taft's weakness and the nation-wide evidence of the strength of the progressive movement that he decided to publicly and emphatically declare himself a progressive and a candidate less than six months ago.

And then, Mr. President, after having failed to secure a nomination for a third term, he turned upon the party which had honored him with office most of the time for 30 years—the party which was good enough and progressive enough for him to eagerly desire to have nominate him for the Presidency less than two months ago—and denounces it as a party which is unfit to exist and must be at once destroyed.

I can not believe that a mad squabble for office will be permitted to destroy a great political party 7,000,000 strong, with a clear progressive majority in its ranks. I can not believe that the disappointment of any individual warrants the formation of a new political party. And, sir, this vital progressive movement, the very essence of which is the restoration of government to the people, will ere long control the councils of the Republican Party in every State in the Union.

But, Mr. President, I must address myself to the question before the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Go right on.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to go on, but I have already overtaxed the patience of the Senate.

I think that my analysis of the wool report shows that President Taft—you see, I play no favorites—ought to have signed this bill.

Mr. President, upon the question, Shall the wool bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding, I wish to be heard briefly, and as what I have to say deals with the Tariff Board report, their investigation of the wool and woolen industries, the averages and the computations which are deducible from that report, I have reduced what I have to say to writing in order that I may be accurate in at least the terms employed and in the figures and percentages submitted.

It seems to me that no Republican Member of the Senate who believes that tariff duties should measure the difference between the cost of production in this and competing countries can vote to sustain the veto of the President on the bill which is returned to us with the message that has just been read.

In my address before the Senate on August 15, 1911, speaking in defense of the tariff bill revising Schedule K on the identical lines on which it has been passed again at this session of Congress, I made the following statement:

"I venture a prediction now, and I know how dangerous prophecy is. We shall have in a few months a report from the Tariff Board. I say that if the Tariff Board does its work with thoroughness it will report lower duties on all the manufactures of wool than the duties named in the conference report. Mark my words. If the Tariff Board does its work thoroughly, Senators are invited to challenge this statement at another session only a few months away if that does not prove to be the case."

That statement was made a little more than one year ago on the floor of the Senate.

Since then the report of the Tariff Board has been submitted to Congress. I do not wish to be understood as indorsing the methods of the investigation into the wool industry in every particular, and that is an exception upon which I might enlarge, but will not do so at this time. Some of its methods have been seriously criticized by recognized authorities in the country, and the criticism has been reproduced in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD both by myself and by other Senators. Nevertheless, for the purposes of this discussion, I accept the Tariff Board's conclusion as to facts as approximately correct; and if the report of the Tariff Board be read carefully it will be seen that the board itself does not expect its figures to be taken as rigidly accurate, but merely as close approximations or general averages pertaining to an industry which is subject to great variations in a country like ours with its wide diversity in climate and conditions.

In this spirit I have taken the figures of the Tariff Board report, and I find that they justify the rates that have been adopted by both Houses of Congress and vetoed by the President as inadequate. I shall take up each product from raw wool to cloth, and first the raw wool.

The President states in his message that "an ad valorem rate of duty adjusted to meet the difference in the cost of production of high-priced wools is not protective to low-priced wools." Will he contend that a single specific duty, such as has been proposed in bills alleged to be based on the Tariff Board report, covers equally the difference in the cost of production of high-priced as well as low-priced wools? It certainly does not. If you are going to have a specific duty and fix it at an average, it will be pretty high for low-priced wools and pretty low for high-priced wools.

Again the President says:

> In any case the report of the Tariff Board shows that the ad valorem duty of 29 per cent on raw wool, imposed in the bill now submitted to me, is inadequate to meet this difference in cost of four-fifths of the total wool clipped.

The President, who signed the Payne-Aldrich Act, and defined it as the best ever enacted by the Republican Party, although admitting Schedule K to be indefensible, does not hesitate to use his veto power to an extent unprecedented in the history of the country, when the country is in revolt against this indefensible schedule. The gravity of his action would require that he submit some proof to Congress of the inadequacy of the rate, especially when he appeals to it to adopt a different rate. Although I feel that the burden of proof is rightly upon him, I cheerfully assume the responsibility of justifying rates now vetoed by the President in the light of the figures of his own Tariff Board.

On page 11 of its report the board gives the average cost of production of raw wool in this country as 9½ cents per pound. The average cost of South American wools is given at from 4 cents to 5 cents per pound. The average cost of Australian wools is given as "a very few cents per pound." The board hesitates to give a definite figure, and adds that the cost of Australian wools falls "materially below the average South American." The average cost of South American wools is 4 to 5 cents. In the light of these figures I assume it to be fair to take the average cost of production of Australian wool at 3 cents per pound.

"A very few cents per pound" can not be much less than 3 cents. They say it is materially lower than the average cost in South America, which is 4 to 5 cents. Three cents is materially lower than 4 to 5 cents, and I believe that to be the fairest estimate which could be made from the language of the report of the board.

The average cost of transportation of Australian wool to Boston is given on page 352 of the Tariff Board report as 2½ cents per pound, making a total cost of Australian wool delivered in Boston of 5½ cents per pound.

The average shrinkage of Australian wool is given on page 12 of the Tariff Board report as 48 per cent. This gives a yield of scoured wool from one pound of Australian wool equal to 100—48, or 52 per cent. Each pound of scoured wool at Boston, therefore, costs 5½ cents times 100, divided by 52, or 10.6 cents.

I have purposely taken the Australian wool for comparison with the American since, according to the report of the board, this wool is produced at the lowest cost and therefore calls for the greatest extent of protection between this country and any foreign country, so that every advantage possible and comparison from that standard will be to the American producer.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether the Senator is going to call attention to the fact, but the Australian wools that he is speaking of shrink 48 per cent from wools that have been skirted, and the wools the price of which are reported by the Tariff Board are not skirted wools, but they are wools in their natural condition.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am going to call attention to it. I repeat, Mr. President, that the Tariff Board reports, on page 12, that these wools shrink 48 per cent and that it gives it as the shrinkage of Australian wools. Now, if the Tariff Board frames its report so as to be misleading, I am not responsible for it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin further yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. I simply want to say a word.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply want to say to the Senator that Australian wools, as they are sheared from the sheep unskirted, shrink more than 52 per cent, and there is not anybody in the United States or in Australia who knows anything about wool who will not acknowledge it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is that stated in impeachment of the report of the Tariff Board?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the report here. I am only saying that, Mr. President.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does the Senator from Utah pretend to say that the Tariff Board has not taken that into account in making this statement?

Mr. SMOOT. I call the Senator's attention to that. It is a fact.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that question.

Mr. SMOOT. I will explain it. The reason I called the Senator's attention to it was that he is figuring upon the cost of producing wool in this country and the cost of producing wool in Australia. Then he is figuring upon what the shrinkage is upon the Australian wools, not as they are grown naturally, which is the cost of producing that the report made by the Tariff Board was based upon, but as they are shipped from this country after being skirted. That is all the idea I intended to convey.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I take it the Tariff Board would not in this report make a statement which they thought would mislead Congress. But while the foreign wools as a rule are skirted before shipment, and the shrinkage of 48 per cent stated by the board is for skirted wool, the cost of a scoured pound laid down in Boston is reported as 10½ cents. If the wool were not skirted it is clear that the shrinkage would be greater, and therefore a scoured pound laid down in Boston would cost even more than 10½ cents per pound. Consequently, even a lower rate than 29½ per cent would measure the difference in production cost.

Mr. SMOOT. Our western wools, for instance, shrink about 66 per cent and the Australian wools in their natural condition are a great deal heavier and the shrinkage is less than most of our western wools. But they are not very much heavier after they are skirted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I will continue what I have to say in analysis of the President's message.

The average cost of production of American wool, as I have already stated, is given on page 11 of the Tariff Board Report at 9½ cents per pound. The average cost of transportation from the West—from the ranches and farms—to Boston is given on page 351 of the Tariff Board Report as 2 cents per pound.

The West pays the highest transportation rate of any section of the country. It is higher than the Pacific coast rate; I do not quite understand why, but it is a fact. So I have taken the very highest transportation cost, to be added to the average cost of the production of American wool in this country as fixed by the Tariff Board, and it gives the total cost of 1 pound of American raw wool laid down in Boston 11½ cents. The average shrinkage of American wool for the whole country is given on page 12 of the Tariff Board report as between 55 and 60 per cent. Taking 55 as a fair average, the yield of scoured wool from 1 pound of raw wool will be 100 minus 55, or 45 per cent.

One pound of scoured American wool in Boston will therefore cost 11½ times 100 divided by 45, or 25.6 cents.

The difference in cost of production per scoured pound between the American and the Australian wool will therefore be 25.6 minus 10.6, or 15 cents per pound of scoured wool, which is the rate originally proposed by Congressman HILL, of Connecticut, who prepared his bill on the basis of the Tariff Board report and in cooperation with the Tariff Board.

My computations were made without any knowledge of the computations which had been made by Congressman HILL, of Connecticut, as consistent a protectionist as there is in the House of Representatives, but I ascertained after these computations had been made and this matter had been dictated to my stenographer that Congressman HILL, after a thorough study of this Tariff Board report on wool, made in connection with the board.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield with very great pleasure.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator is intimating that the Tariff Board approves Mr. HILL's findings.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am speaking of the wool bill now. Mr. President, in anticipation of what the Senator from Rhode Island is about to present, I will say that as to the cotton bill which I offered as a substitute either yesterday or the day before, when the measure was pending in the Senate, as a bill which had been prepared by the Tariff Board, and which I stated also had been prepared by the tariff experts in connection with Congressman HILL. I will say, supplementing that statement, that I have since been informed by Mr. HILL that it was prepared in the room of the Tariff Board, in which Mr. HILL spent some weeks working with the experts of the board who were assigned by the board to work with him, and that labor performed by Mr. HILL confirms what I said when I offered the results of his bill as a substitute to the cotton bill presented by the Democrats.

I am glad to yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LIPPITT. I am glad, Mr. President, to hear the explanation which the Senator from Wisconsin makes of his statement in regard to the cotton bill, and I presume the same qualification would be made in regard to any connection——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What does the Senator mean by my qualification? I have simply strengthened what I said when I presented the matter to the Senate two or three days ago.

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator from Wisconsin would allow me to complete even one sentence, perhaps we would get along a little faster.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will be very glad to allow the Senator to make a speech.

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not care to make a speech at this time. The Senator from Wisconsin intimated, as I understand it, in his speech upon the cotton bill that the cotton bill which he introduced was prepared in conjunction with the Tariff Board. He has just intimated, as I understood his language, that the bill which he is now discussing was prepared in conjunction and with the aid of the Tariff Board. I do not understand that the Tariff Board has ever——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not quite——

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not know——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not understand that that board has taken any part in the preparation of the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor and may interrupt the Senator at any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator yielded the floor to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But I may interrupt the Senator at any point when I have the floor, and I want to interrupt him just at that point and ask him what bill he referred to as the bill I am now discussing?

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator asked me a question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; I ask you a question right now.

Mr. LIPPITT. May I answer it right now?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. You may, if you understand it. I have not completed my question, and I will complete it if the Senator is not too eager. Do you refer to the wool bill or do you refer to the cotton bill?

Mr. LIPPITT. I think my language is perfectly plain.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to know which one the Senator referred to.

Mr. LIPPITT. I told the Senator that I just referred to the cotton bill. I presume he is now discussing the woolen bill. The Senator has talked about many things; I do not feel quite——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I first referred to the cotton bill. I just wanted to be certain.

Mr. LIPPITT. What I am about to say refers to both bills. What I did say was that I did not understand that the Tariff Board as a board has taken part in the preparation of any tariff bill. I do understand that individual members of the Tariff Board, acting as individuals, have given assistance to a great many Senators in preparing their data for tariff bills which they themselves put together. I inquired, in order to be sure upon that point, of the chairman of the Tariff Board, and with the Senator's permission—it is a rather long letter—I should like to read one sentence of his reply.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the entire letter.

Mr. LIPPITT. I will print the whole letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; but I should like to have his permission to read one sentence of only two lines.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think if the Senator is going to have it printed he had better read it.

Mr. LIPPITT. I can read it, if the Senator wants me to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think it will be better.

Mr. LIPPITT. With the Senator's permission, I will ask the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE TARIFF BOARD,
TREASURY BUILDING,
Washington, August 16, 1912.

Hon. HENRY F. LIPPITT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your inquiry of August 15, as to the statement that the bill H. R. 25107, Sixty-second Congress, second session, was prepared by the Tariff Board and represented their opinion as to what the rates should be, I beg to say that the Tariff Board has never prepared any tariff bill nor taken action as a board regarding the desirability of particular rates of duty. We have no authority to do so under any of the legislative acts which determine our duties. Furthermore, as to the approval of particular methods of classification and particular methods of assessing duties the board has taken no action at any time, except to publish in its official reports the arguments for and against certain disputed methods.

On the other hand, the facilities of this office, including the time of our employees, has been freely at the disposal of any Senator or Congressman for the preparation of additional tables from our published figures and for calculations of the relations between the duty proposed in any bill and our published figures regarding prices and costs of production. A great deal of work was done of this nature in connection with the bill referred to above. Mr. Hill was in frequent conference with an individual member of the board, and with two or three of our statistical and investigating staff, in the preparation of the calculations on which he based his bill. He published four tables covering the 100 samples used in our report, and these tables were prepared in this office and are guaranteed by us as correct calculations from our report. The only material in the tables not included in the report is, first, the simple calculation of the English prices of July, 1911, plus the duty proposed in his bill; and second, a few comments at the bottom of the different tables giving a few details as to particular samples. There are two remarks attached to the tables labeled "Note," which are notes by Mr. Hill and not included in the tables prepared here. They are as follows: Under Table I (p. 6 of inclosed pamphlet) and under Table IV (p. 8 of inclosed pamphlet).

Yours, very truly,

HENRY C. EMERY, Chairman.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if that contributes anything new for the information of the Senate, I am very glad the Senator from Rhode Island has seen fit to interrupt my argument to present it. The members of the Tariff Board themselves, as everyone understands, act upon the information procured for them by their experts. Their experts were with Mr. HILL for several weeks down there, with the approval of Mr. Emery, the head of the board, and whether every other member of the board individually saw the figures and approved them does not in the least signify. They were the figures upon which the board would base any action it might take, because they were the figures of the board's experts. They found, on investigation made by men sent into the field, that the average cost of producing wool in this country is 15 cents a pound or—I have the original notes made by Mr. HILL, just transmitted to me here—14.32 cents. When Mr. HILL prepared his bill, based upon the calculations of these experts, worked out from the reports of the field experts and incorporated in the findings of the board, he placed the duty at 15 cents as a liberal estimate of the cost of producing wool per pound.

Mark you, Mr. President, that is not what it costs out West; that is the average ascertained by including in the calculations the flocks of Ohio, where it costs a little less than a dollar a pound. I have not the exact figures in mind, but it costs between 50 cents and a dollar a pound to produce wool in Ohio. Twenty per cent of the wool of this country is produced without any cost; and every man with a knowledge of this business, or who has studied it at all, knows that that is true in localities where sheep raising is the principal business. Of course, when you figure out the cost of maintaining a little flock, where books have not been kept, as the report of these field experts showed, but where estimates are taken and guesses are made, you get some pretty high costs for producing wool.

Mr. President, after Mr. HILL introduced his wool bill (or when Mr. PAYNE introduced it, for it was Congressman PAYNE who introduced it) he made a concession in committee which resulted in increasing the duty to 18 cents a pound in order to secure the support of his associates on the Ways and Means Committee.

While he increased the duties 3 cents a pound in order to get the other Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee to stand with him, 15 cents a pound is the rate which measures the difference between the cost of producing this wool abroad—the cheapest wool—and the cost of producing it in this country.

I thus find myself in agreement with the conclusions of the Tariff Board so far as the specific duty is concerned. I do not regard, however, the specific duty as a just basis, in view of its great discrimination against the cheap wools required for the poor man's cloth, as I have had occasion to explain at length on former occasions in the Senate. What, then, is the equivalent ad valorem duty of a 15-cent duty per pound, in which the Tariff Board and I agree?

The Tariff Board report gives "a record of actual importations and scourings in a representative American mill covering more than 10,000,000 pounds of class 1 wool." These prices are given on pages 387–390, these being Australian wools, Merinos, and cross-breds. The average of these prices as computed by the statistician of the Ways and Means Committee, and given in the report of that committee on page 38, was 50.8 cents per pound of scoured wool. The duty of 15 cents would constitute 29.5 per cent ad valorem on the basis of this thoroughly representative average price given by the Tariff Board. In other words, the Tariff Board's own figures call for a duty of 29½ per cent ad valorem as against 29, passed by both houses of Congress at two different sessions of the present administration.

Here is a tariff bill that is rejected on the ground that it is not in agreement with the report of the Tariff Board. The figures of the Tariff Board demonstrate that this bill sent to the President for his approval, and which he has vetoed, is within one-half of 1 per cent of the findings of his own Tariff Board.

Will anyone justify the veto of a measure because of a difference of one-half of 1 per cent in the duty, and will the President claim that because of that difference the woolgrowers of this country would have to go out of business?

TOPS.

On pages 20–21 of the Tariff Board report will be found a series of calculations from which can be derived the proportion that the value of the raw material and the conversion cost bear to the total cost of the woolen products at each stage of production. As the board has failed to work out the percentages I have had this calculated for myself.

The cost of wool, as will be found from the figures given on page 21, equals 92.7 per cent of cost of tops. Conversion cost, including labor and all other expenses (p. 21), 7.3 per cent of cost of tops. Compensatory duty equals 29 per cent of 92.7 per cent, or 26.88 per cent. United States conversion cost (p. 16) is 80 per cent greater than the English; that is to say, the English conversion cost is equal to 100/180 of the American conversion cost, equals 55 per cent of American conversion cost. Protective duty should equal difference in conversion cost, or 100 minus 55 equals 45 per cent of American conversion cost.

As shown above, the American conversion cost equals 7.3 per cent of the total cost of tops. Therefore the protective duty should be 45 per cent of 7.3 per cent, or 3.29 per cent of cost of tops. Total duty—Compensatory 26.88, plus protective 3.29; total, 30.17.

The duty adopted by Congress and vetoed by the President as inadequate was 32 per cent, or nearly 2 per cent in excess of what the Tariff Board's own figures seem to justify.

YARNS.

Cost of raw stock in yarns—that is, tops—according to page 21 of the Tariff Board report, is equal to 77 per cent of the cost of yarns. As I have already shown, the cost of raw wool in tops is 92.7 per cent of the value of the tops. Therefore the cost of raw wool in yarns is equal to 92.7 per cent of 77 per cent, equals 71.4 per cent of cost of yarns; conversion cost equals 100 per cent minus 71.4 per cent, or 28.6 per cent of cost of yarns; compensatory duty equals 29 per cent of 71.4 per cent, or 20.7 per cent. Protective duty, American conversion cost, page 16, Tariff Board report, is stated to be double the cost in England. That is to say, English conversion cost equals 50 per cent of American conversion cost, or 50 per cent of 28.6 per cent equals 14.3 per cent of the cost of yarns. Total duty: Compensatory 20.7, plus protective 14.3; total, 35 per cent.

The duty adopted by Congress and vetoed by the President is 34 per cent, or only 1 per cent below that justified by the figures of the Tariff Board. As the board itself states on page 16 that its figures are only roughly approximate, it will take stronger proof than a mere assertion on the part of the President that this rate threatens the existence of American spinning mills.

CLOTH.

The next step in the process of manufacture is cloth. According to the Tariff Board findings, as quoted in the President's veto message, raw wool constitutes from 50 to 70 per cent of the value of the fabric. The average, therefore, would be 60 per cent.

Conversion cost equals 100 minus 60 equals 40 per cent; the compensatory duty on wool in the fabric equals 29 per cent of 60 per cent equals 17.4 per cent. The cost of turning yarn into cloth is given on page 17 of the Tariff Board report to be all the way from 60 to 170 per cent higher than the English. This would give an average of 115 per cent. The excess of American conversion cost over English conversion cost at the successive stages of production, according to the Tariff Board report, is thus 80 per cent in case of tops; 100 per cent in case of yarn, and 115 per cent for cloth, and may therefore be taken as 100 per cent for the entire process from raw wool to cloth—that is to say, the English conversion cost equals 50 per cent of the American. The difference between the American and English conversion costs equals 100 minus 50, or 50 per cent of the total conversion cost, from raw wool to the finished fabric.

As the conversion cost has been shown above to be equal to 40 per cent of the total cost of the fabric, the protective duty equals 50 per cent of 40 per cent, equals 20 per cent. Total duty, compensatory, 17.4 per cent, plus protective, 20 per cent, total, 37.4 per cent, as against 49 per cent adopted by Congress and vetoed by the President as inadequate.

Now, Mr. President, the bill presented by the conferees, it seems to me, is a measure which ought to be accepted. It will relieve the American people from the oppression of a schedule which the President himself has declared indefensible—a schedule which imposes duties going to the extent of 174, 175, 176, and 178 per cent. When the concessions of the Democratic House and the Democratic Members of the United States Senate have been such as to leave the President a bill which is protective, according to the report of his own commission, I can find, Mr. President, no justification for his standing across the pathway of this opportunity to relieve the American people from the heavy burdens under which they have suffered for 40 years through the unjust tariff rates of this schedule.

And I appeal to Republican Members here to join in passing this bill over the President's veto and lifting from the American people the wrongful burdens under which they have rested through all these years.

In 1909 it was contended that there was nothing in that schedule requiring revision. We have passed beyond that now. Even the most ultraprotectionists and standpatters on the Republican side have conceded the injustice of Schedule K by voting for a reduction of duties, when three years ago they refused to assent to any change.

Now, here is the report of this board. Here is the analysis of that report. And here is an opportunity to help thousands of American families and harm no one. I believe we ought to do it, and I shall vote to pass this bill notwithstanding the veto of the Executive.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have never more than at this time been so fully impressed with the statement that where a man selects his own premises, he may arrive at any conclusion.

The question of the average cost of producing wool should not in any measure control the determination of this question. It is not proper, in determining the duty that should stand between our producer and the producer abroad, to take the average cost of the production of a commodity in this country; and it was never better illustrated than by the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

More than half the wool of this country is produced at a price far above the average. Are those people to have no protection? Are we to protect those who because of peculiar circumstances may produce wool at a little below a given figure? Out of every six men who produce wool in this country there are five men who produce it at a cost above the average. More than half the wool produced in this country is produced by the small herdsman, and the Senator has admitted, as I understand his remarks, that the small herdsman is entitled to scant consideration. Yet it is the small herdsman who is entitled to protection, because he represents the weak, while the large herdsman represents the strong. Is that an equitable or a fair basis to take in determining a rule of protection that is to be applicable to all the people? Are we to select only those who can produce wool cheaply and disregard the rights of those who because of conditions can not produce it within the average?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does the Senator ask that question of me?

Mr. HEYBURN. I asked the question generally. I would be glad to have an answer of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will be glad to answer.

I do not know whether the Senator from Idaho will remember, but when the Tariff Board made its report upon the paper industry in this country, as compared with the paper industry of Canada, it found that all of the mills in the United States that had replaced the antiquated machinery with which the paper mills were originally equipped by modern machinery were able to produce paper in the United States as cheaply as it is produced in Canada.

Now, in the report of the board on the paper industry many Senators were misled by looking merely at the table, which footed up an apparent difference of $2 a ton in the cost of production. But I recall distinctly having spent considerable time in a study of that report, carefully analyzing it and presenting that analysis to the Senate. On the face of the figures given in the table it appeared that the average cost of production of a ton of paper in the United States was $5 more than the average cost in Canada. But a study of the text of the report showed, by a comparison of the lowest cost in the United States with the lowest cost in Canada—that is, in the most modern, best-equipped mills—upon the figures taken from the books of the paper companies, the cost of production in the United States to be actually less than in Canada. But when mills equipped with ancient machinery, using old-fashioned, inefficient processes, were included, a duty of $5 a ton was required to protect the paper industry in the United States against these old and obsolete methods. That meant protecting inefficiency. It did not mean protecting the business when conducted as any business should be under modern conditions. Take it as applied to the wool industry.

[At this point Mr. LA FOLLETTE yielded that the Senate might receive a message from the House of Representatives, which appears elsewhere in to-day's proceedings.]

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator is anticipating what I had intended to say. I do not object to the interruption, but it is very far from the question under consideration.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not wish to trespass upon the time of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. I cheerfully yield to the Senator. But there is no analogy whatever——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE rose.

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That leads me to interrupt the Senator again. I was about to say that I thought the Senate could make its application of the illustration which I have given. Now, you take the industry of producing wool. If it is to be considered as a business, it must be treated as a business. Where the production cost of a given product upon the capital invested is reasonable, and the industry is one which should be maintained in the public interest, and where it can be maintained against foreign competition with a reasonable tariff rate, such rate should be maintained. But if the production cost is excessive in some particular locality, or where the industry is not conducted as a business but as a mere accessory to some business, and for that reason the cost of producing the article under such circumstances is extravagantly high, such cost of production should not be taken as the basis for fixing tariff rates.

Now, as a matter of fact, I think it would require a duty of some 80 or 90 cents a pound on wool to equal the cost of production in Ohio—I have not the board's figures; I am just stating it from memory.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was just coming to that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will be glad to have the Senator come to it, if he has the figures, and I shall be glad to have him correct me if I have not stated the figures for Ohio correctly.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Idaho allow me to ask a question of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield. However, I do not desire that this shall drift off into technicalities.

Mr. WARREN. I do not want to interrupt this private conversation——

Mr. HEYBURN. No.

Mr. WARREN. But I understood the Senator from Wisconsin in his remarks, which I did not wish to interrupt, to say that the Tariff Board report shows that it really costs nothing to raise wool in some parts of the United States.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from Wyoming must have understood me to say—at least, I thought I did say—that if you will take the reports of all the field officers of the Tariff Board they will show that upward of 20 per cent of all the wool of the United States is produced as a by-product, without one cent of cost.

Mr. WARREN. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I say the report of the board sustains that statement.

Mr. WARREN. I wanted to be sure. Of course, the Senator will understand that my silence does not give assent to that or any other statement of that kind. But I did not want to misrepresent the Senator in understanding him to say that it did not cost anything.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct.

Mr. WARREN. It will be quite unexpected news to the farmers that it costs nothing to raise wool. I will say furthermore while I am about it——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator will understand that what I mean by that is that the returns from the sheep when sold as mutton is such that whatever is received from the wool is clear profit.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that perfectly; and it might be construed further that because of other by-products the mutton is profit.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator may be facetious, but I will say to the Senator that that is the report of the board.

Mr. WARREN. I wanted to be sure that the Senator said it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; and I will say to the Senator, furthermore, that the protective doctrine does not get the worst of it in this report at any point. And I will add to that this statement: The methods employed by the Tariff Board in its investigations of the woolen schedule were such that the tariff expert, the best man they could select in the United States to supervise their work, Samuel S. Dale, of Boston, refused to give his assent to it, and withdrew from any connection with the matter.

Mr. WARREN. What I wanted to get from the Senator was whether or not he has built this bill, or so much of it as he may have built, upon the Tariff Board's report, because he believes that the Tariff Board's statement is correct——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator from Idaho will permit me, I feel——

Mr. WARREN. Let me ask one more question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me answer that one, if you do not mind.

Mr. WARREN. No.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I said earlier in the debate that, without accepting or giving assent to the methods employed by the Tariff Board, but taking the report just as written, I found that it sustained the rates in the bill which the President has vetoed.

Mr. WARREN. But the Senator, as I understand, admits that he does not sustain the finding of the Tariff Board in all particulars. For that matter, he discards the idea presented by them, after mature consideration, that the duties upon raw wool should be specific instead of ad valorem, and therefore, while he asks us to support this bill upon the Tariff Board's report, he does not justify the Tariff Board's report.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am not discussing this measure from the standpoint of the Tariff Board's report. I have advised myself as to the facts reported by that board, and I am drawing my deductions from the principles of protection. The Tariff Board did not undertake to suggest what duties should be levied upon the wool as classified by them. I am discussing the question upon its merits from the standpoint of the individual and not from the standpoint of the Tariff Board.

Mr. President, I arose only to address myself very briefly to the real question, or what in my judgment is the real question, involved in this legislation. The question is entirely one relating to the prosperity of the individual who produces the wool, and not to the wool market, and not to the mills, and not to the dealer in wool. I meet this question, I repeat, from the standpoint of the individual who produces the wool. He is the party entitled to consideration. The market for wool in Boston does not enter into the proper consideration of this question. The question is, Shall we protect all men engaged in the production of wool upon the basis of the cost of production, or shall we take the average cost of the production of wool and allow only those who can produce it at a price above the average to go out of business and confront the situation that will meet them? I take the position that we must consider the rights of those who produce at a cost above the average as well as the rights of all others.

The suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin, that in considering the paper schedule we disregarded obsolete machinery and what he terms, I think, incompetence, has nothing whatever to do with this matter. Wool is not produced by machinery. There is no cost of machinery to be considered in determining what will constitute protection to the wool producer. Wool grows upon the sheep, which grazes upon the farm, and is the property of the individual; and the purpose of this legislation is to protect the individual who owns the sheep which produces the wool, and so forth.

Nothing could be more unfair than to suggest the offset of the price of the carcass as against the wool, to see whether or not the man could afford to raise sheep for the profit he would derive from the carcass. That is not a fair consideration to give this matter. He is entitled to both. He is entitled to the wool as a distinctive product. He is entitled to the carcass of the sheep because it is his. He has the cost, the expense, and the investment representing its growth.

Now, Mr. President, as I was proceeding to say, more than half the wool in the country is produced at a cost above the average. If you base protection upon the average cost, you do it at the expense of the larger class of producers. That is not fair. That is legislating for the prosperous in disregard of those not so prosperous. It is legislating for the aristocracy of business in disregard of the rights of those who, pursuing legitimate means, raise this product in competition with others who raise it at home or abroad. So I say the premises being erroneous the conclusions are equally so.

Now, Mr. President, the facts given us by the Tariff Board enable us to know as nearly as it can be known how many wool raisers there are in the United States who would fall on one side of the line of averages and how many would fall on the other side of the line of averages. The law should be equally protective of all Americans engaged in this business. There should be no selection of those who are so situated that the cost of production fall below the average or on the line of the average. In numbers of individuals interested there are five to one on the side of the line where the cost is above the average. You can take the report of the Tariff Board and verify that statement.

The Senator anticipated me when he suggested the State of Ohio. I can add to the State of Ohio a list of more than half the States in the Union where the cost to the farmer of the sheep is above the average. Is he to go out of business while those who can produce on or below the line of averages may be sustained by this legislation?

It would not do to adopt such a rule as that in legislating upon matters where there is contest and competition between our people and the people of other countries. I naturally rise up in rebellion against such a principle of legislation. If you destroy the profit to the raiser of sheep upon the small farms or the large farms or the small herder or the large herder, if you protect one and not the other, you drive the sheep from the farms and you have remaining only the large herder, who operates under particularly favorable circumstances, with inexpensive methods of production. That will not do. Such a principle of government would be a violation of the very foundation principles of equality of opportunity before the law. The law must protect to the extent of not the average, but of all classes of the people.

The Senator from Wisconsin admits, as I interpret his remarks, that in States like Ohio and all the other States similarly situated, this proposed duty would be inadequate protection. Then what are you going to do? You are going to reduce the number of sheep and the quantity of wool by more than one-half. The proportion is more than 50 per cent as against the small producer. That will not do.

There is nothing in the report of the Tariff Commission inconsistent with the position which I take in regard to this matter. I can not bring myself to support any measure that requires every man to be equal in his capacity to produce a product. You can not reduce all men to one size. You can not by legislation reduce the cost of producing wool to the farmer one cent.

Mr. President, when you have brought about a condition where it is no longer profitable to maintain the sheep and the sheep industry and the wool industry incident to it, except upon the sheep ranges, then you will have stricken this business down. You will at least have reduced the sheep industry by one-half, and that half will have to be supplied by the foreign market. The people will lose the benefit of the industry, the farmer will be deprived of the use of the land devoted to this purpose, and the people will be dependent upon a foreign producer. You can not raise for 9 cents wool upon land worth $100 an acre. You can not produce wool upon the farm land in this country that is worth all the way from $50 to over $100 an acre within the limits of the price suggested by this measure. If they can not do it, they would be compelled to abandon the business.

I can not emphasize this doctrine too strongly. It appeals to me as few questions do appeal to me that come before us for consideration. I do not believe that existing duties are too high. Under existing conditions we have upon the farms and in the small flocks of this country more than half the sheep. Are they overprosperous? Is the business too prosperous, that we would undertake to cut them down to the measure of the party who will herd sheep upon cheap lands by cheap methods and low wages? Would you cut them down to the standard of the cheap production? Not by my vote.

Lead pencil politics is not always reliable. It is generally unreliable. You can sit down and figure as the Senator from Wisconsin has figured, and figure men out of their prosperity, and when the test comes and the result is before us, what is your remedy? You say, "Well, we were mistaken, we thought these herds of sheep would still remain, and we would bring into the field of competition the product of foreign countries and make them cut themselves down to the standard of foreign countries." That is not protection. That is juggling with a principle, disregarding the individual, basing your estimate upon an average market and an average production, and it is a violation of the principle and the spirit of protection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not want to detain the Senate long. I merely want to call attention to the fact that in this discussion what has been said by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], what has been said by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], and the slight interpolation of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] all agree in this: They show the absolute absurdity, the ridiculous absurdity, of the pretended test for protection under the Republican theory. They show the absolute inutility of the existence of this Tariff Board. The Tariff Board was organized in order to arrive at the cost of production here and abroad; in order to compare the two costs of production, and thereby to arrive at the difference between the two costs of production, so that a protective tariff might cancel it and give a reasonable profit over and above.

Now, that is the Republican theory, and the ridiculousness of it is exposed by asking just one question: Which cost of production; which cost abroad; which cost here; which two costs are to be compared with one another?

Taking the American cost of production, are we to take as the standard the cost to the producer most favorably situated or the cost to the producer less favorably situated, or the cost to the producer averagely well situated—if I may frame an adverb "averagely," which I never heard of before.

The Senator from Wisconsin takes the position that it is the average cost of production here to be compared with the average cost of production abroad, and it would have seemed to me that that was more nearly the common sense of the situation than anything else with its entire ridiculousness could be, because if you compare the average cost of production here with the average cost of production abroad, then the lowest cost of production here would automatically be compared with the lowest cost of production abroad, and the highest cost of production here would equally automatically follow the comparison, for it is to be assumed that the highest is related to the highest, and the lowest to the lowest, and the average is to the average; that is, it is to be as nearly assumed as anything can be intelligently assumed in the ridiculousness of the situation which is presented to the country.

Mr. HEYBURN. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. My mind was diverted from the consideration of that question in the running debate which transpired.

If the Senator had in an inclosure a number of sheep equivalent to the pasture necessary for their sustenance, and he was threatened by an invasion of other sheep, he would build the fence so as to keep the other sheep out, because if they entered it would be at the expense of those within the inclosure. He would build the fence high enough to keep out the most nimble sheep on the outside. He would not build it just high enough so that the least agile sheep could not get in but he would build it high enough to keep out the sheep that could jump the highest. That is the tariff proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That illustrates again the incongruity and lack of logical clearness in almost any protectionist Republican's attitude.

The Senator from Idaho has unconsciously drawn an analogy between human beings and sheep. Of course a shepherd protecting his sheep will not care how much too high the fence is, and if human beings were sheep and the Government were a shepherd you would not care how much too high a protective wall was. But human beings are not sheep; they are presumed to have intelligence; they are presumed to make their own living; they are presumed to earn their own sustenance; and sheep can not do that unless in a state of nature where no man interferes with them, and then a great many of the sheep do die.

The Senator from Wisconsin has taken the position which would have seemed at first blush the most approximately reasonable that an unreasonable demand could admit of, to wit, that the average cost of production here ought to be compared with the average cost of production abroad, and that the cost of production to be considered here would be the average cost of production.

Now, there comes into the Republican arena, if I understand him correctly, the Senator from Idaho, and he denounces that as prostitution of government. He denounces that as a government which does not give equality to everybody. He says that a government that would proceed upon that sort of a rôle would be a government that has failed of its object, and then, if I understand his position, he says that the cost of production which ought to be considered is the cost of production to the producer least favorably situated for producing the product cheaply.

In other words, if the Senator from Idaho were protecting cotton and the system of protection had been going on long enough where it would be possible to have raised the price of cotton and kept it at 20 cents, and in consequence of little cotton, short, and stunted, and sparsely growing, being raised in central Kentucky, and he were asked to reduce the tariff he would be guided by the cost of the production of cotton in central Kentucky, instead of the cost of the production of cotton, let us say, in north Mississippi, Alabama, and Georgia, where the cost is the average cost.

Mr. HEYBURN. Why not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I am coming to. Why not? For the reason that the Government was not instituted by man to support either the thriftless at the expense of the consumer, or the incompetent at the expense of the consumer, in manufactures the man with bad machinery at the expense of the consumer, or in agriculture the man who selected an unfavorable soil, and climate, or situation otherwise, at the expense of the consumer, for the reason that men are not sheep shepherded by government, but that government is not even the master of the men as the shepherd is of the sheep, and that government ought not to be instituted for the purpose of supporting men, but that men ought not to make a government their servant, but they ought to support the Government. That is the answer to that question.

Mr. HEYBURN. Will the Senator allow me another suggestion?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is, of course, impossible that all commodities should be produced at the point of shipment. The use of the land lying back from the railroad is as legitimate as the use of the land lying on the railroad near the point of shipment. The position taken by the Senator from Mississippi is as near free trade as some of the modern schools can approach. I suppose inasmuch as they are marching toward free trade and have only struck an average yet, continuing their march, they will eventually get into the camp of free trade.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yielded to my friend from Idaho not for a further continuance of the debate he had just had with the Senator from Wisconsin, but for a question I thought he was going to ask me in connection with what I had been saying.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I understand the theory of the Senator from Idaho correctly, if he were protecting the woolgrowers he would find out the woolgrower farthest from the market, who had to pay the highest transportation rate, he would find the woolgrower in the most inhospitable climate, with sparse pasturage, who could raise the least wool to an acre upon which sheep pastured, and he would fix the rate high enough to protect him. If I understood his position, carrying it by analogy into manufacture, he would find out the manufacturing producer, whom it costs most to make cotton goods, or most to make woolen goods, or silken goods, because of his bad management, because of his bad machinery, or because of his bad location, or because of the distance from market, or because of the high price of machinery aggregated altogether, and make the tariff high enough for that man. He would do this upon the principle that the poor devil with his particular sheep had to be protected from any—even the most agile—foreign or domestic producer who could jump over the tariff fence.

The Senator says that this principle of his ought to go into operation. Why? Because all must be equally protected.

Mr. HEYBURN. Equal opportunity.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I understood the Senator to use the language "equally protected." I understand, then, what the Senator means now. We give an equal opportunity by protection. If that is the case that is an absurdity, too. The ridiculousness of your whole theory is shown every time one of you opens his mouth, because you would put a protective tariff high enough to protect the sheep raiser upon the least well adapted land, in the most inhospitable locality, with the most sparse pasturage, and farthest from the market equally with the fellow who was in the most favorable location, with the richest pasturage, with the least inhospitable climate, and closest to the market.

So you have got unequal protection, anyhow. The truth is that at the bottom of your whole blasted theory is the Democratic objection that equality can not apply to it at all, neither as between individuals engaged as producers in the class protected nor as between classes some of whom are taxed and some of whom are benefited. As between individuals it will not apply for the reason I have just given, and as between classes it could not apply except in one way, and that would be to pass a general tax to make every fellow give the Government so much, and then give back the same amount to each one less the cost of collection and disbursement. If any protectionist could study up a scheme that would provide absolute equality, so that each man would get out of it just as much as he put into it, then you would have a scheme that no protectionist would stand for five minutes—not one on the surface of this earth. So that the idea of protecting the least favorably situated for the purpose of having equality of opportunity under protection is absurd. The man most favorably situated would have the maximum benefit, the man least favorably situated would have the minimum benefit, and the man situated upon the average would have an average benefit.

The Senator well says—and it is characteristic of the line of thought of his school—that he is thinking of the man who grows the sheep, and that is all he is thinking about, and he avows that is all he wants to consider—the man who grows the sheep, the man who receives the governmental largess, the man, as his language was, who is entitled to protection. The idea of a man being entitled to a gift! The idea of a man being entitled to a largess! The idea of a man being entitled to have the law make somebody else pay him more for his product than that somebody else would have to pay if the law did not exist! Yet they are "entitled."

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is not that rich, sure enough—that word "entitled"?

Mr. HEYBURN. I limited that word "entitled" to opportunity at home.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was speaking of the question as it relates to our own people. I have never reached the point where I would consider the opening of the door to the Hessians in order that they might enter our household for the purpose of confusion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the Senator not to mix me up with the Hessians, because I am really not one by blood or by sympathy or anything of that sort. I was not talking about the Senator speaking about the foreigner. I know the Senator never thinks of him. The Senator belongs to that political caste of thought which imagines that the foreigner really pays this tax—or most of them did imagine that up to a few years ago. What I was talking about was this: The Senator refers to a man being "entitled" to a special privilege granted by law. No wonder the Senator from Wisconsin this evening talked about the "progressives" having taken their rise from a revolt and rebellion against special privileges granted by law, which has so permeated the very essence of your being, of your brain blood, if I might say so, that none of you can get rid of the idea that a man is "entitled" to a special tax privilege granted by law at the expense of the consumer.

The Senator says that he considers nobody except the producer. Leave the foreigner out—the blasted barbarian; nobody cares for him. We are like the ancient Greeks; we have no use for foreigners, anyhow; they are outside of the court; they are our natural enemies; whenever we exchange products with them they rob us; and whenever they sell anything to us we are such fools that we always get the worst of the bargain, and they alone profit by it. But I am not talking about them.

The Senator says he considers only the grower of the product, only the man who makes the wool and sells the wool, and he does not consider at all the man who has got to wear the wool. He is clear out of the purview of the possible contemplation of the visions of the Senator from Idaho; yet the man who wears the clothes is forced by law to wear clothes, and the other man is not forced by law to raise sheep. [Laughter.] He might be doing something else if he wanted to.

I merely wanted to expose in one moment the absolute folly of the very principle upon which the Tariff Board was organized, and the absolute absurdity, the inaneness, the childishness of any attempt to arrive at a difference in the cost of production, when the whole thing is exposed by the discussion to-day and exposed to any of you at any time by somebody asking the simple question, Which cost of production? And not only which cost of production, but the cost of production when, because in the same factory and in the same field it will differ from month to month? The cost of production where? The cost of production how far from market? The cost of production on what sort of soil? The cost of production under what kind of management—which cost of production? I have outlined three, but there are a thousand costs of production. The very next planter to me will raise his cotton on one side at a less cost of production than I, and the one upon the other side will raise it at a greater cost of production. Whenever you try to get outside of the laws of God and nature, whenever you try to convert government into a shepherd, an overlord, a guardian and director, who must support the people instead of the people supporting it, whenever you try to do that, a thousand things you may have, but one thing you can not have, to save your lives, and that is equality; and that is the keystone of the arch in the temple of democracy. You can not have equality of opportunity. It is the very thing that you must destroy, and you destroy it just in proportion as the Government puts its miserable hand into the pocket of the citizen or lays its miserable hand upon his shoulder. The minute you try by law to control and influence the condition of demand and supply, that moment you have gone off on a ground where, whatever else you may still adhere to, equality you must desert, and you have deserted liberty in the very beginning.

It would seem that if a man has a natural liberty under the sun, it is to buy what he needs to clothe himself as cheaply as he can get it, and to sell his product as high as he can sell it, with this difference only, that the Government has a right to take out of it whatsoever is necessary for government. The Government has a right to take 10 per cent of what I earn, if necessary, for government; it has a right to take 100 per cent, if necessary, for government; it has a right to take the Senator from Idaho and me, if necessary, for government and let us be shot by the enemy. Whether the necessity is large or whether it is small, the right of Government to subtract from what I earn is limited by the needs of the Government for the purpose of maintaining domestic tranquillity, national independence, the intellect and education of the people, and all those things well known to all of us.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I was speaking in the interest of a well-clothed, well-fed, and prosperous people. The Senator from Mississippi has given us as fine a specimen of a free-trade speech as I have heard for a long time. The difference between us is that I am not a free-trader. I do not believe in as free trade between our people and other nations as I do between our people among themselves. I would place no limit upon the competition of our own producers within our own market.

The Senator from Mississippi seems to lose sight of the purpose of government. As I understand, it is to give the members of the Government superior rights to members of any other government seeking to enter it. Is there nothing in being a citizen of this country? Does it count for nothing that we are members of this Government, and consequently entitled to greater rights than the people of other countries who seek to come here?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator pardon a question there?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator speaks of members of the Government, meaning by that, of course, the subjects or citizens of the Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I use the word in its large sense.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator fail to count, in considering this particular question, the people who do not raise sheep, but have to wear wool, as being equally members of the Government or citizens of it with those who produce the wool?

Mr. HEYBURN. I was just about to frame the words to express myself upon that question. The people of this Government and of most others are engaged in a diversity of industries and interests. Those in one line trade with those in another. The man who raises wool buys wheat; he buys leather; he buys food products; and the man who raises those commodities buys wool.

Mr. President, there is absolutely—I will not say there is nothing in the argument or in any argument made by a Senator—but there is no substantial principle upon which to base an argument that our own people do not have superior rights in regard to their occupation, their business, and their prosperity to the people of other countries.

The Senator speaks of taxing our country. That is the brand by which I recognize, first, the free-trader spirit behind the Senator's remarks—not behind them, but all over them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in that connection there is one more very interesting question—and I am really seeking information—does the Senator deny that a tariff is a tax?

Mr. HEYBURN. A tax upon the foreign producer, yes; and a very righteous tax. The Senator would transfer that tax from the foreigner to our own people.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon; but I really thought that the last Republican who contended that the tariff was a tax on the foreigner had disappeared.

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course, were I to enter into a consideration of the views of other men, in office or otherwise, I might then enlarge upon that. I am not concerned with the expression of other men who happen to be in office to-day and out to-morrow; but I am concerned with the consideration of this question from the standpoint of an American citizen. It means something to be an American citizen. Man, woman, or child, we are a part of—we are the Government. This Government does not consist of the officeholders of the executive, of the legislative, or the judicial departments; it consists of the people engaged in their varying occupations. Their prosperity is the first consideration, taken in connection with their safety; and it is from that standpoint that a protectionist speaks. Whenever he qualifies it, modifies it, or retreats from it, he has turned his back upon Republican doctrine. We might just as well recognize that fact.

There has been a disposition, growing, in my judgment, out of a greed for power, upon the part of some to temporize with the principles of protection, with the true principles of the Republican Party. The Republican Party is made up only of those who believe in the doctrine of protection to American opportunity—I put that first—American enterprise, and American industry. That is Republicanism. Any qualification of it sounds the step of retreat; and when I find a man retreating from the principles of a great party I suspect him either as lacking judgment or understanding or integrity of principle.

The people, constituting a majority in this country, favor the doctrine and practice of protection. By a majority of millions they favor it. All their voices are not raised in this hour of consideration and controversy; all their voices are not heard in great political contests; but they will register their principles at the polls.

Parties fall into mistakes. The party plank in the platform upon which the present administration came into power was a mistake, but the principles are no mistake. A misstatement of the principles derogates nothing from their soundness or their value. There are still in this country millions—and a majority of millions of the people—who believe in and stand by the principles of protection.

I noted a wave of mirth passing through the galleries when the Senator from Mississippi suggested that I had not taken into consideration the clothing of the people. I take that question into consideration when I speak for the prosperity of the people. Wool will not clothe the beggar; wool will not clothe those who have not the price with which to buy wool. It is only a tantalization to them. The first question is give the people an opportunity to engage in industrial enterprise that will be profitable to them; keep out, to the extent of the necessities of our own people, those who would invade our market and our field of opportunity, and then there will be no question about the people being able to wear woolen clothes in winter and pull the woolen blanket over them; but strike down profitable enterprise and industry of our own people, in order that we may make prosperous the people of other lands, and they will have no woolen cloth nor cotton cloth with which to clothe themselves.

After all, it is the opportunity, and when they have the opportunity you can trust the people to provide for their comforts, their luxuries, and their necessities; and when I speak of an enterprise so vast as this I am not driven from the lines of safety and conservative wisdom by any lead pencil that was ever manufactured or by array of figures. We have had enough experience to afford us a safe guide. We saw only a few years ago conditions arising from the abandonment of the protective-tariff policy of the Republicans and the Republican Party; and I do not include in that the trimmers for power or position or influence. When I speak of the Republican Party I do not include within my remarks those who are willing to trade off either for power or office or control of Government. I speak of the great mass, the great majority of the American people, who know what it is to be American citizens, who know and believe that the first right to the good things of the earth belongs to our own people. We hold no bounden duty to act as guardians for the people of other nations. We will absorb enough of the foreign trade under the rules of protection, as we always have done, to insure and maintain prosperity.

I heard it said in the memorable campaign of 1892 and again in 1896 that if we put up a tariff wall, as it was designated, we would lose our market for our surplus commodities and that no money would flow into our Treasury, because the people of other countries would refuse to do business with us; they would refuse to buy our surplus. Its fallacy was demonstrated beyond all possible question of controversy when our sales abroad doubled, when our foreign trade sprang forward with vigor and a certainty and a permanency which are only menaced by the threat to abandon that principle of government.

I say, again, bear in mind what it means to be a citizen of this Government; a part of it; and do not forget that because of being such citizen you have more rights than any other people or the citizens of any other country. That is protection. I will make no appeal to Republicans in this hour, but when I go among them to talk of this great principle of government, my plea will be addressed to the Republicans of the country, that they shall not forget the principles of protection, that they shall not compromise it, that they shall not apologize for it, that they shall not admit for a moment that the tariff is a tax upon our people. It is a tax upon the foreigner, levied as a condition to his entering our markets, and I would keep that tax as one of the assets of our Government.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. HEYBURN. In just a moment. I would not substitute for that indirect tax, if you please to term it such, a direct tax. I would not require our citizen to open his purse and take out the visible, solid money to contribute to the expense of our Government and relieve the foreigner of doing the corresponding thing.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me, the question I wanted to ask him is this: Of course, it would be a most charming arrangement if we could make the foreigner pay our taxes. The question I want to ask the learned Senator is, Why should we limit ourselves to collecting half of the tax from the foreigner? If the custom duties are paid by the foreigner, why not put all the burden on him?

Mr. HEYBURN. We are controlled by the volume of available income. If the customhouse would afford sufficient money to pay the expenses of our Government, I would collect it all there.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment. But it unfortunately does not afford sufficient income. You would destroy the source of income by shutting out all imports.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He first addressed the Chair.

Mr. REED. As I understand the Senator's remarks, he would put the taxes upon imports and take off all the internal-revenue taxes, by which I understand his real heart's desire is to take the tax off of whisky and put it upon clothing.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have heard that siren song so often and so long——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I understand the Senator from Idaho to state that the foreigner pays the tax. Now, if you believe that, I want to ask why, in the name of common sense, the Republican Party in their platform declared "We promise irrevocably to reduce the tariff"? Why, in the name of heaven, do you not let the foreigner keep on paying it? Why did you promise to reduce the tariff at all?

Mr. HEYBURN. I know of one, and I suspect the existence of a great many others, who never made any such promise and never believed in any such promise.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can recall, and your Republican platform will verify it, that you said "We promise irrevocably to reduce the tariff." What did you mean by "reducing irrevocably the tariff"? The idea then was that you were going to reduce it, and to-day you tell us that the foreigner pays the tax. Now, I want to ask, in reason, if the Senator believes it, why, in the name of heaven, you did not promise the people in your platform to multiply the tariff instead of reducing it? Why not have all of the burdens placed on the foreigner and let the American bask in the sunshine of favor if you believe it?

Mr. HEYBURN. In the first place, I do not believe it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is the cleanest and most straightforward statement from the protectionist side which I have heard for a good long time. I do not believe it, and I do not believe any American citizen with common sense believes the foreigner pays the tax.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not intend to discuss the question whether the foreigner pays the tax, except merely to make the statement so obvious——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask the Senator to consult his own Republican platform.

Mr. HEYBURN. It requires no array of figures. I said I would not be tempted to convert the Democracy to the doctrine of protection. I have regarded that kind of Democracy as a sort of example to hold up before the people, to show them what possible dangers threaten them. That is the use I have generally made of the Democratic Party, and I have generally based it upon its record. I speak only to those who ought to be Republicans. There are many men who ought not to be Republicans. You could not make them Republicans without remaking them, and I am perfectly content that Ephraim shall remain attached to his idols.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Idaho will enlighten us on one point, though, and that is that if the result of the imposition of tariff duties is to collect taxes out of the foreigner, why does the Republican Party propose to reduce the tax? What is the object or purpose of that proposition?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Republican Party is not proposing to reduce the tax. Some scared politicians are saying, "If you will just allow me to be part way good and elect me to office, I will be satisfied." But I am talking now to Republicans, the Republicans who constitute the party, not to officeholders.

Mr. BACON. The Senator does not dispute the fact that the Republican platform in 1908 promised a reduction of the tariff?

Mr. HEYBURN. I paid my respects to that platform a few minutes ago.

Mr. BACON. But I am speaking of that particular feature. I want to know upon what ground we should reduce the tariff if it does not cost the American anything.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Republican Party in 1892 promised to do the same thing, and the Republicans turned out of power those who made the promise. I do not know; I am not prophesying any evil for the Republican organization, but I think whenever the people become satisfied that they can not rely upon the Republican organization to maintain the protective tariff system they will repeat the lesson of 1892. But when they do they will have the lesson to live under. I know all about that plank in the platform. It was an injudicious, a disloyal, and an unfaithful declaration.

Mr. BACON. I am not going——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. But you stood on the platform advocating it, did you not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will address the Chair and get the permission of the Senator occupying the floor.

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to finish my suggestion in reply to the Senator from Georgia.

We have recently made a new platform in which we make no such declaration as in the former platform.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is of the opinion, then, that the rate of duty imposed upon imports does not affect the cost of living to those who have to use those articles?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; it does.

Mr. BACON. In what way, if the foreigner pays it?

Mr. HEYBURN. It does affect it. It affects the cost of living in this way—that under the Democratic policy men are compelled to live cheaply because they have little to live upon, while under the doctrine of protection men can live on a higher scale. They have more money to spend; they get more for pay; and they get more out of life.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. If I wanted cheap times to-day, I would step back and allow the Democratic Party to take charge of the Government.

Mr. BACON. I simply——

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to finish my sentence. I do not care to have it broken in the middle. I can tell you how to reduce the high cost of living, as it is termed—elect the Democratic Party to power and you will reduce it quickly and surely.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. We speak from experience. You can not possibly reduce the high cost of living by electing or retaining the Republican Party in power, because with it in power the people are able to live better. They have something with which to pay for better living under the Republican system of Government, and I have often felt impelled to reply to the plea for cheaper living by suggesting that the way to get it was to put the Democrats in power again.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield for a question.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator from Idaho says that the Republican Party insures a higher scale of living. The Senator, of course, will admit that the laws which govern us here in Washington, D. C., and in New Jersey and in Idaho govern Massachusetts. I should like to ask the Senator whether he believes that the people of Lawrence thought they were living on a high plane of living when they struck against the barbarism of a lot of men who were controlling the purse strings and managing the affairs of that city in factory, mill, and workshop? I should like the Senator's opinion on that.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will answer.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. If he can stand up for the system which has made paupers and beggars of men, women, and children in Lawrence, Mass., then I say there is no hope or salvation for the Senator on this side of the range.

Mr. HEYBURN. The way ordinarily to make a beggar of an occupied and prosperous individual is to take away his occupation, and then unless he has a large accumulation, he will soon be a beggar. If you are to let others into our market to occupy it to the exclusion of our own, you will soon accomplish that, because instead of our people living on a high scale, they will not be able to live at all, hardly. We have seen hard times in this country, but never under a Republican administration. No Senator will rise in his place and point to any hard times under a Republican administration. Financial flurries may come, but they go when the sun rises in the morning. They are the accidents.

But the business of the Democratic Party is to take away from the people the opportunity to earn enough to enable them to live upon a high scale. No Senator will dare deny that, in the light of our experience under the last Democratic administration. Under what Democratic administration have the people of this country, as a people, been prosperous? When did they accumulate money in the National Treasury? When were great business enterprises developed under Democratic administration? The truth of it is, that the people have had the temerity but once in the last half century or more to intrust the Democrats with it, and then they did it upon the plea that the peopple were so prosperous that nothing could affect their prosperity. I heard it on the stump and I saw it in the papers, and heard it everywhere, that no change in the tariff laws could possibly affect the prosperity of the American people, because their prosperity was so great—that they had so great a margin. And preaching that doctrine to a generation which, by experience, knew nothing of Democratic methods, they deceived people into intrusting the Democrats with power.

It was the tariff policy and practice of the Republican Party that rescued us from the conditions brought about by the Democratic Party, and it was the confidence that our American market would be protected to the American people that inspired them to reinstate business and start again the wheels of Government.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I am not surprised that the Senator should shift the argument from the one he was on. It is true that the one he now has has gotten to be rather weatherbeaten and worn, but the question the Senator raised by his statement was whether or not the foreigner pays the duty collected at our ports or whether the American people who consume the articles themselves indirectly pay it.

I want to say to the Senator that I know that some 30 or 40 years ago there was a school of protectionists who held to the doctrine that the foreigner did pay the tax, but I have been here in three tariff discussions, and this is the first time in that time that I have heard any Senator or read of any Representative within that period make that statement. I supposed that that was one of the recognized exploded doctrines.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I am not going to interrupt him further. I just want to add one sentence.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator says he never heard of it.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will not interrupt me further, I want to say that if the position of the Senator is correct it seems to me we waste a great deal of time in discussing the question of the tariff; the only thing to be discussed is, Does the foreigner pay the tax or does he not? If the foreigner does pay the tax, that ends the question.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if the Senator could divert all the reasoning of those who speak for the Republican Party into that channel, that might possibly be said; but even then I think probably it would not. The Senator has preached that doctrine in this Chamber and doubtless elsewhere, in season—I will not say out of season—for many years. I have listened to it for many years.

Mr. BACON. Never.

Mr. HEYBURN. About the foreigner paying the tax?

Mr. BACON. Never. I never have had occasion to do it.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is entirely consistent with the Senator's general attitude upon these questions. As I said, Ephraim is joined to his idols, and I will not disturb him. I have no idea that I could convert the Senator into a realization of the cold truth in this matter.

Now, Mr. President, I have not said more than I wanted to say, but I have occupied more time than I intended to occupy, and I have faith to believe that one never wastes time when he is talking the principles of the Republican Party.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. WARREN, Mr. SIMMONS, and others. The yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be taken by yeas and nays.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CUMMINS (when his name was called). Upon this vote I am paired with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. I am advised that if he were present he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). On this vote I am released from my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. I vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). Both upon principle and upon agreement with my pair I am released from the operation of that pair upon this vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DU PONT (when Mr. RICHARDSON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] is absent from the city. He is paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. If my colleague were present and free to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER] and vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). On this vote I have been able to arrange what I consider a suitable and proper pair. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY] and the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Under the terms of my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], which I have already stated, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. Not having been tendered another Senator, I feel at liberty to vote under my understanding with him, and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I think that perhaps I ought to state that I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], and that by an arrangement with him I would vote unless he would furnish me an additional pair on this subject, which was not done. I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. GORE. I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BAILEY. In addition to the statement I made a moment ago affecting my pair and my warrant under the circumstances in considering it not applicable to this division, I desire to say that I have hurriedly examined the RECORD, and I find that I have heretofore acted upon that theory. I find that when the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was before the Senate I was paired, but that I was paired with two Senators. I find that on the same occasion the then Senator from Utah, Mr. Rawlins, was also paired, and paired with two Senators. I am further confirmed in my opinion by the fact that two Senators on our own side who expressed some doubt about it on the former roll call have now transferred their pairs each to two Senators, thus recognizing the propriety that there shall be two against one.

Supported and confirmed by all this, I intend to vote; and I want to couple that vote with the further statement that I think it ought to be understood in the Senate, without embarrassing any Senator to decide it, that a pair is man for man, and that a pair made under those circumstances is not to be held when it is one for two. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN. My colleague [Mr. CLARK of Wyoming] is necessarily absent. He is paired, as stated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], with two Senators, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence from the Chamber of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON].

The roll call resulted—yeas 39, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—39.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-nine Senators have voted in the affirmative and 36 have voted in the negative. Less than two-thirds of the Senators voting having voted in the affirmative, the bill is not passed.

FREIGHT CLASSIFICATION.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is a unanimous-consent agreement which takes effect immediately after the disposition of the wool bill. I assume that automatically we enter upon the consideration of that bill, Senate bill 6099.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unanimous-consent agreement reads "that at not later than 4 o'clock p. m. on that calendar day the Senate will proceed, without further debate, to vote upon any amendment," and so forth.

Mr. CUMMINS. As I said this morning, the unanimous-consent agreement is not correctly stated upon the calendar. It was that at 4 o'clock we take up the bill and proceed, and so forth, or before or after that hour, subject to the disposition of the wool bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would rule that the unanimous-consent agreement is operative at the present time.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think it will require five minutes to dispose of the bill, and then we will be free from its operation to-morrow morning.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call attention to the fact that there is a special order by a vote of the Senate for to-morrow morning. I object to any unanimous-consent agreement that will interfere with it.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CUMMINS. The unanimous-consent agreement is in force and there is nothing in order save to fulfill it, as I understand the procedure of the Senate.

Mr. OLIVER and others. Regular order!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that a motion to adjourn or to proceed to the consideration of executive business would be in order.

Mr. CULLOM. I withdraw the motion with the understanding that the bill is not going to take much time. After it has been disposed of I shall desire an executive session.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not believe it will take five minutes to dispose of it. I am sure that everyone will be glad to come here in the morning without having the unanimous-consent agreement in force.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill, which is Senate bill 6099.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 6099) to amend section 15 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended June 29, 1906, and June 18, 1910.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 15 of the act to regulate commerce, as approved February 4, 1887, and as amended June 29, 1906, and further amended June 18, 1910, be further amended by inserting between the first and second sentences thereof the following sentence: "The commission is further authorized and empowered to determine and prescribe what will be the just and reasonable general or uniform classification of freight, both individual and joint, applicable on interstate commerce throughout the United States governing the descriptions of articles transported by and the regulations and practices of the carriers subject to the provisions of this act, and to make orders that the said carriers shall adopt the said classification and such amendments thereto as the commission shall prescribe from time to time, and shall conform to and observe the regulations and practices so prescribed."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24322) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL, Mr. RUCKER of Colorado, and Mr. WOOD of New Jersey managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24602) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL, Mr. RUCKER of Colorado, and Mr. WOOD of New Jersey managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24996) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL, Mr. RUCKER of Colorado, and Mr. WOOD of New Jersey managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25166) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL, Mr. RUCKER of Colorado, and Mr. WOOD of New Jersey managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 14770. An act for the relief of Martin A. L. Olsen; and

H. R. 18965. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24322) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. BURNHAM, and Mr. GORE conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 40 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 7 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, August 17, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, August 16, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, whose spirit pervades all space with rays divine, creating, recreating, guiding intelligence to the highest and noblest conceptions of life, help us to subject ourselves to the holy influence, that we may think clearly, act wisely, and fulfill our destiny, to the honor and glory of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

There was no objection.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the House adopted a resolution, appearing on page 11039 of the RECORD:

> That immediately on the adoption of this rule it shall be in order to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 21279, a bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, together with the Senate amendments thereto, and to disagree to all the Senate amendments en bloc and ask for a conference notwithstanding the general rules of the House, and the Speaker shall, on the adoption of the resolution, appoint the conferees without any intervening motion.

The Journal does not show that the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, and while the rule made it in order, no motion was made to take it from the Speaker's table, no motion was made to disagree to the Senate amendments, the Senate amendments were not disagreed to, so far as the Journal and the facts are concerned, and the parliamentary inquiry is whether it is in order now, following the rule, to move to take this bill from the Speaker's table and disagree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair at first blush, and the Chair is not deciding it at this time, that the matter is an accomplished fact.

Mr. MANN. It is true that under the rule the Speaker appointed conferees, I think without authority, and it is also true that the bill theoretically is still on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but actually it has already gone to the conferees.

Mr. MANN. That is without authority. They have no authority to act. The House has not disagreed to the Senate amendments. While it was made in order to do this, it was not done, nor was any resolution passed notifying the Senate that the House had disagreed to the Senate amendments, if the Journal is correct.

The SPEAKER. The Chair undoubtedly was obeying literally this rule, because the last part of it reads:

> And the Speaker shall, on the adoption of the resolution, appoint the conferees without any intervening motion.

Mr. MANN. Does that refer to this resolution? It does not say this resolution. Does it not refer to the resolution disagreeing to the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. Of course, as far as the language of the rule is concerned, it refers to this resolution that the Committee on Rules was offering. There can not be two opinions about that.

Mr. MANN. I should have supposed it would refer to the resolution disagreeing to the Senate amendments, because whenever Senate amendments are disagreed to the Journal shows that the House has passed the resolution disagreeing to the Senate amendments.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I did not quite catch the Chair's ruling. Does the Chair hold that the motion to disagree is necessary?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not ruled yet. There is one of two ways out of it. The Journal can be corrected by common consent to make it show that the actual thing was done or the Chair will again put the question.

Mr. MANN. But I do not think the Journal can be corrected to show that something was done which was not in fact done.

The SPEAKER. Mr. Speaker CANNON ruled a number of times that by unanimous consent anything can be done, and the Chair thinks he was right.

Mr. MANN. That may be.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no disposition to undertake to deprive the gentleman or anyone else of any right, and he thinks, under the statement of the matter that the conferees were appointed prematurely. That is the opinion of the Chair, although from a hasty reading of the rule last night in the uproar that was going on the Chair thought that the rule itself did everything except to appoint the conferees.

Mr. MANN. If the Chair will permit, I supposed myself, without even hearing the resolution read, that it did send the bill to conference.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair understood.

Mr. MANN. But it did not.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move, under the rule, that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference, and that the Speaker appoint the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to take the bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and send it to conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have an intervening motion. I move that the bill, with the Senate amendments, be committed to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, with directions to that committee to forthwith report that bill with the recommendation that Senate amendment No. 118 be agreed to.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that proposition is out of order under the rule adopted by the House, and I move the previous question on my motion.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on that point of order.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. AKIN of New York. My point of order is that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-two Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves the call of the House. The Chair will count. [After counting.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 121, noes 9.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees. When the roll is called——

Mr. MANN. The question has not been put to the House yet. It is a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes that is correct.

The roll was called and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ames	Dupré	Konig	Pujo

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and forty-six Members are present, a quorum, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has studied this rule which was adopted last night and has come to these conclusions: The Chair believes that a strict or technical construction of what was done last night seems to be a substantial compliance, or an exact compliance, with the rule, because at the end of the rule it says:

And the Speaker shall, on the adoption of the resolution, appoint the conferees without any intervening motion.

But, nevertheless and notwithstanding, to remove any doubt, and because there might be possible legal entanglements, the Chair is inclined to entertain the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee. At the same time he will state his opinion about the proposed motion of the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. MANN. Does the Chair prefer to hear the gentleman from Illinois before making up his mind?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question.

Mr. MANN. Well, I know, but on the point of order would not the Chair prefer to hear me before he decides?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order whether under this rule adopted last night, that is, the one we are proceeding under, any motion can be made except the one made by the gentleman from Tennessee, because his motion embraces everything in this rule. Now, if the gentleman wants to be heard, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard. A year ago in March an almost identical, similar proposition came before the House under conditions far more exciting than any that are likely to occur here now. The tariff-commission bill, which had passed the House, went to the Senate, was amended by the Senate, and was returned to the House, with Senate amendments, about 9 or 10 o'clock on the 4th of March, the hour for final adjournment being fixed by the Constitution at 12 o'clock noon of that day. A filibuster was being carried on by gentlemen on the Democratic side against final consideration of the Senate amendment. As the Chair will remember, there was considerable excitement and very high tension in the House. Under those conditions the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], the ranking Republican on the Committee on Rules, reported to the House this rule:

Resolved, That when the bill H. R. 32010, "An act to create a tariff board," shall have been received from the Senate the Speaker shall immediately, without regard to pending business, lay it before the House, and thereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered on a motion to concur in the Senate amendments in gross.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] made the point of order that that would cut out a motion to recommit, and the Chair held that it would not if the motion to recommit was in order. The resolution from the Committee on Rules was agreed to by a roll call, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] offered a motion, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I move to commit the Senate amendments to the Committee on Ways and Means, and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

A point of order was made against that motion that it was not in order to move to commit Senate amendments to the committee at all, and especially not after the rule had been adopted. The point of order was discussed, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] in the midst of that excitement, between 10 and 11 o'clock in the morning, or later, after 11 o'clock, I am not sure, when the final determination of this question that divided two great political parties was at stake, it depending only upon a few minutes of time for success on this side or defeat on that side, Mr. Speaker CANNON, with rare moral courage and with a devotion to fairness which characterized him while Speaker, had, in conformity with the precedents, to uphold the right of the minority to move to commit a Senate amendment to the Committee on Ways and Means. The Speaker said:

The Chair has ruled out, and in the opinion of the Chair properly so, all dilatory motions, as was his duty under the rules of the House. There are certain motions; there are certain demands that can not be held as dilatory. One is the demand for the yeas and nays. The rules of the House govern the House, and the Chair finds a precedent in this case exactly in point which the Chair believes to be sound in principle. The Chair reads from page 287, volume 5, of Hinds' Precedents:

"The previous question having been ordered on a motion to agree to a Senate amendment to a House bill, a motion to commit is in order. On November 1, 1893, the House was considering the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 1) to repeal a part of the act of July 14, 1890, relating to the purchase of silver bullion. Mr. Leonidas F. Livingston, of Georgia, submitted the question of order whether, after the previous question should have been ordered on the motion to concur in the Senate amendment, it would be in order to commit the bill and amendments to the committee with instructions."

The Speaker expressed the opinion that the motion to commit would in such case be in order.

This is a quotation from Hinds' Precedents. Mr. Speaker CANNON continued:

That is a ruling by Mr. Speaker Crisp, and the Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the motion to commit the Senate amendments to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. Speaker CANNON, following the rules, and following the ruling of Mr. Speaker Crisp, held the motion to commit to the Committee on Ways and Means was in order. Now, that was the case where the previous question had been ordered under the rule. Gentlemen will say now that the previous question is not ordered under this rule. The pending rule which was adopted provides——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask a question of fact? I am trying to follow what the gentleman says and I have not got it clearly in my mind. I wish to ask if in the case he refers to the resolution from the Committee on Rules had been adopted previous to the motion to commit being made?

Mr. MANN. It had been adopted on a roll call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question to elucidate the subject somewhat.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. And that is that the report made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], if the Chair correctly caught the reading of it, did not have in it any such clause as this?

Mr. MANN. I am going to discuss that question, Mr. Speaker. I know what the Speaker has in mind. The pending rule provides that immediately on the adoption of this rule it shall be in order to take from the Speaker's table the Post Office appropriation bill, and to disagree to all the Senate amendments en bloc, and ask for a conference, notwithstanding the general rules of the House, and the Speaker shall, on the adoption of the resolution, appoint the conferees without any intervening motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman two questions. The first one is, Does not the gentleman think—although the Chair gives him the benefit of the doubt—but really does not the gentleman think that this resolution that we adopted last night intended to do everything that is said in it may be done except that the Chair shall appoint the conferees?

Mr. MANN. I was informed by the distinguished gentleman who reported the resolution that that was not the intention of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. If that was not the intention of the rule, what was the intention of the rule?

Mr. MANN. I think the intention of the rule was very plain, to make it in order to take the bill from the Speaker's table, to disagree to the Senate amendments en bloc, and ask for a conference. That is what the rule says, and when that motion should be agreed to, if it should be agreed to, then without further or any intervening motion between the adoption of the resolution the Speaker should appoint conferees.

The SPEAKER. If that is true, what sense is there—to use a common phrase—in the proposition that the Speaker, on the adoption of the resolution, shall appoint conferees without an intervening motion?

Mr. MANN. The Speaker reads the resolution as referring to this resolution. I do not think that is what it means.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman another question. We want to arrive at the truth of this matter if we can. The motion that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] made a while ago was precisely the motion that he would have made if this rule had not been adopted.

Mr. MANN. I beg the Chair's pardon. He would not have been authorized to make that motion if this rule had not been adopted.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. If the construction contended for by the gentleman from Illinois is the one that we entertained last night, why did he oppose the adoption of the rule? The adoption of the rule with the construction that he now gives it would have brought the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman is asking a parliamentary inquiry, the Chair will state that the Chair does not know.

Mr. MANN. While the gentleman from Wisconsin has that haze in his mind, I will say that under the rule it would not have been possible to have a separate vote on the parcel-post proposition, and that is the reason why I opposed it, and that is the reason I gave last night.

The SPEAKER. This motion that the gentleman made is surely not a resolution. It is a motion.

Mr. MANN. I beg the Chair's pardon; but when this motion of the gentleman is journalized and sent to the Senate it will be preceded by the words "Resolved by the House of Representatives," and so on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman another question. This Dalzell resolution did not have any of those words in it—"notwithstanding the general rules of the House." Those words are not in that rule, are they?

Mr. MANN. No.

The SPEAKER. Then, does the gentleman from Illinois contend that the Dalzell rule and the Henry rule are the same?

Mr. MANN. In effect the same.

The SPEAKER. Does not that very clause change the sense of the whole thing?

Mr. MANN. Not in the slightest degree.

The SPEAKER. What was it put in for, then?

Mr. MANN. Nobody knows. It would have the same effect, whether it were in or out. But under the general rules of the House the motion to take this bill—the Post Office appropriation bill—from the Speaker's table is not in order at all. Under the rules of the House there is no distinction between general rules and other rules.

The SPEAKER. Suppose this rule or any other rule brought in here provided in so many words that for this occasion all the rules of the House shall be suspended. Does that differ at all from the meaning of this rule?

Mr. MANN. I think so, because it is not to be supposed that the Committee on Rules deliberately attempted to violate one of the rules of the House, and the rules of the House provide that the Committee on Rules shall not report any rule or order which shall operate to prevent a motion to recommit being made, as provided in paragraph 4 of Rule XVI. Here is a prohibition on the Committee on Rules.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman this: Suppose this rule had been brought in here, notwithstanding what the gentleman reads, and, as provided for yesterday, all the rules of the House should be suspended and the House had agreed to that rule, would not that have been binding on the Speaker and on everybody in the House?

Mr. MANN. If the Committee on Rules had reported in a rule in violation of this rule and no point of order had been made and the rule had been agreed to, undoubtedly it would bind the House. But the rule that has been reported in does not attempt——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. When I have finished this sentence I will yield. The rule that has been brought in does not attempt to shut off the motion to recommit. It only shuts off the motion between the adoption of the Senate amendments and the appointment of the conferees. It is perfectly plain. The rule of practice has been for many years that the only time you can offer a resolution of instruction is between the time you ask for a conference and the time for appointing conferees; and the only purpose of this rule concerning an intervening motion was to say that there should be no intervening motion between asking for a conference and appointing conferees. It cuts off the motion to instruct the conferees. That is what it plainly does. That is what it plainly was intended to do, and nothing else.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he will state under which rule he claims the right to make his motion.

Mr. MANN. Under Rule XVI or Rule XVII; it does not make any difference which. They are treated alike.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But under which one?

Mr. MANN. It could be made under either Rule XVI or Rule XVII; it does not make any difference which.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does make a difference. One may authorize it and the other may not.

Mr. MANN. The motion to commit and the motion to recommit have been treated precisely alike, both under Rule XVI and under Rule XVII. Rule XVI says that in giving recognition it must be given to those in opposition. The other rule does not say that. There is practically no difference between the rules.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is this difference, that while Rule XVI prohibits the cutting off of a motion to recommit, the right to cut off the motion to recommit is not affected under Rule XVII.

Mr. MANN. This cuts off the right to move to recommit, and I take it that no Speaker will ever draw the line that the gentleman is drawing, even if my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] should ever reach the position of Speaker. Even he would not draw such a distinction.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think I would.

Mr. MANN. He made the motion before under precisely the same rules that I am seeking to make this motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair requests the gentleman to read that Dalzell rule again.

Mr. MANN. It reads:

Resolved, That when the bill H. R. 32110, an act to create a tariff board, shall have been received from the Senate the Speaker shall immediately, without regard to pending business, lay it before the House. Thereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered on a motion to concur in the Senate amendments in gross.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield? I want to ask him about a question of fact.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman stated that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] interrogated the Speaker and asked about the proper time to make the motion to recommit.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; he did not ask about the proper time to make a motion to recommit.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will put it this way: When did he ask the Speaker if the motion to recommit would be in order? Was it after the adoption of the rule or before?

Mr. MANN. He did not ask whether it would be in order at all. He made the motion to recommit——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I understood the gentleman to read some parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. He made the point of order on the original report—on the rule—that it would cut out the motion to recommit.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That is what I am trying to get at. Now, when was that done? At what stage of the proceedings?

Mr. MANN. That was when the rule was reported.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. In this case the gentleman from Illinois did not make such a point of order, and the rule has been adopted.

Mr. MANN. I made a point of order, which was overruled, although that was not the reason; and, while the gentleman says the rule was adopted, it was adopted without a quorum of the House being present, although I have not yet raised that point.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It was adopted——

Mr. MANN. It was not adopted. The Journal shows that it was adopted, but there was not a quorum of the House voting and present, although there was recorded a quorum of the House. It was made a quorum by recording a gentleman who was not present.

The SPEAKER. Clearly the Dalzell rule is differentiated from this rule in two respects. In the first place, there is not a word in the Dalzell rule about allowing no intervening motion, and, in the second place, there is not a word in the Dalzell rule about suspending the rule of the House. That is what this rule that we adopted here last night practically does.

Mr. MANN. Any special rule which is in conflict with the general rules suspends, to that extent, all the general rules of the House. It is not necessary to put it in. It is just like passing a law which conflicts with a prior law. To the extent that it does it repeals the prior law, although you may not say it in the act itself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not contend seriously, does he, that his motion is at all in the category of a motion to recommit, made when you have finished up a bill and after third reading?

Mr. MANN. Ah, but the same question was resolved by Mr. Speaker CANNON under precisely the same conditions. The Senate amendments were still on the Speaker's table. The gentleman from New York made the motion to commit under the same provisions as relate to a bill after the previous question is ordered on its passage, and Mr. Speaker CANNON, under the conditions then prevailing, conditions of excitement, kept his coolness and fairness and ruled that it was in order. I think that what Mr. Speaker CANNON did, Mr. Speaker CLARK can well afford to do.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. In that case the gentleman from New York made the point of order against the rule when it was reported, and the Speaker gave notice that at the proper time he would allow the motion to recommit, and he kept faith with the gentleman from New York; whereas in this case, when the rule was reported the previous question had been ordered by agreement, and according to the Journal the resolution had been adopted, and up to this time the gentleman has not endeavored to make a motion to recommit.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. I made the motion to recommit.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman made it to-day.

Mr. MANN. The point of order was made upon it. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. I voted with the gentleman last night, but I am not able to agree with his construction of what was adopted. This resolution, beginning with the word "Resolved," says that on its adoption it shall be in order to disagree notwithstanding the general rules of the House. Now, having mentioned the fact in the rule that it shall be in order to disagree, is anything else in order but a motion to concur?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has intimated two or three times that he thought not.

Mr. MANN. But the motion is pending. I have offered what I consider a motion of higher privilege under the rules of the House. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] will state to the House that he deliberately intended, without saying so, to avoid the motion to recommit, let him state that to the House. I should not have so construed the rule or I should have made the point of order then that the Committee on Rules could not report a rule which shut out the right to commit.

I ask the Speaker for the same fairness that was granted the minority by Speaker CANNON when he gave the gentleman from New York the right to move to recommit the tariff bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, precisely the same situation. If the gentleman from Texas admits that this rule was a subterfuge, that he endeavored to have something in it that was not expressed in it, then he goes beyond, in my opinion, what he ought to do. I do not believe that the rule itself provides against the motion to recommit or attempts to shut out a motion to recommit, which is guaranteed by the rules of the House. That was one of the reform rules inserted in the House rules because the Democratic Members said that it had been the custom for the Speaker to recognize a man on the majority side to move to recommit in order to prevent a vote, and thereupon we adopted the reform rule. Now, when we want to make use of it, gentlemen endeavor to escape from its conclusion by claiming that they brought in a rule not plain on its face, but by which they intended to keep out the reform which they adopted. We have the right under the rule to make the motion to recommit or to commit, and I stand upon that right and upon fairness in the matter. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Illinois overlooks some important facts in this matter. There is a distinction between a motion to recommit made under Rule XVI and one under Rule XVII. They both provide for a motion to recommit after the previous question is ordered; under Rule XVI a gentleman opposed to the plan proposed is entitled to recognition, while he is not under Rule XVII.

But, Mr. Speaker, I assume that the gentleman does not contend that he has been recognized, because he has been discussing his rights to move to recommit after the previous question has been ordered. I shall proceed upon the theory that if the previous question be ordered the gentleman then insists that he has a right to move to recommit.

The case cited by the gentleman is different from the case now before the House. The Dalzell rule, to which he has referred, provided that immediately upon the receipt of the bill creating the Tariff Commission from the Senate, the Speaker, regardless of what was pending before the House, should lay the bill with the Senate amendments before the House, the previous question should be considered as ordered on a motion to concur in the Senate amendments. If the motion prevailed, the bill would have been passed. If the House had agreed to the Senate amendments, the bill would have been passed.

So, as soon as the rule was adopted, with the previous question considered as ordered on a motion to concur in the Senate amendments, the situation existed provided for in Rule XVI, to wit, that after the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of a bill or joint resolution one motion to recommit shall be in order, and the Speaker shall give preference in recognition to those in opposition.

Under the clear reading of the rule and the spirit of the rule, when the previous question is ordered upon the motion to concur in all the Senate amendments, then the vote to concur is equivalent to a vote on the question of the passage of the bill. This is so because concurrence in the amendments passes the bill.

That is not this situation. The Post Office bill is on the Speaker's table, with Senate amendments. The gentleman from Tennessee moved, under this special order, to take the bill from the Speaker's table, to disagree to the amendments of the Senate en bloc, and to ask for a conference. That is not the same as a motion to concur in all the Senate amendments; nor is it a motion which is equivalent to the question to be taken on the passage of the bill, because if the motion fails it is not equivalent to agreeing to the Senate amendments, as it would be if the Senate amendments were properly before the House and the motion were made to nonconcur. The failure of that motion would be equivalent to a motion to agree, and that would be equivalent to the question being taken on the passage of the bill.

But, under this rule, if the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee fails, the bill with the Senate amendments remains on the Speaker's table, and, under the rule, must be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I want to have it perfectly clear whether or not there has been any time hitherto under which a motion to recommit the Post Office bill has been in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes or no?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Has there been any time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There has not, and the gentleman understands why.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I understand perfectly, but I want to bring it out in the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the rules of the House, the bill coming from the Senate with Senate amendments, it goes to the Speaker's table; and, under the rule, unless some other action be taken, it is referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. Before the Speaker took that action the Committee on Rules reported an order which authorized a motion to take the bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Under the Dalzell rule, if the motion to concur in the Senate amendments were agreed to, the bill was passed, but under Rule XVI, the previous question having been ordered on that motion, which was equivalent to the question being taken on the passage of the bill, the motion to recommit was in order. Under this rule this motion, if not agreed to, does not have the effect that the other motion to nonconcur or to disagree would have. Under this rule, if this motion of the gentleman from Tennessee fails, then the bill remains on the Speaker's table, because it never comes from the Speaker's table, and, under the rule, nothing is left to the Speaker but to refer it to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois will disagree with that statement.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the gentleman from New York, who knows parliamentary law, would lend himself to such a suggestion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I am astounded that the gentleman from Illinois should take a case which is so clear that it can not be questioned and attempt to make it apply to one so different.

Mr. MANN. Just a year ago I was honest enough to go to the Speaker and tell him I thought the gentleman from New York was entitled to be recognized for the purpose of making the motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have done the same thing when the gentleman has made points of order and made motions which I believed to be correct. I have so informed the Speaker, and the Speaker has ruled in practically all instances in which such matters have arisen with the gentleman. But it is clear that under Rule XVI, if the Chair will refer to it, which gives preferential right to recognition to the gentlemen on the other side, the motion to recommit shall be in order after the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of the bill or the joint resolution, and the proper construction of that is that upon any vote which in effect passes the bill, if the previous question has been ordered, then the motion to recommit is in order. But this is not equivalent to such a motion, because the failure of this motion to take from the Speaker's table and disagree to the Senate amendments will not be the equivalent of a motion to agree, but it permits the bill to remain on the Speaker's table, to be referred under the rule. If the gentleman insists that his motion is in order after the previous question is ordered, I am quite confident he is mistaken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide all of these things at once. The gentleman from Tennessee made a motion to carry out the intention of this rule, and on that motion he has moved the previous question. As the Chair understands it, the gentleman from Illinois desires to move to commit.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offered a motion to commit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not entertain the motion.

Mr. MANN. A point of order was made.

The SPEAKER. The motion was made out of time. After the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee for the previous question is agreed to, then, to be certain, to be upon the safe side, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois to make his motion.

The Chair desires to state another thing: The two portions of this rule that were adopted last night—the first part and the last part—seem to be in conflict with each other, and reading the last clause the Chair was undoubtedly authorized to do what he did do. The Chair thinks the rule intended to do what the Chair thought the rule had done.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard for a few moments on the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made up his mind, but if the gentleman desires to be heard, very well.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I think that I owe it to myself as chairman of the Committee on Rules to discuss that rule for a few moments. The Committee on Rules carefully considered the rule, and what they had in mind was this, that when this resolution should be adopted it would be in order for the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] to make the motion that he has now made, to take the bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference, and not that the rule itself is self-executing, as the Speaker has construed it. We should take it sentence by sentence, and the first thing provided for should be done after the previous question was ordered and the resolution adopted by the House. I dislike to disagree with the Speaker in his construction of the rule, but maintain that there can not be any conflict in the provisions of the rule, because after it was adopted, then by the express language of the rule it was in order for the gentleman from Tennessee to make his motion, and he should have made it. But, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the gentleman from Tennessee did not make the motion, and as the Chair proceeded to execute his part of the rule and to appoint the conferees, then the supposition must be true that the balance of the rule was executed, because there was no point of order made against it and there was no opposition to it. To go a little further, then the gentleman's motion would have been in order, and to be sure that my position may be clearly understood, his motion to commit would have been in order if the gentleman from Tennessee had followed the provisions of the rule and had made a motion and asked for a conference. Then the Post Office bill would have been before the House of Representatives, and the motion to recommit clearly would have been in order, and there was no desire to cut it off under the circumstances.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman from Tennessee did not make his motion.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. He did not, as I understand it, although I was not here.

Mr. NORRIS. And this morning he has made it, and under the gentleman's own construction is it not now in order for the gentleman from Illinois to make his motion to recommit?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not think that the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is in order now, because the presumption should be that the resolution was executed, and that part of it was executed.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman just admitted that the motion now made was in order, and that the Rules Committee intended it should be made.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It was in order at the right time last night, but it is not in order now.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman admits also that when that motion was made then it would have been proper for the gentleman from Illinois to make the motion he has made.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. At the proper time after this resolution was adopted yesterday, when the bill was laid before the House, it would have been in order, and it was not the intention to cut off a motion to recommit when the Post Office bill was laid before the House.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman tell when that time was that the gentleman from Illinois could have offered his motion?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. He could have offered it when the resolution was adopted yesterday and the bill brought before the House on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. NORRIS. He could not have offered it until after the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee was made?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. When it was brought before the House by his motion the gentleman from Illinois could have offered it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion for the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to commit the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 21279 to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads with instructions to that committee to report it back forthwith with the recommendation that Senate amendment numbered 118 be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman for that purpose, and does it for the following reason: There was a controversy about the motion to recommit and the motion to commit and all that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized to move an amendment to the gentleman's motion to commit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman in a moment. On page 380, under Rule XVI, is the following language:

> After the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of a bill or joint resolution one motion to recommit shall be in order, and the Speaker shall give preference in recognition of such purpose to a Member who is opposed to the bill or joint resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this motion is not equivalent to the passage of a bill, because if it fails the bill remains on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. If this motion fails, then the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee will prevail, in all probability.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But if the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee does prevail, the bill is not passed, and if it does, the bill does not leave the Speaker's table. The previous question has not been ordered on any motion which is equivalent to the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to say a motion to commit is only to be made before the passage of the bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I am referring to the statement of the Speaker that under Rule XVI those in opposition are entitled to recognition for a motion to recommit after the previous question has been ordered on the passage of a bill or joint resolution.

Mr. MANN. The bill may never be passed.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair prefers to be on the safe side.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Chair will indulge me, I agree with the Chair to the extent that it was right to recognize some one for a motion to recommit, and the gentleman from Illinois having been recognized, has made a proper motion, but I think it would be a great mistake if the Chair was to hold under the present situation that the right to make the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois arises under Rule XVI, because it does not, in my judgment. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has stated, the right under Rule XVI to move to recommit, which is given to a Member in opposition, arises only after a motion for the previous question has been ordered on the passage of a bill or joint resolution. Now, under Rule XVII the language is as follows:

> It shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee.

The SPEAKER. Where does the gentleman read from?

Mr. SHERLEY. From page 388 of the Manual, Rule XVII. Now, it is under that rule that the gentleman from Illinois, being recognized, had the right to move to commit, but he had no preferential right to recognition, and if somebody else had been recognized by the Chair he could have made the motion to commit. That is the reason I did not desire the Chair to base his ruling on Rule XVI, where the right is a preferential one.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is right about that. It is Rule XVII, and the Chair was trying to find it, but could not. The Chair recognized the gentleman, and that sets at rest who is to be recognized. Now, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, at the time I desired recognition I did not understand the gentleman from Tennessee was going to make a motion to amend.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I propose an amendment to strike out all of the section known as the Bourne amendment in the bill and substitute the following, and on that I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Strike out the substitute for section 8 of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the following——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. It is a motion to recommit the motion and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. No; it is to strike out the Senate amendment and substitute this.

Mr. MANN. Well, I make the point of order that can not be done.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It is a motion to strike out all that is known as the Bourne amendment and insert in lieu thereof part of it as a substitute.

Mr. MANN. With directions to the committee to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment as follows.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Not at all. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to recommit and substitute. It provides for all his resolution except the Bourne bill.

Mr. MANN. It is to agree with an amendment striking out and inserting?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It reports it back with that recommendation?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recommit with instructions.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the Postmaster General is hereby directed to establish in the United States, including its Territories and the District of Columbia, an experimental parcel post which shall embrace fourth-class mail matter, farm and factory products, and books and matter commonly shipped by express companies, not exceeding 15 pounds in weight nor 72 inches in length and girth combined, nor in form likely to injure the person of any postal employee, and subject to such packing and shipping regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe for the protection of the mail equipment and mail matter. The Postmaster General shall make provision by regulation for the indemnification of shippers, for shipment injured or lost, by insurance or otherwise, and, when desired, for the collection on delivery of the postage and price of the article shipped, fixing such charges as may be necessary to pay the cost of such additional services.

That the rates of postage on such parcels shall be as follows: For parcels shipped to any point within the county where mailed, or to a point in a contiguous county not more than 100 miles distant, hereby designated as the "local" zone, 5 cents for the first pound or fraction thereof and 1 cent for each additional pound or fraction thereof; for parcels shipped beyond points included in the foregoing local zone, 6 cents for the first pound or fraction thereof, and at the rate of 2 cents for each additional pound of actual weight for the first 150 miles or less, and an additional cent a pound for each additional 150 miles of distance from the point of mailing or consignment to the point of destination: Provided, That for no distance shall the charge exceed a rate of 12 cents a pound for the actual weight shipped, and that the rate for shipments of 4 ounces and less shall remain as hitherto established by law.

The point of consignment, except in the local zone, shall be taken as the county seat of the county in which the parcel is mailed, and the point of destination as the county seat of the county to which the parcel is consigned, and measurements of distance between such points shall be made by radial measurement on maps to be provided by the Postmaster General. The word "county," as used in this section, shall include a parish and similar political divisions.

That the classification of articles mailable, as well as the weight limit, the rates of postage, and other conditions of mailability under this section, shall be treated as experimental only, and if the Postmaster General shall find on experience that they or any of them are such as to prevent the shipment of articles desirable, or to permanently render the cost of the service greater than the receipts of the revenue therefrom, he is hereby directed to re-form from time to time such classification, weight limit, rates, or conditions, or either, in order to promote the service to the public or to insure the receipt of revenue from such service adequate to pay the cost thereof.

That in order to the more economical administration of this section, the President is hereby authorized, subject to the consent of the Senate, to appoint three persons expert in transportation matters at salaries of $5,000 per annum, respectively, to act as board of experts under the direction of the Postmaster General, in the execution of this section, and for the efficient conduct of the service hereby established.

That the Postmaster General shall have power from time to time to cause to be weighed the matter shipped by the express companies by post road common carriers, by rail or water, and ascertain the rate of compensation per pound or ton-mile payable therefor by such express company to such post road common carrier, by rail or water, on shipments, and thereupon it shall be the duty of such post road common carrier, at the request in writing of the Postmaster General, to transport and carry parcels mailable under this section, for the Post Office Department, at the rate of compensation per ton-mile thus determined: Provided, That if there be a dispute as to the substantial accuracy of such weighing and computations by the Postmaster General, such post road common carrier shall be entitled to appeal from the request or order of the Postmaster General to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which shall thereupon have power to determine the facts in controversy.

That the Postmaster General shall have power by regulation to determine from time to time the points at which collection and delivery shall be established for such parcels, and the weight limit thereof, to correspond with the facilities of the Postal Department for rendering such service, and he shall provide such special equipment, maps, stamps indicating weight of shipment and distance traversed, directories, and printed instructions as may be necessary for the administration of this section; and to supplement existing appropriations, including the hiring of teams and drivers and other vehicles, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $750,000.

That the establishment of this experimental parcel post shall go into effect two months after the passage of this act, and that all acts or parts of acts in conflict with this section are hereby repealed.

That for the purpose of a complete and full inquiry and investigation into the feasibility and propriety of the establishment of a general parcel post, or system of postal express, a joint committee of six persons (Members of Congress), three of whom shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and three by the President of the Senate, is constituted, with full power to appoint clerks, stenographers, and experts to assist them in this work. They shall review the testimony already taken on the subject of parcel post and postal express by Senate and House committees and take such other testimony as they deem desirable. That the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall furnish such data and otherwise render such assistance to the said committee as may be desired or available. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of this committee the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The committee shall report fully to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the amendment, in that it strikes out all of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. In other words, it is an entirely new and different one, and, in effect, takes away from the minority the right to make the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to construe the rules as they ought to be construed——

Mr. NORRIS. I think so, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. In the first place, while Rule XVII does not require the Chair to give preference, the Chair did give preference to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as representing the minority, but the limits of amending a motion to recommit are just as wide as the limits amending any other proposition.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, Mr. Speaker, this motion which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] proposes is in the nature of a substitute——

The SPEAKER. Yes; that is true.

Mr. NORRIS (continuing). Entirely independent and entirely supersedes the entire motion of the gentleman from Illinois. If it is in order, then the Chair, in trying to recognize the minority to make a motion to recommit could be frustrated every time by the man having charge of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not believe that at all. The Chair thinks that when the Chair has given to the minority a right to make a motion, although Rule XVII does not recognize and does not require it, though Rule XVI does, and when the majority exercises that right under the preference given by the item to make the motion, then the motion is in the hands of the House and subject to every rule of the House and to every rule of amendment. But there is no question in the mind of the Chair but that the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] is germane to the subject, and it does not take away from the minority the preferential right in the matter, but it has a right to say whether it prefers the proposition of the minority or the majority. As a matter of fact, nobody can tell who is the majority or who is the minority on this kind of a proposition. If it were a political question you might get at it.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Chair will permit, the minority that was recognized, the minority leader, could have protected himself by moving the previous question, which was not done.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I did not do it, because I could not carry a majority of the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman would have been able to carry it to the parliamentay situation which would have given him the right to move it.

The SPEAKER. Of course. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] could have exercised all the right that he has.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; I did exercise all the rights that I did have.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs the gentleman's pardon. He could have moved the previous question.

Mr. MANN. I have learned long since that the leader of the minority is not the one to move the previous question.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is it the ruling of the Chair that a motion to amend need not be germane to that which it seeks to amend?

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair did not rule anything of the sort.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Because, unless the amendment moved by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] is germane to the instructions which it seeks to amend, it is a question whether it is in order. The Chair has ruled that it is germane to the main question, but instructions are not the main question.

The SPEAKER. The whole matter that is being squabbled about here is the Bourne amendment, so called, to the House bill. Now the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] comes in and offers a motion here, treating of the subject that the Bourne amendment treats of, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] comes in and practically offers a substitute, treating of the identical subject that the Bourne amendment treats of; that is, fixing up a parcel post, with zones, and so forth.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I wanted to get the Chair's ruling, because a similar situation arose earlier in the year, and the Chair then ruled on a somewhat different phase of the question. But it has never been definitely settled in this House whether it is in order to amend a motion to recommit with instructions by substituting other instructions not germane to those proposed, although germane to the main question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that you have as much right to amend the instructions as you have to amend anything else.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Certainly; but can you amend them by an amendment not germane to those instructions?

The SPEAKER. No; not by injecting another subject. But this amendment does not undertake to do that. The Bourne amendment treats of a parcel post, as I understand it, by a complicated system of zones, and the instructions of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] treats of the Bourne amendment, this puzzling question of zones. Then the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] treats of the same subject, and the Chair thinks it is clearly in order. If the gentleman from Tennessee undertook by this amendment to treat of rural routes or city carriers or anything of that kind, the Chair would bowl him out.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, if this motion fails—the motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]—will it mean that this question will go back to the Senate?

Mr. MANN. Certainly, it will have to go back to the Senate.

Mr. WEEKS. Will it go back to the Senate for the Senate's action?

The SPEAKER. It seems so to the Chair.

Mr. CANNON. This is like unto agreeing to a Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what it is. When you boil it all down, that is the whole thing.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, would that avoid the Speaker's appointment of the conferees?

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to tell the gentleman that it calls for a commission.

The SPEAKER. In reply to the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], the Chair would say no; it simply, in substance, is an amendment to a Senate amendment. That is the substance of it.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BATHRICK. I desire to know whether a vote for this substitute or amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee will send this bill back to the conference or back to the Senate?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That has not come up yet.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I understood the Speaker to say not long ago that the papers were in the possession of the conferees as appointed by him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was mistaken about that. It happened that the papers were on the Speaker's table.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have to be in order to get this matter up.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, my question was whether this vote for this amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] to recommit would send the bill back to the Senate or back to the conference.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, that would depend on the next motion. It is to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. CANNON. If the Chair will indulge me, I suppose if that should be done, then, under the rule, in the event the House disagreed to the Senate amendments, the Speaker would appoint the conferees.

The SPEAKER. Yes; under the special rule adopted last night it would go to the conferees. If that had not been adopted, it would not.

Mr. MANN. That is for the House to determine.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is assuming that the House will vote in accordance with this special rule.

Mr. MANN. It is for the House to determine hereafter whether or not it shall ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Of course, that motion is still pending. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] giving instructions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understood that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] was going to ask for a little debate.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. We have had debate all morning.

WASHINGTON CONTESTS AT THE REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION.

Mr. MANN. Pending this matter, I ask that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON] may have two minutes in which to address the House. He has been called out of town, and he desires two minutes.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON] may address the House for two minutes. The gentleman from New Jersey objects.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON] may have two minutes?

There was no objection.

WERE THE DELEGATES FROM WASHINGTON STOLEN FROM COL. ROOSEVELT, OR DID THEY BELONG TO PRESIDENT TAFT?

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make some rather extensive remarks on what is known as the Washington contest at Chicago. I have prepared my remarks and reduced them to writing, and desire to have permission to extend them. I think I shall clearly show in what I say and in the evidence I produce that the Roosevelt delegates from the State of Washington were undoubtedly entitled to a seat in that body. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I regret that I find it necessary to discuss what is termed the Washington contest case in the Republican national convention. I do so because I have good and sincere friends on both sides of the controversy. My home is among these people, and I expect to live and die among these friends. I would not willfully misstate a fact concerning them.

I followed the contest closely from day to day as it occurred in the State of Washington preceding the Washington State convention at Aberdeen as well as at the national convention. I have read every statement that I have been able to secure made by anyone who participated in the contest. I sincerely hope that no statement I shall make will be erroneous. I make this statement only that I may correct some of the wild, unfounded statements of facts that have been put in the RECORD by the gentleman from Wyoming, and particularly by the gentleman from Missouri. I feel as though I would be derelict in my duty were I to pursue any other course.

Men in an intense political strife frequently do things that in their sober moments they condemn as wrong. They frequently take a technical advantage of a situation and in truth and fact override the rights and privileges of their opponents, which, when the battle is over, they exceedingly regret. So the conduct of men in such instances should not be too severely condemned.

But there is no excuse, there is nothing one can say in extenuation of the conduct of members of a national committee or of a national credentials committee who, in deciding contests before them, act arbitrarily—decide cases contrary to evidence—or allow partisanship in the slightest degree to control their decision. Members of a national committee, or credentials committee, act in deciding contest cases in the capacity of judges. The relation they bear to the party is identical to that which the Supreme Court bears to all the people of the United States. It is their duty to lay aside all interests in the contests, to have no care or thought as to who may win, but to decide each case on its merits according to the truth and right.

The gentleman from Missouri was a member of the committee on credentials which made up the temporary roll. The gentleman from Wyoming was on the committee on credentials which finally passed upon the contests. They recently undertook to give a statement concerning the merits of the contested cases in Chicago, in which they acted as judges. In deciding these matters and in giving their statement of facts concerning them, both of these gentlemen acted in a judicial capacity. They acted as judges, having been selected by the great Republican Party to determine as between two great contending factions a matter of gravest importance. Upon their decision was largely to rest who should be its candidate for the high office of President of the United States. It is very rare, indeed, that a case ever is decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that is of more far-reaching importance or one in which so many million citizens are so directly and vitally interested.

When these gentlemen assumed the obligation to act as judges in this most important controversy it was their solemn duty to lay aside all partisanship; to lay aside all care or interest in the result of the controversy. It was not only incumbent upon them to do likewise whenever called upon or when they voluntarily assumed to give an opinion or make a statement of the facts of the case.

It is the duty of a judge plainly, fairly, and impartially to state the facts of the case, using the greatest care not to omit any material facts in the case; to give no coloring to a statement for either side not fully sustained by the evidence. This duty rests forever on any man who has acted in such a capacity and who undertakes to relate what occurred before him as a judge. He can not voluntarily lay it aside; he owes it to the public; he certainly owes it to each of the contestants who might have either voluntarily or necessarily submitted the controversy to him as judge.

Any man who consents to act as a judge and who does not intuitively understand these rules of conduct, and who does not faithfully adhere to them, shows he was wholly unfit to act as a judge, and that his statement and decision of the case should be wholly disregarded and held for naught.

If the rules of conduct for judges that I have stated are correct, then a mere reading of almost any paragraph in the speeches of the gentleman from Wyoming and the gentleman from Missouri will show how utterly unfit and unqualified both the gentlemen were to act as judges in the contest at Chicago between President Taft and Col. Roosevelt.

There is scarcely a paragraph in their statement of facts that does not show that they were grossly partisan. If one were not familiar with the facts, a mere reading of their speeches would clearly show that each of them was endeavoring to color his statement in favor of President Taft as strongly as possible and to discolor as far as possible all facts favorable to Col. Roosevelt. If a judge is grossly unfair in his statement of the case, it follows with unerring certainty that he was grossly unfair in reaching his decision.

I would rather submit the case of a client of mine, no matter how important, to the most corrupt judge that ever sat on a bench than to submit it to a judge that I knew was liable to be controlled by hatred or partisanship against my client and in favor of my client's adversary. I would ordinarily get a far greater measure of justice from the corrupt judge than I would get from the partisan judge. Or, to put it another way, I might get justice from the corrupt judge, but I never would get justice from the judge who was a partisan against my client if he allowed himself to be controlled by his partisan feelings.

That the gentleman from Missouri understood that he was acting as a judge when he made his speech or statement, and understood that it was his duty to state the facts fairly and impartially as a judge would, is shown by the opening sentence of his speech:

> Mr. Chairman, I rise to tell the story of the Chicago contests. I was there, listened to the evidence, and voted on the cases as the facts warranted and my conscience dictated. * * * Having taken a seat in the front row, I was careful that not a particle of the evidence from either side escaped my attention.

And later when he was discussing the Washington contests and I undertook to interrupt him, he said:

> There can not be any contention about this. I am stating only the facts.

He made these positive assertions to show everybody who heard his statement or read his speech that they could rely upon what he said as a judge who heard the testimony. Again, he said:

> I am stating absolute facts, and I do not want to be interrupted. I am stating facts that can not be disputed by anybody.

I will show before I conclude that not only were facts he stated about the Washington contests untrue, but just the reverse was true, and that the gentleman omitted some of the most important facts that should have been stated by one who undertook to relate them fairly and impartially.

STATEMENT OF THE WASHINGTON CONTESTS.

In the Washington State convention there were 668 delegates. A majority of that convention would be 335. There were a large number of contests, but by far the greater number were by the Taft people. It had been the custom and practice of the Republican Party in my State, ever since the State was organized, to have all the contests determined by the convention. A committee on credentials would be appointed, who would hear the contests, make their report to the convention, and the convention then determined the matter. In the last State convention Mr. Taft had a majority of the old State committee, and it was determined by them, and contrary to the custom and practice of the Republican Party, to hear the contests themselves in the first instance and make up the temporary roll.

In this convention there were 97 uncontested delegates for President Taft and 263 uncontested delegates for Col. Roosevelt. This committee, after hearing the contests, awarded the Roosevelt delegations of Pierce and Clallam Counties to Col. Roosevelt, making 332 delegates for Col. Roosevelt. This left Col. Roosevelt only 3 shy of a majority.

It afterwards developed, and is conceded by both Taft and Roosevelt men, that probably Roosevelt in truth and fact had the majority on roll call by the seating of the Roosevelt delegates of Pierce and Clallam Counties. Roosevelt leaders claimed a number of other counties, but insisted that there could be no question about the delegates from King County, 121 in number; 6 delegates from Asotin County, and 10 delegates from Chelan County.

It will be observed that if either of the delegations from any one of these counties just mentioned were awarded to Col. Roosevelt he would have controlled the convention. The gentlemen from Missouri and Wyoming have referred only to the contested delegation of King County. This contested delegation had attracted the most attention, because if it had been awarded to Col. Roosevelt it would have given him an overwhelming majority in the State convention. So far as the results were concerned, if he had won the delegation of any other of the counties that were contested the result would have been the same, though not quite so overwhelming. That Col. Roosevelt was entitled to all these counties there can be no doubt in the mind of any fair-minded man who will read the evidence and decide the case uncontrolled by partisan feeling.

In King County the old committee consisted of 250 members, one from each of the existing precincts. This committee was called together to determine how to elect delegates to the State convention, pursuant to the call of the State committee. There were present at this meeting 131 committeemen who had been appointed by the chairman of the county committee. It was contended that he had no right to appoint these committeemen. This committee was organized in 1910. After its organization, and prior to December, 1910, long before a contest for the nomination of President was thought of, the county committee passed a resolution authorizing the chairman to appoint committeemen to fill any vacancies that occurred. The chairman had the right and power to appoint these committeemen; not only that, but it was entirely in line with the ordinary custom and practice by chairmen of the county central committees in my State.

At this committee meeting, and pursuant to the overwhelming desire of the people of King County, the county committee called a primary. At this meeting a resolution was passed discharging the old subcommittee, known as an executive committee, which had been appointed about two years before for the sole purpose of looking after the details of the county campaign of 1910. This committee never had any other duties or any other authority. The county committee had the right to discharge it and had the sole right to determine how to elect the delegates to the State convention. It had the authority to select them at the meeting. The Roosevelt men were in complete control of it and could have elected the entire delegation, but they yielded to the desire of the Republican Party in that county and called a primary, giving to every Republican voter the opportunity to express his choice for President.

After this committee adjourned 12 of the old subcommittee of 22, which had been discharged, met and selected 121 delegates to the State convention, which were seated by the State committee for the purpose of temporary roll. This portion of the subcommittee did not meet pursuant to a call of the subcommittee by anyone authorized to call it together. It was not even claimed before the national committee by the Taft contestants that this defunct subcommittee had been called together by anyone authorized to do so. Ten of the committee never knew of the meeting or heard of it until after it was over. Their action was never ratified at any subsequent meeting of the defunct committee or by the county committee. The 12 members of this committee had no more right or authority to appoint the 121 delegates than you or I had.

If we were to concede, which we do not, that the 121 new members of the county committee had been improperly selected, yet the whole committee did exactly the right thing; it violated no man's rights; it usurped no man's privilege. It did exactly what the great majority of the Republicans in King County wanted done and what no Republican had a right to complain about. It called a Republican primary, inviting every Republican to participate. It did not act arbitrarily and assume to speak for from between thirty and thirty-five thousand Republicans. It knew that the committeemen were not elected for any such purpose. It did precisely what it should do if it would build up and strengthen the Republican Party. It did what any 381 honest and decent Republicans would do if they were planning for the future success of the party.

The 12 members of a defunct executive committee, which had originally consisted of 22 members, which met without a pretense of a call by anyone that was ever authorized to call it, who never had any authority to act in the matter, but which had been disbanded, did exactly what any 12 pirates would do who had seized a ship and desired to loot and wreck it. It assumed to play the part of a boss and then do exactly what, if carried out, would tend to defeat the party. It flagrantly usurped the rights and privileges of over 30,000 Republicans. It did all it could to tear down the party. The 121 delegates that it named had no more right to seats in the State convention than if you or I had appointed them.

The Hon. H. E. Sackett, of Nebraska, who was a member of the national credentials committee, who heard the testimony, has issued a statement on all of the contests heard, and I shall now quote from that statement, because it is stated concisely and correctly, and I believe it to be an absolutely truthful and fair statement:

TAFT MEN SEATED.

At the meeting of the State committee on the 14th all contests were decided in favor of the Taft people, including King County, except the two counties of Pierce and Clallam, representing 69 delegates, which were decided for the Roosevelt people. At this meeting, on the 14th, it was shown that the committee, without any precedent therefor, adopted a set of rules placing the temporary organization of the convention in the hands of the chairman of the State committee, and further provided that no delegate should be admitted to the State convention without a ticket signed by the chairman of the State committee. Evidence was submitted that no such requirement for delegates to have tickets had ever been made in any previous convention in the State of Washington. These rules were not printed or given out so that the Roosevelt members of the committee could secure or see them.

It further appears that on the 14th efforts were put forth by the opposing forces to reach a harmonious understanding as to the organization of the convention and for the disposing of the contests by the convention. A committee was appointed by each side to take up and carry on the negotiations along this line, with the result that on the 15th an understanding was reached for the disposition by the convention of certain of the contests where the merits were plain, and where doubt existed half of the delegation should be given to each faction. In order to secure further time for these committees to submit to the convention their agreement for ratification it was agreed by mutual consent that the time for the meeting of the convention would be postponed from 10 o'clock a. m. to 1 o'clock p. m. of the same day.

Evidence further shows that shortly after 10 o'clock on the morning of the 15th, the Roosevelt delegates discovered that, regardless of the agreement to postpone the meeting hour of the convention to 1 o'clock the Taft delegates had entered the hall and were acting as a convention. The Roosevelt delegates then went to the hall. None of them had been given tickets of admission, nor had they been notified where tickets could be obtained, and few, if any, knew of the unusual rule providing for delegates to have tickets. When they arrived at the convention hall they found the doors of the hall locked, except the main door, which was guarded by a policeman. The windows were barred and the fire escapes removed. The Roosevelt delegates offered their credentials at the main entrance, but were refused by those in charge because they had no tickets. Neither were they informed as to where tickets could be obtained. They then persisted in an attempt to be admitted to the hall, but were forcibly prevented by the police and those in charge of the hall, and were ordered back in the street.

The delegates representing Roosevelt after having been denied admission to the convention, as above related, met in another hall and organized a convention, and elected Roosevelt delegates to the national convention.

It is of interest at this point to relate the facts pertaining to contests in two other counties of the State, namely, Ascotin and Chelan. In the first-mentioned county the facts related show that the precinct committeemen had the authority through the county organization to call conventions and to elect delegates for the purpose of electing delegates to the State convention, or they could themselves elect the delegates. There are 11 precincts in Ascotin County, 3 of the 11 precinct committeemen met without notice, and with other men who possessed no credentials or authority of any kind, named the Taft delegates to the State convention.

The citizens and electorate of this county, pursuant to a call, held a convention and elected Roosevelt delegates to the State convention. In the county of Chelan the county convention met in regular manner and order. It was made up of both Taft and Roosevelt delegates. A Roosevelt man was elected chairman of the temporary organization by a vote of 31 to 22. A committee on credentials was appointed to pass on the three precinct contests. The convention adjourned until 1 o'clock p. m. of the same day to give the committee time to hear a report of these contests. In all the proceedings, up to and including the adjournment, the Taft men took part. After the adjournment and before the reconvening of the convention at 1 o'clock the Taft men, constituting a minority of the committee, met in another hall and organized and elected Taft delegates to the State convention.

ROOSEVELT MEN OUSTED.

At 1 o'clock of the same day, as provided in the adjournment, the regular organization reconvened and in a regular manner elected Roosevelt delegates to the State convention. The State committee, controlled by a majority of Taft adherents, as set forth herein, threw out the Roosevelt delegates in both these counties.

In the State convention held by the Taft people in the hall where the meeting was called, after the exclusion of the Roosevelt delegates as hereinbefore set forth, there were present 401 men, of whom but 97 were uncontested delegates, and 304 contested delegates. In these contested delegates were included the 69 Taft delegates from Pierce and Clallam Counties which had been unseated by the State committee in its session the day before the convention. There were also included in these 304 contested delegates the 121 delegates selected by the Taft members on the subcommittee of King County, as hereinbefore related, and which had no legal claim whatever to a seat in any convention.

In the convention of the Roosevelt delegates held after being prevented from entering the convention, as herein stated, there were present 567 men, of whom 263 were uncontested delegates and the 69 delegates from Pierce and Clallam Counties whose credentials had been approved by the State committee; and there were also present the 121 delegates from King County who had been selected at a public primary by a majority of 6,400 votes, as herein stated. These 567 delegates out of the 668 of which the State convention was composed elected the Roosevelt delegates to the national convention. The national committee and the credentials committee seated the entire Taft delegation from the State of Washington.

WERE ROOSEVELT DELEGATES BARRED FROM THE ABERDEEN CONVENTION?

It will be observed that the Roosevelt contestants at Chicago urged strenuously before the committee as one of the reasons why they did not attend the Taft convention the fact that they were barred from it by a rule adopted by the Taft majority of the State committee, providing that no delegate could enter the convention without a ticket signed by the Taft chairman, and policemen were stationed at the entrance to enforce this most unusual rule. The uncontested Roosevelt delegates and those seated by the committee were not given tickets and did not know where to get them and were denied admission when they attempted to enter.

Former Senator Dick, of this city, who had charge of the Taft contests generally at Chicago, has a transcribed record of all that occurred before the committee in reference to the Washington contests, as well as the others. I have examined that record and find that this contention was made and strenuously urged by the Roosevelt contestants before the national committee. They stated, as the record discloses, that this contention was supported by the affidavits of a number of delegates from the different Roosevelt delegations from the different counties and States. The record also shows that while the affidavits were presented to the committee, they were never read before the committee.

Mr. Dovell, representing the Taft delegates, claimed that this contention was incorrect, but he did not claim that he had affidavits from the chairman who had charge of the distribution of tickets or from anyone else to the effect that tickets had been in fact given to all or to any of the Roosevelt delegates. In fact, Mr. Dovell makes no showing—did not offer any evidence to support his bare statement that the Roosevelt delegates were given tickets. If the national committee had investigated the matter at all—read the affidavits—they could have reached no other conclusion than that the Roosevelt delegates were not permitted to enter the convention.

I think no fair-minded man can come to any other conclusion than that the great bulk of Roosevelt delegates, if not all of them, were not given tickets. They did not know where to get them and could not enter the convention. To make certain of this, a few days ago I telegraphed members of the Roosevelt delegation from the several counties and requested them to telegraph me the truth about the matter as it related to Roosevelt delegates from their own county. As I did not know the names of uncontested Roosevelt delegates from other counties, I did not telegraph them. I received responses from delegations I did telegraph as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., August 6, 1912.

STANTON WARBURTON, M. C.:

Senator Falconer says Snohomish delegation were not given tickets. I know of my own knowledge that uncontested Roosevelt delegates were not provided with tickets of admission to State convention. No official notice was given that tickets would be required.

SPOKANE, WASH., August 6, 1912.

Hon. STANTON WARBURTON, M. C.:

No tickets were furnished to Roosevelt delegates at any time and no Roosevelt delegates obtained admittance to the Taft convention at Aberdeen. Any statement to the contrary is absolutely false. No one was admitted to the convention except Taft delegates. Uncontested Roosevelt delegates were refused admission and were unable to obtain tickets at the hall or to ascertain where tickets could be obtained. Roosevelt delegates presenting their credentials at the door were roughly handled and driven away by policemen stationed at the entrance. Absolutely no one gained admittance to the convention hall except Taft delegates, a very few of their chosen leaders, and newspaper representatives.

Clarke County uncontested delegates seated by State committee were not given tickets at all at Aberdeen convention. No directions given where to get tickets. True of other uncontested Roosevelt delegates, also. Letter follows.

CHARLES W. HALL,
WILLIAM C. BATES, Delegates.

The gentlemen who signed these telegrams are all prominent men in their communities, and it is inconceivable that they would make such statements unless they were true. There is not a single man among them that I know, and I know most of them, whose statement I would not believe. The requirement of tickets to a State convention was a thing never heard of before in the State of Washington before this convention, and there is no reason that can be given, in my belief, that will justify it in this case. There were 332 Roosevelt delegates that, under the rules of the committee, were entitled to seats, and, as I will show in a moment, if any half dozen of these delegates were not given tickets and could not enter the convention, it could very easily change the whole complexion of the convention.

The delegation from Spokane numbered 61; from Pierce County, 61; and, to my best recollection, from Snohomish County, 28. I do not know the number of delegates from Kittitas, Stevens, Franklin, and Walla Walla Counties, but they numbered from 55 to 60 votes. So at least delegates from 7 counties were denied admission to the State convention in this manner, or more than 200 Roosevelt delegates were denied admission by the rule on tickets.

Let us see how this would almost certainly change the result. It is admitted by all parties that on the temporary roll, as made by the committee, President Taft only had 3 majority.

It was clearly known by both sides that President Taft did not have more than 3 majority. In the ordinary conduct of the convention, even though organized by Taft forces, a committee on credentials would be appointed to hear contested cases. This committee would consist of one member from each county, and so would be composed of Taft and Roosevelt adherents. The committee would hear the contests and report. If it disagreed, there would be a majority and minority report; the matter would be presented to the convention and a vote would be taken. Each of the counties that were contested would be unable to vote on their own contest.

The State committee had seated on the temporary roll Taft delegates from Asotin County. This was one of the delegations most hotly contested by the Roosevelt forces. I think I have shown that the Roosevelt delegates were clearly entitled to seats, and would have been seated if given a fair hearing before a fair convention. On this contest the Taft delegates from Asotin would not have been able to vote. This county had 8 votes. If these 8 votes were unable to vote on this contest, it would take away from the Taft forces 8 votes and leave the Roosevelt delegates 5 majority in the convention; and if the Roosevelt delegates were seated it would give the Roosevelt forces a clear permanent majority of 10 in the convention, no matter how other contests were decided.

The same is true of Chelan County, with 10 votes. The Roosevelt men claimed, and I think I have clearly shown, that they were entitled to the delegates from that county. When the question came up before the State convention, the Taft delegates from Chelan could not vote on it and the Roosevelt delegates would have a majority of 7, and if, on the roll call, the Roosevelt delegates were seated Roosevelt would have won a permanent majority in the convention of 14.

A like condition would arise on a report from such a committee on King County, with its 121 Taft delegates contested by 121 Roosevelt delegates. The Taft delegates could not vote on that case. With the Taft delegates not voting, the total number of delegates in the convention entitled to vote on this question would have been 548, of which Roosevelt would have had 332 delegates entitled to vote, or a majority of 118.

If the Roosevelt delegation was seated, and I believe they would have been seated on the merits of the contest, thereafter the Roosevelt delegates would have had a majority of 236 in the convention.

A child can see from this statement as to why the unusual scheme was devised to permit only delegates who had tickets signed by the Taft chairman to enter the convention and had policemen stationed at the entrance to permit no others to enter.

I think it is but fair to say that but very few, if any, of the Taft delegates, other than those on the State committee, had any knowledge of the failure, neglect, or refusal of the chairman to give the Roosevelt delegates tickets. They had nothing to do with the making of the rule excluding delegates who had not tickets. No doubt much, if not the greater part, of the fault lies with the chairman alone. Probably very few of the Taft delegates knew at the time these proceedings were going on that the Roosevelt delegates were being prevented from entering the hall by the system devised by the Taft adherents of the State committee. That it occurred no one will doubt; certainly not if he reads the telegrams that I have read and which I shall print as part of my remarks.

I believe that nine-tenths of those who were friendly to President Taft, who live in my State, will agree with me in this statement that the Roosevelt delegates to the Chicago convention should have been seated.

The governor of the State, who was easily the most distinguished supporter of President Taft, and who exerted his influence as governor of the State to secure Taft delegates to the State convention, as already shown by the letter of Mr. Dilling, said that to deprive Col. Roosevelt of the delegates to the national convention "would not only be petit larceny but grand larceny."

I desire to read in part a letter addressed to Senator POINDEXTER, by Mr. George W. Dilling, of Seattle:

I was one of the committee of five Roosevelt men in the State whom the governor invited to confer with a like number of Taft men with a view to compromising our differences prior to the State convention. Gov. Hay, who is an adherent of President Taft, stated to the two committees so appointed on a number of occasions that the attempt of the Taft people to steal this State for the President in the face of the returns was not petit larceny but grand larceny.

The chairman of the State convention was present at two of these conferences, and on the morning of the convention he practically acquiesced, together with the other members of the Taft committee, with a single exception, to compromise upon a basis of four delegates from this State for Mr. Taft and 10 for Mr. Roosevelt. He agreed at 9.30 o'clock in the morning of the convention that the opening of the State convention would be postponed from 10 o'clock a. m. until 1 o'clock p. m., for further conferences along the lines indicated and upon the basis of 4 to 10, it being understood that both factions would delay action until that time.

When he went over to the convention hall where the Taft convention was held and was informed by a newspaper reporter that the Roosevelt people had declined to wait until 1.30 p. m., which was not true, he called his convention to order and proceeded to business.

The chairman's most unpardonable offense, next to that of seating delegates to the committee who were not entitled to recognition, the same having been agreed upon by himself and 21 followers on the committee in secret conference the night before, was the policing of the theater where the convention was held so that the Roosevelt delegates were unable to enter. Even after he and his committee were through with their steam-roller tactics it was very questionable as to whether or not they had an actual majority, so that to make assurance doubly sure, it was necessary for them to adopt the ticket system, policing the building, not permitting anyone to enter who did not have a ticket of admission signed by himself, and he and his co-workers being very careful to issue no tickets to uncontested Roosevelt delegates.

There were from four to ten policemen stationed in each of the three entrances prior to and at all times during the progress of the Taft convention. I conversed with the officers personally, who told me that their instructions were to admit no one to the building unless they had a delegate card signed by the chairman.

As a political larcenist he did his work well, that of defeating the will of the people expressed by the election of a large majority of the delegates elected to the State convention instructed for Col. Roosevelt.

MR. BARTHOLDT WHOLLY IN ERROR WHEN HE STATES THAT THE DELEGATES WERE ELECTED BY THE SO-CALLED COMMITTEE BEFORE THE CALL FOR A PRIMARY.

The most important fact that Mr. BARTHOLDT undertook to state was this: "The order of the committee directing a primary (King County) was made long after the committee had selected the delegates to the State convention."

If this statement were true it would give the delegates so elected some standing. It would give them some color of right to their seats.

The statement is wholly wrong and without any foundation of fact upon which to base it. The very meeting of the county central committee he mentions was called solely for the purpose of determining in what manner the King County delegates to the State convention should be elected. There was a very hot fight before this committee, consisting of 381 members, as to how this should be done. It was a committee consisting of as many committeemen almost as there are members of this body. A resolution was finally passed by the full committee calling for a direct primary. It was after this had been done and on the same day that the 12 or 14 persons, pretending to act for the executive committee, met secretly and elected 121 delegates to the State convention.

My examination of the proceedings and the different statements I have read led me clearly to understand this to be the case.

I called Senator POINDEXTER's attention to this statement, as well as to some others, and asked him to give me the facts of the case. Senator POINDEXTER was present at the hearings before both committees. I shall print his letter in full, but the part of it that applies to this statement is as follows:

Mr. BARTHOLDT states that the order of the committee directing a primary to be held in King County (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 9961) was "long after the committee had already selected the delegates to the State convention." This is wholly false and the exact contrary is true, namely, that the action of the 12 Taft members of the committee undertaking to appoint the 121 delegates to the State convention was after the primary had been ordered by the full committee.

I also telegraphed George Walker, Gov. McBride, and Mayor Dilling, of Seattle, and asked them what was the truth about this statement. The telegram in answer to this question is as follows:

Delegates were elected by committee immediately after call for primary.

I did not believe that the counsel for the Taft contestants disputed this fact, so I telegraphed W. T. Dovell, of Seattle, the lawyer who represented the Taft side of the controversy before the national committee at Chicago, before the national credentials committee, and who also presented their side of the controversy to the national convention, and asked him to tell me the truth about it. His telegram is as follows:

Your telegram received in my absence from city. So-called resolution for Kings County primaries passed at meeting of April 13. Executive committee selected delegates to State convention same day. County convention held two weeks later.

W. T. DOVELL.

This is the attorney that Mr. BARTHOLDT in his speech designates as the counsel for the Taft side who made the Roosevelt contestants look like "collapsed specimens of humanity."

I have examined the record before the national committee, and no such claim was made before that body. So the gentleman from Missouri, "who sat on the front seat and heard all the testimony," is sorely in error as to what occurred there.

THE CHAIRMAN WAS AUTHORIZED TO APPOINT COMMITTEEMEN IN ALL PRECINCTS WHERE THERE WAS A VACANCY.

Complaint is made by Mr. MONDELL and Mr. BARTHOLDT that 131 committeemen had been appointed by the chairman, which they claim was without authority and an arbitrary exercise of power. Again these just judges do not state the full facts or even attempt to do so. I have read the transcribed evidence before the national committee, and it clearly appears that before December, 1910, a year before any presidential contest was on, that the chairman of the county committee was given full authority to fill all vacancies occurring in precincts by appointing committeemen. There was no contention, as shown by the transcribed testimony, that this resolution had not been adopted by the county central committee. One hundred and thirty-one new precincts had been created shortly prior to the meeting of the committee, and there were vacancies in these precincts. The chairman did what, I think, he had authority to do under the resolution and also in conformity with the practice in my State, appointed committeemen in newly created precincts, which were without representation until this was done.

If these judges desired to be fair to you and to others who would read their statements, which, I understand, are to be given the widest circulation, why did they omit this most important and material fact? Did they do it for any other purpose than to mislead you and the public? Do not men who occupy the position they do violate a duty they owe to the public by such conduct?

While this matter was being considered, it may be that the gentleman from Missouri was sitting "on a front seat" listening, but certain it is that he was not hearing.

MR. BARTHOLDT IS AGAIN IN ERROR WHEN HE SAYS 131 COMMITTEEMEN WERE NOT TO BE ELECTED UNTIL AFTER SEPTEMBER, 1912.

Mr. BARTHOLDT, in his statement of the facts of the case, uses this language:

At a general meeting of the county committee it was resolved that representatives to fill the 131 new precincts should not be selected until an election was held in September, 1912.

This is one of the facts that he says is undisputed. I have read all the testimony and statement of counsel made before the national committee, of which Mr. BARTHOLDT was a member. There was no such statement made by counsel, nor is there such a statement in the transcribed proceedings of the case.

Thinking there must be some basis for this statement, I telegraphed three of the most prominent men in Seattle, asking if such statement was true—one, George H. Walker, a leading attorney in Seattle, of unquestioned ability and veracity; another, George W. Dilling, of Seattle, formerly a member of the legislature and recently mayor of Seattle, who voluntarily retired from that position about a month preceding the primary; and another, Henry McBride, who for a number of years was judge of one of our superior courts and later governor of the State of Washington. Their answer to this question is as follows:

No resolution by county committee that no committeemen should be elected for new precincts until September.

Gov. McBride and, I think, George Walker, were leading members of the Roosevelt faction in the contest at Aberdeen.

Senator POINDEXTER appeared before the national committee and the national credentials committee on behalf of the Roosevelt contestants, and knows exactly what was disputed and what was undisputed. I called his attention to this statement and asked him to write me the truth about it. His full letter will appear in this speech. In answer to this he said:

Mr. BARTHOLDT states that "at a general meeting of the county committee it was resolved that representatives to fill the 131 new precincts should not be selected until an election was held in September, 1912." This is absolutely untrue. No such action was taken by the committee, but, on the contrary, express authority was given the chairman of the committee to fill these vacancies.

The record of the national committee fails to disclose that any such claim was made, even by the attorney representing the Taft side of the controversy. There was no attempt to show on behalf of the Taft contestants that any such resolution was ever adopted by the King County central committee. In fact, no such contention exists anywhere in the record. So the gentleman from Missouri, "who sat on the front seat and heard all the testimony," is seriously in error as to this statement.

SENATOR POINDEXTER'S STATEMENT.

Subsequent to the day that the gentleman from Missouri delivered his speech on the contested cases in Chicago, I called Senator POINDEXTER's attention to that part of his speech wherein he undertook to state what the undisputed facts of the Washington contest were, and asked the Senator to give me his version of it.

Senator POINDEXTER represented the Roosevelt contestants before the committee and is conversant with everything that occurred there at the hearing. He says:

I have noted the particular reference in the RECORD cited by you being the statement of Representative BARTHOLDT which he claims is undisputed. I have examined this statement very carefully, and must say that it is not only disputed, but that it is absolutely erroneous. He says that the King County committee consisted of 250 men from 250 precincts, the majority of whom were for Taft. The facts are, the committee consisted of approximately 381 members, from approximately 381 precincts, the majority of whom were for Roosevelt. Mr. BARTHOLDT states that "at a general meeting of the county committee it was resolved that representatives to fill the 131 new precincts should not be selected until an election was held in September, 1912." This is absolutely untrue. No such action was taken by the committee, but, on the contrary, express authority was given to the chairman of the committee to fill these vacancies. Mr. BARTHOLDT states that the order of the committee directing a primary to be held in King County (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 10644) was "long after the committee had already selected the delegates to the State convention." This is wholly false and the exact contrary is true, namely, that the action of the 12 Taft members of the committee undertaking to appoint the 121 delegates to the State convention was after the primary had been ordered by the full committee. Furthermore, it was after the authority of this executive committee had been superseded by the action of the full committee. The so-called executive committee, of which these 12 men were members, was appointed two years previously for the purpose of the campaign, and, aside from the fact that their action was in direct conflict with the action of the full committee, they had no authority whatever to act, as their authority was limited to a campaign which took place two years ago—and so I might go on disputing Mr. BARTHOLDT'S statements in detail, which he says are undisputed. The RECORD and a great mass of evidence is available to show the absolute inaccuracy of Mr. BARTHOLDT'S statements of facts.

I notice that Mr. BARTHOLDT declined to permit you to interrupt him while he was making this inaccurate statement, even for the purpose of a question. This was in direct harmony with the action of the national committee in hearing the case (Mr. BARTHOLDT being present as a member). The committee, or rather the majority of it, summarily suppressed every attempt on the part of the Roosevelt representatives to interrogate witnesses for Mr. Taft or even to correct misstatements made by the latter's counsel. It was not a hearing for the purpose of ascertaining the truth, but a mere formal proceeding for the deliberate and avowed purpose of seating the Taft delegation regardless of the truth of the case.

WHY DID THE GENTLEMEN FROM MISSOURI AND WYOMING BOTH NEGLECT TO DISCUSS THE CONTESTS FROM ASOTIN?

The contests in the State convention from Asotin County was as important as the contest from King County. If it was decided in favor of the Roosevelt contestants, it would give a majority in the State convention for Col. Roosevelt and give him the delegation to Chicago.

Why did the gentlemen from Missouri and Wyoming omit one of the most important Washington contests from their statements? Can they claim before this House and before the country that they were fair in their statements as judges and omit from it one of the most important and controlling facts in the case? How can the gentleman from Missouri square his statement that he "sat in the front seat and heard all the testimony," and was stating "all the facts," with the fact that he omitted all mention even of this contest?

THE GENTLEMEN FROM WYOMING AND MISSOURI FAILED EVEN TO MENTION THE IMPORTANT CONTEST FROM CHELAN COUNTY.

The gentlemen from Wyoming and Missouri failed not only to mention the contest from Asotin County, but also from Chelan County. The contest from the last-named county was most important. If the Roosevelt contesting delegation had been seated from this county, the majority of the convention would have been for the colonel and there would have been elected favorable to him the 14 delegates from Washington, no matter how any other contest was decided. Again we say that no judge who hears a controversy, when he undertakes to state publicly what the facts are, has a right to omit any material or controlling fact. He does the party whose case he has tried an irreparable injury. He has no right to mislead the public, who expect a fair and impartial statement from him. Both these gentlemen expressly stated that as they had heard these contests and as there were being circulated many misleading statements concerning the merits of the cases, they felt it their duty to give the public the facts. They prepared them with the greatest care—reduced their statements to writing, so that no error might occur in them; they had plenty of opportunity to make corrections and supply omissions before they read them in the House. Under these circumstances it seems incredible that these most important controlling facts could have been omitted by accident.

It must be that while this matter was being urged by the Roosevelt contestants before the committee, that although the gentleman from Missouri was on the "front seat" he was not listening; possibly Boss Barnes, who was also on the "front seat," may have purposely and playfully punched him in the ribs and distracted his attention.

MR. MONDELL ON SOAP-BOX PRIMARIES.

The gentleman from Wyoming severely criticizes the conduct of the King County committee in calling a county primary. He terms it "purely a soap-box affair." The primary as called was called and held exactly as they were called and held in every other county but one that elected Taft delegates to the State convention. So, if the Roosevelt delegates from King County were to be unseated because they were elected at a "soap-box primary," every county but one that sent Taft delegates to the State convention and who were given seats by the State committee and by the Taft convention should have been deprived of them.

I agree that "soap-box primaries" are not desirable if there is any law providing for a primary, but they are immeasurably better than permitting 12 men to meet secretly and usurp the rights of over 30,000 voters.

IN ORDER TO BELITTLE THE PRIMARY IN KING COUNTY THE GENTLEMEN OVERSTATE THE ACTUAL VOTE ABOUT 225 PER CENT AND UNDERSTATE THAT CAST BY ABOUT 60 PER CENT.

Another illustration of the unfairness of the gentleman from Missouri, and also the gentleman from Wyoming, is shown by their statements of the number of Republican votes in King County and the number of votes actually cast at the primary.

They both overstate the actual Republican vote of King County by at least 225 per cent and understate the vote cast at the primary by about 60 per cent. This is done for the sole purpose of discrediting the King County primary.

The gentleman from Missouri uses this language:

The Taft men protested against this high-handed proceeding of constituting an illegal majority and refused to take part in the primary at which, as a consequence, only 3,000 votes out of a total Republican vote of 75,000 were cast, according to the newspapers.

No one knows how many Republican votes there are in Seattle or King Counties, except as he determines it by the Republican vote heretofore cast. There never has been a vote at a general election in King County since women were given the right of suffrage. It is not assumed generally that giving women that right will double the vote. In 1910, at the general election for Congress, Mr. HUMPHREY received, in King County, 16,082 votes, and the 5 Republican supreme court judges received about 15,000 Republican votes each. So, if granting the right to vote to women should double the Republican vote as cast two years ago, there would only be 32,000 Republican votes in King County as opposed to 75,000, as stated.

It will be observed that the gentleman from Missouri does not state that there was any evidence of 75,000 Republican voters in King County presented to the committee, but he says "as mentioned by the papers." Yet he did want to convey to the Members of this House and to everyone who read his speech the fact of 75,000 voters in King County.

King County has between one-fourth and one-fifth of the entire population of Washington, and according to the gentleman's estimate there must be from three hundred to three hundred and fifty thousand Republican votes in the State. Two years ago there was cast for the three Republican Congressmen in the State, at the general election, 79,000 Republican votes, and if the Republican party should retain its full strength this fall it could not exceed double the above figures were all the women to vote.

I have tried to give you the facts in reference to the Washington Republican State convention as they were presented to the Republican national committee. I have undertaken to answer the speeches made by the gentleman from Wyoming, and more particularly by the gentleman from Missouri, and while the gentleman may be perfectly honest in the statement he has made, that he "sat on the front seat and heard all the testimony," he certainly was unfortunate in undertaking to state the facts. I am afraid he was a good deal like Boss Barnes and Boss PENROSE, who, I understand, sat on front seats and heard such testimony, and only such testimony, as they desired to hear. There were about 30 or 35 of the members on the national committee who sat in the room, some of them on front seats, and listened, and listened, and listened, and in the end remembered only that part of the evidence that the bosses of the convention wished them to remember.

In addition to the speech I have prepared I desire to extend my remarks by ineluding the statement made by a gentleman from New York, who has prepared a statement concerning those contests.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

THOU SHALT NOT STEAL.

[Extract from editorial by Theodore Roosevelt. Reprinted from the Outlook.]

The American people are entitled to know that the charge of stealing the Chicago convention of 1912 is more than campaign recrimination, and that the frauds complained of are much more serious than the mere repetition of loose practices which might have found unfortunate precedents in some previous conventions of both parties. Seriously and literally, President Taft's renomination was stolen for him from the American people, and the ratification or rejection of that nomination raises the critical issue whether votes or fraud shall determine the selection of American Presidents. There may have been loose or arbitrary decisions of individual contests before; but this is the first time—and it must be made the last time—that a national committee, by conscious and intentional fraud, deliberately transforms the minority of a national convention into a majority, and thereby substitutes the brute power of a committee of professional political bosses for the expressed will of the people as a whole.

These statements are capable of mathematical demonstration. More than enough delegates to make up Mr. Taft's majority in the convention were seated there by contests so transparently fraudulent that honest doubt could not, and did not, exist in regard to them. President Taft was renominated by a majority of barely 21 votes, and 2 of these were publicly raped at the last moment from Massachusetts. If, therefore, more than 19 or 21 of his votes were demonstrably fraudulent, all claim to an honest majority disappears. The demonstration can be made as to many more than this number without touching on a single honestly debatable case.

This reckoning takes no account of the notorious fact that even the undisputed part of Mr. Taft's support was largely artificial and misrepresentative, made up of delegates from the outlying possessions, from hopelessly Democratic States, and from States where the people had been successfully denied the expression of their will. Such an artificial handicap is an injustice, but it stops short of being criminal. Neither does the reckoning take full account of the fact that at least 80 or 90 of the rejected Roosevelt delegates had a better title to vote in the convention than did the seated delegates from New York City. It does not even include many cases quite as flagrant, but not so notorious, as the ones here discussed. It is sufficient to consider only the four confessedly indefensible cases of California, Arizona, Washington, and Texas, which alone more than wipe out the margin. All that could be added from the other cases would only increase the Roosevelt majority of the honest convention. But I wish it distinctly understood that many of these other cases were as clear as the California case itself. This was true of the Tennessee and Kentucky cases, for instance, the Kentucky cases being especially noteworthy because of the way in which Federal officeholders were used by the Taft people to supplement the work of fraud; and in Indiana, Michigan, Alabama, and Arkansas cases just as flagrantly against justice were decided, while one Louisiana case was the most flagrant of all. But the California, Arizona, Washington, and Texas cases were the best known, and in them there was practically no room for dispute as to the facts.

It is significant that these four cases were among the last decided by the national committee. The committee first heard a large number of contests which had evidently been brought more for the purpose of demonstrating the misrepresentative character of the delegations from certain Democratic States than for the hope of seating the particular contestants. Then it decided a number of other cases, some of which ingenuity might make plausibly debatable. Not until it was demonstrated that even all these cases were insufficient to reverse the majority in the convention did the committee go to the final length of throwing out the honest representatives of these four States. When this drastic course was finally decided on, debate was obstructed and curtailed, roll calls were refused, and the proceedings of the committee lost all semblance of even pretended fairness. It was public and undisguised robbery, and all who instigated it and helped carry it out, all who profited by it, and all who condone or apologize for it stand on the same low plane of morality.

Three of these cases were a direct assault on the right of the people to elect their own delegates at primaries, since in them a few score politicians decided that the voters as a whole had no right themselves to decide whom they wished to see nominated. In the California case the delegates to the national convention were elected by direct vote at State-wide preferential primaries. The national committee first, and then the Republican national convention, nullified the State law, and therefore, by inference, all State primary laws. In Arizona and Washington the control of the State conventions depended on which of two rival delegations were seated from certain counties, the one set elected by the Republican voters at primaries regularly called, and the other set arbitrarily appointed by bolting minorities of county committees. The State committees in each case seated the appointed delegates, and the national committee approved that action.

A GLANCE AT THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE.

The Republican national committee met in Chicago on June 6, 1912.

Many people well informed as to general issues which divide parties, who follow the records of public men, and who may be said to be well versed in politics have only a hazy impression of what may be called the anatomy of politics—that is to say, the sources of political power, along what lines it moves and is directed, where it is stored, and how it can be stolen and deflected from its legitimate channels.

They know that national conventions are composed of delegates from the several States, but how the delegates are chosen or representation apportioned, how the convention is organized, manipulated, and sometimes, as happened at Chicago, coerced into misrepresentative action, against the judgment and wishes of the party, are subjects upon which the information of most of us is very deficient.

We all know that there is a body called the national committee; that it wields great power; and that its action is sometimes, as recently, the subject of bitter and widespread denunciation. But few know just how the committee goes about it to thwart the party's will and just why many of its members have incurred such general odium.

The national committee consists of 53 members—1 from each State and the Territorial possessions, Alaska, the District of Columbia, Hawaii, the Philippines, and Porto Rico. Each has a member in the national committee, and although the Territorial possessions cast no vote in the presidential election their representatives in the national committee have equal voice and power with the representatives of populous States, such as New York and Pennsylvania.

The members of the committee are not by virtue of their membership participants in the convention of the party. They are not necessarily delegates to the convention. In fact, a large number of the national committeemen were defeated for election as delegates to the recent Chicago convention. The national committee is not a committee of the convention. It is not appointed by the convention. It does not report to the convention, and yet this irregular and unofficial body practically overlies the convention and determines for all practical purposes its course and its choice of candidates by making up the temporary roll of the convention, and thus determining who shall sit and who shall not sit as delegates.

All contests arising from the election of delegates to the convention are referred in the first instance to the national committee. The credentials of elected delegates are forwarded to the committee from the several States, and formal notices of all contests are likewise transmitted to it.

About two weeks prior to the opening of the convention the national committee meets for the purpose, theoretically, of considering these contests, examining evidence, and hearing arguments. It thus makes up a temporary roll of the convention.

The credentials committee is nothing more nor less than a body whose personnel is carefully selected to make sure of the ratification of the prior action of the national committee on contests, and transmits nominally its own but in reality the recommendations of the national committee to the convention on the subject of roll of delegates in case of appeals from the decisions of the national committee.

The credentials committee has a member from each State, chosen by the delegates from each State, whose credentials have first been approved by the national committee. At the Chicago convention several of its members were also members of the national committee, and thus sat in review of their own prior decisions. In every case the credentials committee sustained the national committee, as it was intended to do; and, in fact, any other result was carefully precluded by the manner of the organization of the credentials committee, as pointed out.

The national committeemen, one from each State, are chosen by the delegates from that state to the preceding national convention. The national committee which recently met in Chicago had been elected four years previously by the delegates to the convention which nominated Mr. Taft in 1908.

Of the 39 members who formed the solid Taft phalanx within the committee, 15 were defeated and repudiated within their own States a few weeks prior to the convention. Four represented Territories or insular possessions having no votes in a presidential election. Ten were from Southern States that have given no electoral vote to the Republican Party. When it is said of the committeemen that certain of them had been repudiated in their own States reference is made to such committeemen as Senator BOIES PENROSE, of Pennsylvania, who had failed of election as a delegate to the national convention. In the same category is Senator W. MURRAY CRANE, of Massachusetts. Senator CRANE had been defeated in his own State for election as delegate at large to the convention and failed to secure reelection as a member of the national committee. Mr. Victor Rosewater, of Nebraska, had been defeated in his State as a candidate for national committeeman and sat upon the national committee for the last time; and there were numerous others in the same plight.

The notorious part in the committee's proceedings played by PENROSE, CRANE, Rosewater, and their companions in defeat, like the final shot of the retreating Parthian, marked their egress from the field of active politics.

There were thus 29 members, or 2 more than a majority of the whole committee, who were without any political standing whatever, and yet had the power to unseat delegates elected by popular State-wide primaries, as in the case of California; to recognize delegates without a shadow of right to sit in the convention, as in the case of Texas; and thus by a series of indefensible decisions, disregarding evidence, ignoring merits, and in some instances without any basis whatever for their action, to mold and fix arbitrarily the composition of the national convention.

The total number of delegates making up the convention was 1,078. To nominate Mr. Taft required 540 delegates. Mr. Taft did not have this number of votes in the convention. Of the honestly elected delegates Mr. Roosevelt had a decisive majority.

How was Mr. Taft to be nominated? Not by a minority, that was clear. He had been unable to win a majority. That majority had to be found.

The national committee, bound to Mr. Taft by Federal patronage and all the ligaments and prepossessions of machine politics, proceeded to find it. In one Indiana contest affidavits were filed showing that a majority of the entire number of delegates constituting a district convention had not voted for the Taft delegates who presented false certificates of election. At first it was decided to exclude such evidence. Then it was decided to receive the affidavits, but to ignore their contents and the facts which they incontrovertibly established, and seat the Taft delegates. It was so ordered. This was the case in the thirteenth congressional district of Indiana.

The delegates elected from Texas were undeniably the regular and lawful delegates. But they were for Roosevelt. To have recognized their credentials from the Republican State convention of Texas would have been tantamount to conceding Roosevelt's nomination. It was not to be thought of. Without a qualm the national committee violated all its own precedents and seated Taft delegates elected by a bolting minority from the State convention, in admitted violation of the Terrell election law of the State of Texas.

The committee met in an ugly temper on the morning of June 6. It had long been rumored, in fact it was openly charged, that their purpose was to count Mr. Taft in, by fair means or foul. They were not long in confirming suspicion as to their intent and purpose.

The minority of delegates which Mr. Taft's managers had gathered up in a raid through the rotten boroughs of Southern republicanism could not give him the nomination. That was clear. So the national committee, with letters of marque and reprisal from the President, started out like privateers to capture Taft delegates wherever pretext could be manufactured or quibble invented.

It mattered little that the great Republican States from which the party has always drawn its electoral strength had by huge majorities repudiated Mr. Taft's candidacy. The national committeemen belong to the old school of politics. They believe in government by "a representative part of the people." They like the rôle of dispensers in their several States of Federal patronage. They did not propose to "let go" without a struggle. The new-fangled idea of popular primaries had never appealed to them. It was "dangerous" doctrine, this heresy that a national convention should register the will of the voters. Popular rule, so the committee felt, was an insolent intrusion by the people into the committee's hitherto unchallenged autocracy. It must be sternly crushed.

The task was congenial to the majority of the committee. A large number of its members were embittered by personal defeat. It was manifest to all that Mr. Taft, if nominated, stood no chance of election. His errors, his betrayals of the people, his partiality to special interest, his vacillations, his overwhelming repudiation in the pre-convention contest for delegates in the Republican States, left no room for doubt that he was a beaten candidate before the campaign could be opened. But the party organization remained, and the committeemen, although beaten and discredited, resolved to fight for their clutch on the party organization, as a nucleus for the reconstruction of their shattered political power. In fact, the defeat of Mr. Taft was looked upon as not such a bad thing. It might be easier, these so-called leaders reasoned, to rebuild their local power after a defeat of the national ticket instead of having to combat the vigorous resistance of a self-confident and victorious party, with antibossism one of its cardinal principles.

While it was true that Mr. Taft's nomination spelled party defeat, they themselves having been repudiated by their party, felt the temptation to retaliate against the Republican voters by coupling with their personal disasters the defeat of the ticket, and thus invite the inference that the two results were related.

Never before in the history of the Republican Party did the national committee meet for the acknowledged purpose of forcing the nomination of a candidate already defeated and of excluding from the program of the convention any measure or resolve that could make for the success of the party at the polls.

For temporary chairman of the convention they selected the most conspicuous servant which the forces of privilege have ever found. They made no mistake. Some men might have revolted from the work assigned to Senator ROOT, but he leaped to the task and surpassed even the expectations of his friends. The convention fairly gasped when he ruled that, nowithstanding the presence of a duly elected delegate in the convention who declined to vote, the convention could permit an alternate to vote in his stead. This actually happened, this monstrous ruling, on the call of the roll for the nomination of the President. The ruling was not made, however, until the State of Massachusetts, far down in the alphabetical order of States, had been reached, and not until it was possible, in making the ruling, to record the vote of a Taft alternate in place of a regular Roosevelt delegate.

By this indefensible act Mr. ROOT made a personal contribution of two votes to Mr. Taft's slender majority on the fraudulently padded roll.

With these facts in mind, it can readily be appreciated just how judicially disposed the national committee was when Mr. Rosewater, of Nebraska, making his farewell appearance as a member of the committee, brought his gavel down and announced that the committee was now prepared to "judicially" examine and decide upon the claims of rival delegates, representing Mr. Taft on the one hand and Mr. Roosevelt on the other.

Their first business was to adopt a set of rules, and the most important rule proposed was that there should be no roll call except upon a request concurred in by 20 members. They calculated that there were only about 11 or 12 members of the committee who were impartial or friendly to Mr. Roosevelt, and that by restricting roll calls to requests by at least 20 members they were throwing a protecting pall of secrecy about their action, and could then do about as they pleased without bearing the burden or odium personally of their conduct. This proposal called out an eloquent protest from Senator BORAH, of Idaho. He insisted that a fairer rule in this respect should be adopted, and moved that a roll call of the committee be ordered if requested by 10 members of the committee.

The Constitution of the United States (Art. I, sec. 5) provides that the yeas and nays of the Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate shall be recorded on the desire of one-fifth of those present.

The rules of the New York State Assembly provide that the yeas and nays shall be recorded on the request of 10 members, the assembly having a membership of 150.

Senator BORAH, in behalf of his motion, said:

I do not make this motion with any expectancy, even if it is carried, of assisting the candidate with whose interest it is known I am allied. I do not presume for a moment that it will result in the seating of any delegate who will not otherwise be seated, or of not seating any delegate who would otherwise not be seated. I understand perfectly that those in the majority here have the votes to seat whom they would seat, and will do so, whatever the manner of procedure of this committee may be. I make this motion for another reason. We are representing here a great party organization. We are supposed to represent the millions who constitute the rank and file of the party. We meet under extraordinary conditions, and under circumstances, in some respects, most unfortunate. What we do, therefore, ought to be done in the open, and every vote recorded with an individual responsibility behind it.

I can not believe this committee is going to seat men who manifestly have no right to a seat, but if you are going to do so, for the sake of your party do it openly and aboveboard, and put your individuality and your courage, though in a bad cause, behind your vote.

Are you ready to answer to your constituents when you go home? Let's make a record that can not be assailed, at least, for cowardice.

According to the Chicago press accounts, at this point an effort was made to take Senator BORAH off his feet by moving to lay the motion on the table. He said he would not submit to gag rule; that he had a right to address the committee, and that he proposed to do so so long as he was not physically taken out. A long wrangle and shouting of different people at the top of their voices continued, while the chairman in the meantime was putting the motion to lay Senator BORAH'S motion on the table. He continued after quiet was regained, and said:

What are you men afraid of? What is it that you are going to do? If these delegates are entitled to seats, why should you conceal your record? Have you lost your courage? Are you ashamed of what is going to happen? I do not hesitate to say that men who have not the moral courage to record in the open every vote which they cast in a matter so vital to the party are unworthy to represent the great Republican organization. The man who has the legitimate majority of the delegates to this convention should be nominated, and when so nominated he will be loyally supported by all. But it doesn't make any difference who is nominated, whether it be one candidate or another. If he is nominated by the seating of delegates whose seating you dare not defend, it will be a disastrous day when it is done.

It only remains to add the comment of the Chicago reporter who was at the scene, and who said:

After Senator BORAH concluded his plea, his proposal was steamrollered—defeated by a viva voce vote.

Thus the number of members who might demand a roll call remained at 20.

The vote of the committee denying the newspapers generally access to their hearings, and restricting the channels of publicity to a handful of press association representatives, was another step taken at the outset which gave a significant clew to the committee's program.

But there was no need to depend upon mere clews or suggestions or inferences from such acts as above related for knowledge of the committee's purposes. In the Chicago Tribune of June 8 the following conversations between members of the committee were reported:

While the ninth Alabama contest was under consideration Senator W. MURRAY CRANE suggested to several members of the committee that it would be wise tactics to seat the Roosevelt delegates.

"Big Steve" Stephenson, of Colorado, who holds a proxy from former Senator Nathan B. Scott, of West Virginia, is reported to have replied:

"We can't afford to let them have it. We might be able to spare two votes now, but we must look ahead to the time when we will have to give them something. We can't do it now."

When the ninth district contest was settled by a vote of 38 to 15 in favor of the Taft forces, National Committeeman Mulvane, an ardent Taft man, of Kansas, said to a man friendly to Col. Roosevelt:

"Now you fellows have got an inkling of what you are going to get. Are you going to waste our time going over all these contests?"

"What do you fellows intend to do?" Mulvane was asked. "You know you surely can't elect Taft."

To which Mulvane is said to have responded:

"We can't elect Taft, but we are going to hold on to this organization and when we get back four years from now we will have it and not those d—— insurgents."

These are not pleasant facts to dwell upon, and we will leave the discredited national committee to the indignation of the great political party it has compromised and betrayed.

THE CONTESTS, INCLUDING SOME OBSERVATIONS ON THE SO-CALLED "TAFT DEFENSE."

The contests instituted on behalf of the Roosevelt delegates involved 238 delegates. A large proportion of these contests originated in the Southern States, and were in the nature of protests against the fraud and corruption which have characterized the party administration in the Southern States for more than a generation. The Republican Party in many of the Southern States, like Alabama and Louisiana, is a "ghost" party, polling an inconsiderable number of votes, and really a mere name, continued in the interest of a little clique of Federal officeholders who maintain a sham party organization as a side adjunct to their business of absorbing local Federal patronage. These conditions have recently been the subject of telling exposures in Collier's Weekly.

The temptation to use these readily controlled political machines has proven more than the administration in Washington could apparently resist, and there has been an intimate connection between the organization of fraudulent Taft conventions in the Southern States and the bestowal of rewards in the shape of local Federal appointments.

These conditions have long been a scandal in the party, and attempts have been made in the past to reduce the representation of the Southern States in the national convention. In the State of Louisiana, for instance, the Republican Party does not poll enough votes to meet the definition of the Louisiana statutes of a political party, and yet the State has a representation in the national convention almost equal to that of great Republican States like Minnesota and California, with their hundreds of thousands of voters.

These Southern States never cast an electoral vote for a Republican candidate for President, and yet through the operation of Federal patronage give to a President seeking renomination upward of 200 votes in the nominating convention, which can be readily controlled, although representing no Republican thought, sentiment, or voting strength. Taft received 244 votes from such Southern States. He could not have spared the single Democratic State of Alabama, nor Virginia, nor Georgia.

So low is the vitality of the Republican Party in these Southern States that these conditions have been suffered to continue without effectual protest for many years.

This year the candidacy of Theodore Roosevelt and his strong support by the progressive Republicans seemed to give promise of more honest conditions at the convention and to indicate that, despite the failures of the past, a protest against these intolerable conditions, if made before the Chicago convention, might secure consideration and lead to recognition of the true sentiment of the convinced and genuine Republicans of the South.

In many of the Southern States the formalities in relation to the call of the conventions were wholly disregarded. Conventions were held without notice or upon irregular notice. The participation of the voters in the choice of local delegates was not desired nor sought, but, on the contrary, every fraudulent device was employed to exclude such participation. This did not prevent the manufacture of artistic credentials. The material recitals entering into sound credentials were unhesitatingly embodied in the certificates of election, but in many cases these certificates contained false recitals of fact. The most effective instrument of party regularity in the South is still the typewriter, and from an analysis of the tribunal to which these contests were referred it is apparent that superficial regularity on the part of Taft delegates was all that was needed.

The so-called official statement issued over the signature of the defeated national committeeman from Nebraska, Mr. Rosewater, speaks slightingly of the Roosevelt contests. These contests were brought in absolute sincerity and good faith, and in no instance were they devoid of merit and genuine equity. In several contests the national committee voted with unanimity, but this was due to the fact that in the conscientious opinion of the Roosevelt members of the committee, although impressed with the equities of the Roosevelt cases, it was felt that the proofs had not been brought to a degree of affirmative preponderance sufficient to overcome the artful surface appearance of regularity which the facile coiners of Taft credentials uniformly contrived to give to their cases.

This disposition on the part of Roosevelt men not to allow their preferences for Mr. Roosevelt to sway their judicial consideration of the contests, and their determination to be just in cases of doubt or insufficiency of proof, even to the Taft side, were without effect upon the unrelenting majority of the Taft steam roller.

To the disinterested examiner of the contests, however, this concurrence by the Roosevelt committeemen in certain detached cases must give all the greater weight to their dissenting votes in those pivotal contests where the equities of the Roosevelt contests were unanswerable, such as in Washington, Texas, California, and Arizona.

Time and space forbid a detailed enumeration of the false assertions contained in the Taft defense. Where downright misstatement is not possible resort is had to disingenuous suggestion and deceptive form of statement. For instance, on page 4 of the Taft defense the statement appears that "in no other convention was so much care exercised or so much time devoted to the investigation of contests." This statement is amusing when compared with the motion that was actually made in the credentials committee that the time taken for a roll call could be saved if the secretary was directed to record the vote as uniformly given on prior contests without continuing the formality of actually taking the vote.

And, again, a line or two further appears the statement that "no delegate was permitted to vote upon any contest affecting the right to his own seat." This is an extraordinary assertion in the light of the minority report of the credentials committee, in which a protest is filed against the following members of the credentials committee sitting and participating in the action of the committee, to wit, Mr. J. C. Adams, of Arizona; Mr. C. A. Warnken, of Texas; and Mr. W. T. Dovell, of Washington, for the reason that these men were elected by entire delegations whose seats were contested.

Again, a protest was made against the same gentlemen participating in and voting upon the questions in any of the contests, upon the ground that they were in effect sitting as judges in their own cases.

A further protest was made by the minority of the credentials committee against Mr. Thomas H. Devine, of Colorado, chairman of the credentials committee and one of the signers of the so-called Taft defense; against Mr. Fred W. Estabrook, of New Hampshire; Mr. Henry Blun, jr., of Georgia; Mr. L. B. Mosely, of Mississippi; and Mr. L. P. Shackleford, of Alaska, from sitting on the committee, for the reason that they were members of the national committee and participated in its deliberations and actions, and therefore should not be permitted, as members of a court of appeal, to sit in review of their own prior decisions.

There were only two roll calls on the contests in the convention, involving two delegates from California and two from the ninth district of Alabama. In these cases a mock concession to fairness was made in a rule which prohibited a delegate from participating in the convention vote of over a thousand on a contest affecting that delegate's seat. But the Taft defense does not say, what is very material in this connection, that the entire body of fraudulently seated delegates, bound together by the solidarity of mutual wrongdoing and the sense of common fraudulent interest, were permitted to vote.

On page 13 of the labored Taft defense appears in italics the statement in reference to the bolting Taft convention in Arizona, that "if only the uncontested delegates in the Taft convention had been permitted to vote the Taft delegates would have been in the majority," and this is cited in support of the equities of the Taft delegates from Arizona. But no mention is made in the account of the Indiana contest of the fact that if only the uncontested delegates in the Indiana State convention had voted the Roosevelt delegates would have been elected by a clear and decisive majority. In Indiana the Taft delegates were only elected by padding the convention roll with 124 contested delegates, and then permitting the latter to vote in favor of the retention of their seats.

Speaking of the Indiana contest, on page 18 a reference is made to the Indianapolis Star as having "been neutral in the contest between Taft and Roosevelt." Not so neutral as Taft's defenders would have it appear. The Indianapolis Star, in its editorial columns on March 27, thus reveals its "neutrality" in an editorial assailing the election of the Taft delegates by the Indiana State convention. Speaking of the "flaw in their title," the Indianapolis Star says:

Much as the Star desires the nomination and reelection of President Taft, it greatly regrets that the verdict of Indiana Republicans in his favor could not have been straight and clear.

A newpaper is neutral, it would appear, in the Taft opinion when it is honest. If it had defended the dishonest action of the Indiana State convention, it possibly might fall in the category of a pro-Taft newspaper.

The disingenuousness of the Taft defense is shown in their statement of the California contest. The misstatement is contained therein to the effect that the result in the fourth California district was certified by the registrar of voters of the city and county of San Francisco, but the further information is not vouchsafed that this certification of the vote in the fourth district was thereafter canceled and rescinded as being not only incorrect, but, by reason of local conditions, impossible. There were 14 precincts in this district which overlapped the adjoining district, the fifth, and it was impossible to determine what the actual vote was in the district for the Taft and Roosevelt delegates, who were candidates under the provisions of the State law for election as delegates at large.

Again, on page 16, it speaks of the decision of the California contest as dictated by a precedent laid down in the national convention of 1880. In 1880, however, there was no question of a State election law involved, nor of a popular primary, resulting in a majority of 77,000, which it was necessary for the national committee to get around and disregard. Analogy must be closer than this to constitute a precedent.

But the Taft defense says, on page 18, still speaking of California:

It is absolutely irrelevant to the question at issue how much majority the Roosevelt ticket had in the State at large.

In this admission is contained the key to the whole policy of the Taft majority on the national committee. Again and again the attorneys for the Taft contestants or contestees, in cases where the proof showed an overwhelming vote and sentiment behind the Roosevelt delegates, assured the national committee or the credentials committee that the Taft credentials were all regular, that the "t's" were crossed and the "i's" were dotted, that the call had been copied into the minutes of the convention, and that everything had been done according to rule. To the steam-rolling majority on both the national and credentials committees this seemed to determine the question. They also thought it absolutely irrelevant to the question at issue how large a majority the Roosevelt delegates in contest might have behind them.

In the Texas case the Taft defense opens with the statement:

The issue as to the eight delegates at large from the State of Texas is not merely a political one, but a moral one.

No disinterested man who examines the Taft statement of the Texas case would undertake to defend the national committee's action. Taft's apologists beg the whole question in the sentence above quoted, that the issue is a moral one and not a political one. They can only mean that, conceding that the Roosevelt delegates from Texas were the legally elected delegates, they should not have been chosen on moral reasons. In other words, that there were reasons extraneous to the regularity and legality of their election which should control.

This was precisely the point argued before the national committee. It was conceded that the Taft delegates from Texas were irregular; that they were elected at a bolting convention held by an inconsiderable minority of the delegates elected to the State convention. The regular convention had elected Roosevelt delegates by a vote of 162 to 13. There were only 27 of the 249 Texas counties which had instructed for Taft, and of these 27 counties the delegates representing 13 participated in the regular State convention. It was, nevertheless, insisted that the Roosevelt delegates did not represent the true Republican sentiment of the State. This was the whole Taft case in the State of Texas. However, on that point we have the statement of D. G. Ruggles, editor of the Houston Daily Post, published in the Brooklyn Eagle of July 28, attempting the justification of the national committee. The editor of the Houston Post, however, says in his statement:

Were Theodore Roosevelt in Texas and facing a presidential primary he would doubtless carry the State, as far as Republicanism is concerned, even Taft Republicans will acknowledge.

It would thus appear that the "moral" question disapears before admitted fact, and that the contention of the Taft defense is overruled even by the Taft Republicans in Texas.

There was but one question on which the decision of every contest hinged. Were the contestants for Taft or were they for Roosevelt? If for Roosevelt, a pretext must be found for excluding them from the convention. If they were for Taft, it didn't make any difference what pretext was selected, they were promptly seated.

In the Texas case it was claimed that the Republican organization of Texas was standing in the way of Republican growth in Texas. Figures were presented contrasting the vote of the Republican Party in 1896 with the vote cast by the Republicans in the last gubernatorial election in Texas.

If a lawyer in court made such a use of statistics or data he would be rebuked and disciplined. The manifest intention is to deceive. It is well known that in 1896 hundreds of thousands of Democrats throughout the country deserted their party for the purpose of putting down the free-silver heresy and of saving the country from Bryan. The Taft defense contrasts the vote in Texas of 65,000 for Taft in 1908 with 26,000 cast by the Republican Party in the election for governor in 1910 as an argument for ignoring the Republican organization, the regularity of its convention, and the legitimacy of its election.

The same argument, if applied to President Taft's own State of Ohio, where in 1910 the Republican Party, handicapped by Taft's record, lost the governorship and control of the State by approximately 100,000 votes, although the party had carried the State two years previously for the national ticket, would have resulted in the exclusion of the fraudulent delegates at large from Ohio, elected at a State convention held a few days after Roosevelt had swept the State of Ohio by a majority over Taft of nearly 50,000.

We ask the question, Does Mr. Taft think the State convention of Ohio, which gave him six delegates at large, represented the Republicanism of Ohio? If it did not, should not his delegates at large from that State have been unseated on the considerations advanced in his interest in the Texas case?

But the national committee cared nothing for consistency. They were there only to seat Taft delegates and to exclude Roosevelt delegates. In Washington it was conceded that Roosevelt had carried every primary overwhelmingly. It was conceded that the Roosevelt delegates were in a majority in the State convention.

In this case, however, the national committee decided, notwithstanding that the Taft convention represented only a minority, that it was regular, and that, notwithstanding the majority behind the Roosevelt delegates, their convention was irregular and they were merely bolters.

It is impossible for the national committee to have been right in both the Texas and Washington cases, as the reason adopted for one decision was rejected in the other.

In the Indiana case the Roosevelt minority on the national committee concurred in the vote to seat the Taft delegates because the decisive votes in the State convention were cast by delegates who had been chosen at a so-called primary election.

It was conceded by the Taft men on the committee that the primary had been characterized by widespread fraud, intimidation, and repeating; but it was claimed that the proof of fraud did not affirmatively establish that a sufficient number of votes should have been rejected for this reason to have reversed the primary result. The Roosevelt men on the committee, looking ahead to the later cases in which the title of Roosevelt delegates was derived from popular primaries, decided in the Indiana case to stand by the basic principle of the authority of the primary, and concurred in the vote.

But when the steam-rolling majority of the national committee encountered a primary in which Roosevelt delegates had been elected by a majority of 77,000, as in California, they dug up as a pretext for unseating the Roosevelt delegates from the fourth California district a precedent from the national convention of 1880, in conflict with the statute law of the State of California, and established as a precedent at a time when the primary had not been introduced as a method of electing delegates.

Upon the moral question which receives so much stress in the Taft defense in the Texas case, we have the word of the New York World, applying to the moral question of Taft's candidacy in its entirety, and not to any specific contest. Says the New York World:

Morally, the Taft administration has been rejected by the Republican Party.

In a recent issue the Detroit News said, referring to the Chicago convention:

There were 10 men at the Republican national convention in Chicago writing for the Detroit News. All of these men are writers of wide experience in political affairs, some of them having attended every national convention for 20 years. Each was at liberty to write reports of events just as he saw them. Two have a dislike for Theodore Roosevelt that amounts almost to a hatred, but every one of the 10 agreed on one proposition. It was, that William Howard Taft did not have enough duly elected delegates to control the convention and nominate himself.

The question as to the good faith and honesty of the national committee's disposition of the contests is not worthy of serious consideration.

The impartial observers of events at Chicago were the newspaper correspondents. Collier's Weekly, in its issue of July 29, under the caption "The stolen delegates," publishes the following extracts from various newspapers the country over, and entitles its page "Comment on the illegality of Taft's nomination from newspapers of every shade of political belief":

[The Spokane Spokesman-Review.]

There is no "bluff" back of the Roosevelt contesting delegation from Washington. * * * The people of Washington know—and none more than the Taft machine leaders—that Col. Roosevelt is entitled to the 14 votes from this State.

[Chicago News.]

The victor at the end was as lonely as Robinson Crusoe. He had been renominated by representatives of a minority of the Republican Party. He had been given a majority of the delegates by unscrupulous work on the part of the old national committee, now dead. Much of this work was so scandalously bad that it could not be condoned by the progressives who were its victims.

[Newark (N. J.) News.]

There is no mistaking the validity of Roosevelt's claim to be the chosen leader of the majority of the rank and file of those who vote customarily under the Republican emblem. His defeat at the convention has been at the hands of a minority and by the arbitrary rulings of a political committee irresponsible to the party voters. The rulings of the committee were not even consistent, except on the ground that wherever Taft could be given a delegate that was the thing to do.

[Richmond Times-Dispatch.]

With CRANE and PENROSE in control at Chicago, with Ryan and Murphy in control at Baltimore, why should not the independent voter feel that a third party is his only salvation? Whose fault will it be if the Democratic Party is split in two? And what will Virginia say of her share in that business?

[Dallas Morning News.]

The fundamental and sufficient cause of this secession was not the ambition of any man or of any set of men, but the conviction, widespread and deep, in the masses of the Republican Party that their loyalty to that party was being used by a coterie of bosses to serve corrupt ends, that they were being betrayed by the very men who were foremost in preaching the virtue of loyalty. Coming to Chicago with a minority of the votes, despotism and fraud were resorted to to supply what votes the cause needed to make it dominant.

[Hartford Times.]

Defend the procedure there as much as Chairman Roraback and others may please, and the fact remains that 72 of the delegates whose seats were in dispute were allowed to sit in judgment on their own credentials. Might just as well have a thief sit in the jury box, so far as fairness and equity are concerned.

[The Springfield Republican.]

There has never been a time when the Republican Party pretended to make its national nominating conventions representative necessarily of the majority sentiment of Republican voters.

[Sioux City (Iowa) Tribune.]

The same kind of a deal in a legislature would have opened the doors of the penitentiary for the men making it. It was as corrupt as anything that was done in the election of Lorimer. Abe Ruef never planned anything more atrocious against the public. Roosevelt could not connect himself with such corruption.

[The New Orleans Item.]

Mr. Roosevelt had the Republican masses behind him. Mr. Taft had the levers of the party's machinery in his hands. The band of self-seekers behind Mr. Taft, who have discredited the Republican Party, with this machinery at their command, have been able to steal a presidential nomination belonging to Mr. Roosevelt and bestow it on Mr. Taft.

[Los Angeles Tribune.]

Thus, delegates seated by fraud, in the interests of a candidate ignominiously rejected, became the instruments whereby the will of a legitimate majority was nullified. * * * Thieves were named to make up a majority of a committee that was to try them, and the progressives rightly refused to act with the thieves.

[La Crosse (Wis.) Tribune.]

Of the two men who engaged in this fight, Roosevelt enjoyed the greater popularity. He might have been elected President. That Taft can not be is conceded by many who helped force his nomination. Yet these men said to the Progressive Republicans: "You must swallow Taft and wreck the party." If the great mass of Republicans who have been in the fight for truly representative government take the bosses at their word, the wreck will be upon the heads of those who in the interest of minority rule have pulled the pillars from beneath the temple.

[Chicago Evening Post.]

In our judgment, that nomination was a tainted nomination. There were in it trickery and fraud. Stripped to its practical essentials, it was a nomination made by a minority instead of a majority. * * *. The miserable 21 votes above the nominating point which the "steam-roller" drivers were able to muster fade instantly away under scrutiny from any standpoint of representative determination.

[The San Francisco Bulletin.]

California indorses the third party, founded by the honest majority of the recent Republican convention and submitted to the people of the United States by its progressives. California indorses Gov. Johnson's brave stand, not only in fighting the thieves to a finish, not only in refusing to be bound by the action of a stolen convention, but in leaving that fraudulent convention and taking the leading part in forming a new party and carrying out the will of our 77,000 majority by nominating the man wanted.

[Chicago Tribune.]

The suicidal success won in a fraud-packed convention by the discredited remnants of standpat leadership in the Republican Party has served only to throw into higher relief the progressive leadership of Theodore Roosevelt. No other man in public life could have accomplished what he has done in the preconvention fight.

[Kansas City Star.]

The enthusiastic determination of the people to elect a progressive President in spite of the fraud workers of the national committee in Chicago is the most natural thing in the world. Being overwhelmingly progressive before that crime against popular government was perpetrated, the people are logically now more strongly than ever determined to control their Government.

It is impossible within reasonable compass to present the Roosevelt side in more than a few of the cases. The following have been selected not because they are the most flagrant instances of high-handed injustice on the part of the national committee, but because the facts in the cases lend themselves most readily to reasonably brief statement. They are sufficient. President Taft was nominated by 21 votes—or by 19, if the 2 from Massachusetts are omitted which were counted only by the extraordinary ruling of Chairman ROOT that when a delegate answers "Present, but not voting," his alternate shall be allowed to vote—always providing that alternate is a Taft man and the delegate is a Roosevelt man.

Taking only four of the cases hereinafter cited, namely, California, Arizona, Washington, and Texas at large, these cases in their narrowest application cover 30 votes. The change of these 30 votes would have defeated Taft and would have reversed all the important actions of the convention.

THE CALIFORNIA CONTEST.

The action of the convention sustaining the prior action of its credentials committee and of the national committee in seating two contesting Taft delegates from the State of California was productive of more bitter and outspoken resentment than any other than they did would have been to expose themselves to Taft's interests.

When the Progressive Republicans of California were swept into power in 1910 as the result of a great protest against the domination of the State by a corrupt ring which had held sway for many years they found a law upon the statute book which would have enabled their leaders to select arbitrarily, as formerly had been done, a full quota of delegates to the national convention. The Progressive Republicans determined, however, notwithstanding the possession of this power, to yield it in favor of a popular presidential-preference primary as being more in accord with the temper of the people and the principles for which the Republican Party stood. Accordingly a presidential-preference primary law was passed whereby the choice of a full delegation from the State of California was to be determined by a popular State-wide primary vote.

Mr. Taft, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and Mr. Roosevelt filed the statement required by the California primary law, announcing themselves as candidates for the votes of the people, which could only be cast under this law, and accepting the provisions of the law and agreeing to abide by the popular verdict. Mr. Taft on May 12, two days before the primary election was held, addressed a message to the voters of California, in which he said:

On the eve of your presidential primary in California I venture to appeal to the Republican men and women who exercise the franchise to consider fairly well the legislative and executive achievements of my administration, and especially those which have affected California, and say whether they do not deserve the approval of California.

I submit a record is formed that entitles this administration to the support of the Republican men and women of California, and that it is progressive to the highest degree.

The election was held. Twenty-six delegates were voted for throughout the State of California. None were nominated or voted upon as district delegates. Each, under the provisions of the law, agreed to abide by the operation of the law, and became a candidate for delegate under the terms of the law.

The result was an overwhelming expression of popular preference for Mr. Roosevelt. He received 146,000 votes. Mr. Taft, running second to him, received only 69,000 votes. The result was conclusive. It was acquiesced in by all, even up to a time several days subsequent to the convening of the national committee in Chicago.

The first premonition that there would be an attempt to unseat any of the California delegates elected by a majority of 77,000 voters was in the form of a tentative announcement before the national committee by counsel, suggesting that California might be the subject of a contest, and asking that it be postponed until the national committee had neared the completion of its hearings, as it was conceived to be likely that a question affecting two of the Roosevelt delegates might be presented to the national committee.

The mere suggestion called forth indignant protests from all quarters. This was steam rolling with a vengeance. It was no ordinary convention contest, involving the usual questions as to whether the call of a county convention was regular or whether the chair had the right to fill vacancies on a district committee or whether the place of meeting had been duly designated or the notice published as required by law. These are favorite stand-bys of delegations which rely upon steam-rolling majorities in the national or credentials committees. The question involved in California was, Shall a national committee flout the mandate of 146,000 Republican voters in a great Republican State? Not one of the Southern States, where the Republican Party for years has been a byword and a jest; not a rotten borough, but a sovereign Republican State, whose electoral vote has been cast many times for the candidate of the Republican Party and whose vote the success of the party in any close election may absolutely hinge upon.

But the rumor that the national committee intended to edit and revise the result of the California primary was persistent. At first it was not believed. It did not seem possible that folly and callousness could go so far. The sentiment of the delegates to the convention was so angry, however, that the assurance was spread about that if on a later calculation of the Taft strength in the convention it was found that the votes which it had been determined to take from Roosevelt and transfer to Taft from the California delegation were not needed the convention might later bow gracefully to the storm of public indignation and reverse the action of the national committee, thereby gaining some credit before the people for impartiality. This point of security, however, the Taft forces never reached, and they were obliged to stand squarely upon their record of discreditable conduct.

Under the law of California, as of several other States, the method of electing delegates to nominate a presidential candidate is exactly analogous to the method of choosing electors to elect a president. The delegates favoring each candidate are placed on the ballot in a single group and are voted on by the State at large. This law passed the California Legislature by unanimous vote and was accepted by all parties and factions. The Republican candidates, including Mr. Taft, personally signed their approval of the several groups of delegates running in their names. The election was regularly held under the law, and the 26 Roosevelt delegates received and filed their certificates of election from the Secretary of State. There was no dispute of their election under the law. The contest was on the law itself.

The convention call of the national committee provided that the election should be by districts, while the law of California required it to be by the State at large. The delegates, therefore, were elected at large, but on the issue being raised on two of the 26 delegates from California the national committee put its call above the law and reversed the result of the election.

Even aside from this nullification of the law the California contest rested on no basis of fact. The Roosevelt delegates carried every county but one in the State and received decisive majorities in all the congressional districts but one. In the fourth district, comprising roughly the northern half of the city of San Francisco, the margin was so close that it would depend on the votes of 14 border precincts, casting 1,685 Republican votes, which were situated partly in the fourth and partly in the fifth district. The registrar of voters of San Francisco and the Secretary of State both certified that it was impossible to tell how many of these votes were cast in the fourth district or who received a majority in that district. The committee, however, disregarded these certificates and rested instead on a previous certificate issued by the Secretary of State by mistake, and subsequently revoked by him, and on this flimsy basis concluded that the 26 Taft delegates had received a few more votes in the district than the 26 Roosevelt delegates.

Three of the Taft group and three of the Roosevelt group happened to be residents of this district, so the committee arbitrarily chose two of these three Roosevelt delegates for rejection and substituted for them as arbitrarily two of the three defeated Taft delegates—and not the ones who had the highest votes. The decision was based on neither law nor facts, since it was in direct repudiation of the law and had no facts other than guesswork as to the vote and arbitrary selection as to the individuals. The committee arrogated to itself a power which the Supreme Court of the United States has refused to exercise in analogous cases, and erected its temporary convention call into an authority over the election of delegates greater than that which the Constitution of the United States possesses over the selection of electors.

The California case clearly was the most far-reaching in its significance, because, while it directly affected only two votes, the principle enunciated in it would destroy the entire system of presidential primaries. The national committee bluntly decided in this case that it would nullify any State primary law which did not coincide with the terms of the committee's convention call. As convention calls are sure to differ from year to year, and those of one party from those of another, while State laws differ in one State from another but must be uniform in each State as to all parties, it follows that it must be beyond human ingenuity to devise a system whereby all State laws in all parties will coincide with the convention calls of all parties. The only principle on which the primary system can survive at all is that the laws of each State shall prevail as to the elections in that State. This principle the national committee squarely overthrew in the California case, and the new national committee, which will exercise the same powers in 1916, has explicitly taken the same ground as its predecessor.

When the California contest was called, Gov. Hiram Johnson, of California, declined to appear before the national committee. He refused to recognize that there could be any contest affecting the delegates from the fourth California district. He addressed a note to the national committee, in which he said:

> I will not submit the title of property to a trial by the thief who steals it. I consider it would be an insult to the people of California for me to appear before a committee which obsequiously receives Calhoun's Hogue, or even listens to a contest by Patrick Calhoun designed to override a majority of 77,000 Republicans, before a committee which has prejudged the contest.

Resolutions adopted by the California delegates were presented "condemning as a betrayal of trust, a violation of the precepts of decency and honor, and as an intentional assault upon the integrity of the Republican Party the outrageous conduct of the national committee and the discredited and repudiated bosses now dictating and controlling that committee, whereby delegates chosen by the people in their respective States in the interest of Theodore Roosevelt are being denied seats in said convention while their places are given to hand-picked machine puppets chosen by the bosses in the interest of William H. Taft."

The resolutions further called upon the California delegates to go to the limit of honorable endeavor to rebuke the tactics complained of, and to fight to the last for Roosevelt, a progressive ticket, and the progressive cause.

Mr. Francis J. Heney, who was present in the committee room, was asked by National Committeeman Chubb, of Florida, if he was present to argue the California cases. "No," said Mr. Heney, "I have come here for the purpose of apprising the President that he is accepting stolen goods if he takes these delegates when you give them to him."

A motion was made by Mr. Estabrook, of New Hampshire, to seat the Taft delegates, so called, from the fourth California district.

Senator BORAH, of Idaho, offered as a substitute a motion that the Roosevelt delegates should retain the seats to which the California Republicans had elected them by a majority of 77,000.

A roll call on Mr. BORAH'S motion was requested and refused, under the rule which required the concurrent request of 20 members to obtain a roll call. A roll call, however, was permitted on the Estabrook motion, and resulted in 37 affirmative votes to seat the Taft men, and 16 negative votes.

In the debate which took place over the fourth California district, President Taft's procedure was defended by Senator MURRAY CRANE and Senator BOIES PENROSE.

There were present in a private conference room near the committee room during the debate and while the vote was going on Assistant Secretary of the Treasury R. O. Bailey, as well as the President's private secretary, Charles D. Hilles, and Secretary Nagel, of the President's Cabinet.

Reports of the progress of the discussion before the national committe were from time to time borne to this group of conferees in this side room, and when the result was reached it was hailed by the personal representatives of Mr. Taft with every manifestation of satisfaction and approval. Thus was the fraudulent result wrought in his behalf ratified and adopted by Mr. Taft.

THE TEXAS CONTEST—DELEGATES AT LARGE.

Eight delegates at large from the State of Texas, headed by Cecil A. Lyon, were unseated by the national committee by a viva voce vote, after refusing the request of Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH, of Idaho, for a roll call. The action was taken shamefacedly, nervously, and hurriedly, and it was manifest to everyone who had followed the flimsy argument put forward by the contesting delegation and who heard the unanswerable argument made on behalf of the regular delegates who were unseated by the committee that the vote was in clear and conscious disregard of the merits of the case. Hon. Timothy L. Woodruff, ex lieutenant governor of the State of New York, a member of the uninstructed New York delegation, who had repeatedly declared that he was for Taft, at the announcement of the vote on the Texas contest said that he was so strongly moved by the injustice of the committee's action that he would henceforth not be for Mr. Taft if nominated by a convention whose temporary roll was thus made up.

The Texas delegation was absolutely essential to the nomination of Mr. Taft. How essential it was recognized as being appears from the fact that the national committee violated all the precedents it had itself established in other contests, disregarded the law of Texas relating to the election of delegates to a State convention, ignored the unassailable regularity of the Texas State convention and of the credentials it had issued to delegates elected by it, and now finds itself in the peculiar position of having discredited the convention by which the electors on the Republican ticket in the State of Texas were chosen and whose places on the official ballot at the approaching November election will be due exclusively to the regularity which the national committee invaded and disregarded.

Texas has 249 counties. Two hundred and eight counties duly elected delegates to the State convention that was held in the city of Fort Worth on May 28, 1912. The remaining 41 counties are either not organized under the Texas laws or are not organized under the rules of the Republican State executive committee of Texas or failed to present proper credentials within the specified time. Contests were presented to the executive committee, acting as a credentials committee in accordance with Texas law and party usage, from 17 counties.

These contests were referred to subcommittees of three members each, and on each subcommittee both the Taft and Roosevelt forces were represented. The reports of the subcommittees were unanimous, with the exception one subcommittee, in which the Taft member presented a minority report at variance with the majority conclusion in respect to contests affecting two counties. As a result of the investigation of the contests, by a vote of 28 to 2, the State executive committee seated Taft delegates from four counties. Four other counties were divided between Taft and Roosevelt delegations. In nine counties the Roosevelt delgations were seated.

The temporary roll of the State convention was adopted by the State executive committee by a vote of 28 to 2, the 28 including 3 Taft supporters. The convention duly assembled in accordance with the notice duly given, in the Savoy Theater, at Fort Worth, on May 28. The temporary roll was adopted by the convention unanimously, 172 votes being cast out of a possible 211. Delegates to the national convention were selected and instructed for Roosevelt by a vote of 162¾ against 13¼. Thirteen of the twenty-seven counties that had previously been instructed for Taft were included in this vote, and only 14 counties of the 208 which had legally and duly participated in the selection of delegates to the convention were absent from the State convention. In all calculations the 41 unorganized counties are ignored.

The delegates thus elected were chosen in accordance with the terms of the call of the Republican national committee, with the laws of the State of Texas, and the long-existing and unquestioned usages of the Republicans of the State of Texas, and presented duly drawn and executed credentials certifying these facts to the national committee.

But the votes of the Texas delegates were needed to nominate Mr. Taft, and this is the way the trick was done: At 9.30 a. m. on May 28, 1912, a group of Taft delegates, including a number of contesting delegates who had been denied seats in the State convention by votes in which Taft members of the State executive committee had concurred, met in caucus at Byer's Opera House. It was not claimed by the Taft people that more than 89 people participated in this caucus. They proceeded to select delegates to the national convention, whom they instructed for Taft.

It was conceded before the national committee by the Taft contestants from Texas that the Texas State convention was absolutely regular, and that the decision of the 17 contests filed did not and could not possibly affect the majority of the State convention or its proceedings. The contestants based their entire claim to seats as delegates to the national convention upon the proposition that they represented the true Republican sentiment of Texas, and that the regular State Republican convention did not represent the true Republican sentiment.

They also assailed the Texas statute known as the Terrell law, which provides that every county shall have at least one vote in a State convention, and said that it was an unfair basis of representation. This contention is hardly worthy of discussion, because it is concededly not sanctioned by the law of Texas. It is clearly at variance with the Terrell law, which prescribes as a matter of law how the delegates to a party State convention shall be selected. There is no option under the Terrell law. The course adopted by the regular Republican State convention was the only course that they could have pursued legally under the Texas law. To have acted in any way other than they did would have been to expose themselves to attack upon the ground that their action was contrary to law, and therefore invalid.

The law alluded to is as follows:

Chapter 177, Laws 1907, page 328, section 2, amending section 120 of "An act to regulate elections," etc., of the first called session of the twenty-ninth legislature, chapter 11, 1, 1905, page 520:

"Each county in the State or district convention shall be entitled to 1 vote for each 500 votes or major fraction thereof cast for the candidates for governor of the political party holding the convention at the last preceding primary election. In case at such primary election there were cast for such candidates for governor less than 500 votes in any county, then all such counties shall have 1 vote."

But the Taft contesting delegates proceeded on the proposition, successfully advanced to the national committee, that no matter what the law was, it ought to be something different, and as a matter of fact it had to be something different or Mr. Taft could not have got the Texas delegates. Necessity knows no law, not even the Terrell law of the State of Texas.

So what did they do? There was the Terrell election law written large upon the statute book of the State of Texas. A regular convention from which the little minority of Taft men had bolted had made up its roll in honest conformity with the law. If the bolters had observed the law, their total vote for delegates would have been contemptibly small and would have given their case away. So they resolved to do the only other thing.

The only course open to the Taft bolters was to deny the law of their State. This they proceeded to do by a resolution of their own little committee, in which, after reciting that "the party machinery established by law and usage must yield to this great principle" (i. e., the nullification of the law of the State as to the basis of representation), they went on to say, "Nothing is politically right which is morally wrong." Then followed this statement, palpably false in view of the terms of the law above quoted:

The law leaves to the lawful machinery of the party the question of establishing a fair basis of the representation of the vote.

And having thus wriggled and twisted in order to evade the plain meaning of the law, they concluded by saying:

We do not think that the vote for Terrell for governor was in any measure expressive of the Republican sentiment of this State.

There you have it. The law? Repealed by rhetoric. Embarrassing facts? Abolished by resolutions. The recorded Republican vote for governor at the last election, defined by law as the basis of representation? It can't be denied, so disregard it. If in the opinion of a bolting minority their convention will look better if the basis of representation is 100 instead of 500 votes, as prescribed by law, declare a preference for the smaller basis of representation and substitute it for the statute law of Texas.

Thus having stacked the deck, they proceeded to deal.

When the case was presented before the national committee, the chairman, Mr. Rosewater, was quick to stop Mr. Lyon, Republican State chairman of Texas, the moment his brief allotment of time had expired. Mr. Francis J. Heney, of California, and Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH, of Idaho, endeavored unsuccessfully to ask some questions, with a view of clarifying the case. Mr. Francis B. Kellogg succeeded in bringing out by a question that the interpretation of the Terrell election law on which the regular Republican State convention had been called, and which is above set forth, is the official interpretation, based upon an opinion of the Texas attorney general. It was made clear that the minority members of the only committee that made a minority report on contested delegates to the State convention remained in the State convention, recognizing its regularity and taking part in all its proceedings. It was not contended that any possible disposition of the contests could have affected the decisive majority in favor of Roosevelt, Roosevelt delegates, and Roosevelt instructions.

Senator BORAH and Gov. Hadley, of Missouri, made it clear by questions they asked that the delegation of Republican electors in the State of Texas rested upon the regularity of the State convention which had elected delegates to the national convention; that the list of presidential electors chosen by the State convention had been filed with the secretary of state of Texas; that the names on that list would be on the ballot at the November election, and that the law of Texas provides that only such electors can be placed upon the official ballot.

As was said by Mr. Lyon at the close of the argument:

We have the sworn statement of that convention from start to finish—the credentials of every county sworn to. These delegates are here. What are you going to do? Take two men who took a brass band and went down the street and gathered together a mob and took them to another place to make a State convention? Men who didn't even apply for admission, who don't have the credentials filed in their alleged convention? Are you just going to take any bunch of people walking down the street?

As above stated, the effort of Senator BORAH to have a roll call was not sustained by the national committee, which proceeded hurriedly to a vote, to have done with the disagreeable business. Mr. Francis J. Heney, in explaining his vote, said:

Mr. Chairman, I desire, in explaining my vote, to say that this is not plain stealing. This is treason to the Republic. This is the most shameless proceeding I ever saw in my life, MURRAY CRANE, and you are a party to it. Shame upon you.

Senator BORAH then said:

Mr. Chairman, I know that this committee can prevent me from saying anything if it desires to, and I am not going to run contrary to it, but I would like to say a word.

At this point he was interrupted by Mr. Mulvane, who said:

We have so much on our hands.

Senator BORAH then said:

I know we have a great deal on our hands, and we will have a great deal more after this national convention adjourns, but I do want to say——

Here again Senator BORAH was interrupted, and, finding that he was not to be permitted to go on, he said:

The motion is not debatable, I know, unless this committee consents to its debate, and I am at your mercy.

On a viva voce vote, the regular delegates elected by the only Republican convention held in the State of Texas were unseated, and an improvised delegation, picked by an inconsiderable minority, admittedly bolters from the regular convention, with no color of representative choice or of regularity of selection or of organic relation with the Republican Party of the State of Texas, but pledged to Mr. Taft, were seated in the national convention.

THE TEXAS DISTRICT CONTESTS.

The national committee, having in the disposition of the case of the delegates at large risen superior to the restrictions of the Texas statutes embodying the election law, and having thrown off the trammels of party regularity and disregarded an unmistakable Texas majority for Roosevelt, made short work of the district contests. If you can get to the point where you have nullified a statute by a typewriter, and feel that only a bolting minority can represent the true party sentiment, it is an easy matter, as it proved, to resolve the Texas district contests in favor of Taft without any justification whatever. The following is a brief summary of the contests affecting the district delegates from Texas:

FOURTH DISTRICT.

On May 17, 1912, the congressional committee met. Contesting delegations came from two precincts which had been denied admission to the county conventions of Collin and Grayson Counties, at their respective county conventions, applied for admission as delegates to the congressional convention, claiming to be the duly accredited delegates from Grayson and Collin Counties. Their claims were denied by the congressional committee. The convention was then organized. Four out of five counties took part. Delegates were elected favorable to Roosevelt.

Later, at some other time and place, the fifth county, which was not represented in the regular convention, perhaps assisted by the contested delegates from the two precincts who were denied admission, as above stated, held a separate convention. There was no bolt from the regular convention of any kind, as is attested by affidavits of every delegate present. Affidavits are also presented from every delegate to every county convention in the district, showing that in no county convention in the district was there any bolt, split, or secession at the time the conventions were held which elected delegates to the congressional convention.

FIFTH DISTRICT.

There are five counties. The congressional committee consisted of five members. Three of these were Taft men. This committee seated Roosevelt delegates from three counties, whereupon the unseated delegates from two counties bolted and organized a rump convention. The delegates from Ellis County instructed for Taft participated in the regular convention.

SEVENTH DISTRICT.

Six out of eight counties went for Roosevelt. When the congressional executive committee was called, the congressional chairman refused to recognize four Roosevelt members of the executive committee, although they had been elected to office or appointed to fill vacancies as appointed by law. Whereupon delegates from six out of the eight counties convened in a convention and elected Roosevelt delegates.

EIGHTH DISTRICT.

Six out of the nine counties were for Roosevelt. Two of the counties which were for Taft bolted the convention and held a separate convention, their only excuse being that they could not control the regular convention.

NINTH DISTRICT.

In this district a county chairman endeavored to call a congressional convention, although a regularly called convention summoned by the congressional chairman was held. The regular congressional convention was held at Yoakum, and was participated in by the majority of the county delegates in the district, and a majority of the congressional executive committee recognized this convention as regular.

TENTH DISTRICT.

In this district there are eight counties. The delegates from two and a half counties bolted from the congressional convention under the leadership of the United States internal-revenue collector, "What-are-we-here-for?" Flannigan, and the postmaster of Austin. This rump convention elected as one delegate a man who had refused to bolt and was the regular congressional chairman of the district. Nor did the member of the State committee—a Taft man—bolt from the regular convention.

FOURTEENTH DISTRICT.

Of the 14 counties that met in convention, there was only one contest—Bear County. The congressional executive committee, being one man from each county, seated both Roosevelt and Taft delegates, and gave them half a vote each. The Taft delegation and 2 other counties out of the 14 bolted and elected contesting delegations.

With practically unvarying vote, the steam-rolling majority of the national committee decided all of the foregoing contests in favor of the Taft delegates. The result, after the national committee finished its work, was that Taft had 28 of the Texas delegates and Roosevelt had 12.

It is interesting to recall, in view of the theory of the Taft contests in Texas, that the Taft delegates represented the Republican sentiment of the State, what the editor of the Houston (Tex.) Daily Post said, as recently as July 28, and quoted above:

Were Theodore Roosevelt in Texas and facing a presidential primary, he would doubtless carry the State as far as Republicanism is concerned, even the Taft Republicans will acknowledge.

WASHINGTON CONTEST.

In Washington no method is prescribed by law for choosing delegates to the State convention, but a wide discretion is given to the State and county party committees in that respect. The State committee has made no rule and provided no method for choosing such delegates, but has left the manner of selecting delegates from each county to the county party committee in each county.

This year the county committees in the principal counties of the State—such as Spokane, Pierce, King, and Whatcom—duly adopted resolutions providing for the choosing of delegates in these counties by the people at primary elections. Such elections were duly held, and full Roosevelt delegations were chosen. In Spokane the Republican primaries were a landslide for Col. Roosevelt. The Spokesman-Review of May 3, commenting upon the Spokane primary, said:

The victory of the Roosevelt forces was so overwhelming that it was even beyond the most extravagant claims or hopes of the local managers of the Roosevelt campaign. Before the primaries the Roosevelt leaders were claiming the city 2 to 1 for Roosevelt, and added that they would not be surprised if it went 3 to 1. The result shows that on delegates it went better than 8 to 1 for Roosevelt. Coupled with this, the outlying towns went 6 to 1 for Roosevelt, while the rural precincts went better than 7 to 1. The primary vote was one of the heaviest in the city's history.

And commenting editorially on the primary election, the Spokesman-Review on May 4 said:

At the Republican primaries Thursday every voter was given the opportunity to express his preference for President. The Republicans of Spokane County, by the manner in which the primaries were conducted, have placed themselves in the front rank of the great army of progress. There will be no talk of jobbery or back-room politics in connection with the Spokane primaries. The issue was put squarely up to the people, the people spoke, and the majority rules.

The number of delegates to the State convention was 668. Of this number, 263 uncontested delegates favorable to Roosevelt and 97 uncontested delegates favorable to Taft were chosen.

In 12 counties having 304 delegates there were contests. In order to get a majority in the State convention, the Taft men had to secure not less than 238 of the 304 contested delegates. One of the contested counties alone, King County, in which the city of Seattle is situated, had 121 delegates. There a primary election had been held, at which the popular vote in favor of Roosevelt had been about eight times the vote for Taft. Nevertheless, it was indispensable for the Taft forces to have the King County contest decided in favor of Taft, because if the 121 Roosevelt delegates from King County were seated, these delegates added to the 263 uncontested Roosevelt delegates would give the Roosevelt men 384 out of the 668 delegates to the State convention—a safe majority.

The facts in regard to the King County contest are these: The county committee, as previously stated, under the law could itself name delegates to the State convention, or could call a convention to choose delegates. The law, however, gave this power to the county committee, and not to any minority thereof. The King County committee is a large body of about 300 members. In 1910, for the purpose of facilitating the conduct of the campaign, the full committee appointed a subcommittee of 22 men to act as an executive committee. With the close of the 1910 campaign this subcommittee's duties were at an end. A majority of the men who composed this subcommittee this year favored the nomination of Taft. A meeting of the full King County committee to decide upon the action to be taken with reference to the selection of delegates to the State convention was called on April 13, at 2 p. m. In advance of the meeting the Taft leaders—Ballinger, Scott, Calhoun, and others—tried to influence the Roosevelt leaders to allow the naming of Taft delegates by offering to pay the debts of the committee which were either due to the Roosevelt leaders or for which they were liable, upon the condition that Taft delegates to the State convention should be named. This attempt at corruption failed, and the county committee at this meeting called a county convention to choose delegates to the State convention, and ordered a primary election to be held on April 27 for the election of delegates to the county convention. The county committee also by vote put an end to the existence of the subcommittee previously mentioned. Immediately after the close of the meeting of the county committee 12 Taft men who were members of the defunct subcommittee, without notice to the other members, met and named 121 Taft men, including such well-known reactionaries as R. A. Ballinger and former Senator J. L. Wilson and Samuel H. Piles, as delegates to the State convention. The King County contest was between 121 Roosevelt delegates chosen in pursuance of the popular election which gave an overwhelming majority in favor of Roosevelt and the 121 delegates named by 12 members of a committee of 300. Two things are plain. First, there was a primary election in King County at which the wish of the Republican voters was expressed. Secondly, even if the people had no right to have their wish respected, and if the Roosevelt delegates were not entitled to sit in the State convention, the Taft delegates, arbitrarily hand picked by an insignificant fraction of the county committee, had no shadow of right to credentials.

The only way by which the Taft machine could control the State convention was by controlling the decision of the contests. This could not safely be left to the action of the convention, as had always been done in Washington before, because the Roosevelt men could control the convention. A method was therefore devised to meet the requirements of the situation by the action of the State committee, which was for Taft. On May 2 the chairman of the State committee, B. W. Coiner, a candidate for the vacant office of United States attorney for the western district of Washington, called a meeting of the State committee at Aberdeen on May 14, the day before the meeting of the State convention, for the purpose of passing on the credentials of the delegates to that convention. The call stated that this procedure was pursuant not to the custom of the Republican Party in the State of Washington, but "to the rules and customs of the national organization of the Republican Party." This action of the State committee was pure usurpation. It had no warrant in the customs or assent of the Republican Party in the State of Washington, and no justification under the law. The statute only gives the committee power to call conventions, not to organize conventions.

On the night before the meeting of the State committee 21 of the 39 committeemen met in caucus and resolved to vote as a unit for the seating of a sufficient number of Taft delegates to control the convention without regard to the merit of the contests. A number of the committeemen present at the caucus boasted openly of this arrangement. At the meeting of the State committee on the following day all the contests except those in Pierce and Clallam Counties were decided in favor of Taft. The right of the Roosevelt delegates—69 in number—from Pierce and Clallam Counties, where primaries had been held, was so clear that the committee ruled in their favor, there being no pretext whatever for ruling against them. On the basis of the State committee's ruling, the Roosevelt men with the 69 delegates from Pierce and Clallam Counties, added to their 263 uncontested delegates, had 332 of the total 688 delegates, and the Taft men had 336 delegates, including the 121 hand-picked delegates from King County.

In order to bolt and rivet down their control of the convention the State committee, at the meeting on May 14, took additional precautions. They adopted a set of rules which were hurriedly read once, placing the temporary organization of the convention entirely in the hands of the chairman of the State central committee, and provided that no delegate should be admitted to the State convention without a ticket signed by the chairman of the State committee. At no previous Republican convention in the history of the State of Washington had delegates ever before been required to obtain tickets for admission to a convention. The rules were not printed, and the committeemen generally had no opportunity to examine or to understand them, and no Roosevelt member of the committee was able to secure a copy of the rules or to see them.

The State convention was called to meet at 10 a. m. on May 15. Efforts were made, beginning on the 14th of May, by the Roosevelt and Taft contingents to reach a harmonious understanding as to the organization of the convention and as to the disposition of the contests by the convention itself. A steering committee was appointed by each side, and the two steering committees had full powers to negotiate from all the delegates whom they respectively represented. The situation was dangerous.

The governor of the State was aroused from his sleep at 1 o'clock in the morning of May 14 with an appeal to come to Aberdeen and try to restore order. He left his home in Olympia at 5 o'clock by automobile, and, after a hurried trip to Aberdeen, immediately appeared before the committee and said with solemn warning:

"The people demand fairness and justice, and an expression of their wish is your duty. Personally I am for Taft, but if the majority of the people feel that they prefer another man, it is your duty as a committee to carry out the wishes of the people."

On the morning of the 15th an agreement was reached between the two steering committees that contests where the merits were plain should be decided by the convention on their merits, and in cases of doubt both contesting delegations should be seated with a half vote for each delegate. In order to secure time to submit this agreement for ratification, it was agreed that the time for the meeting of the convention should be postponed from 10 o'clock until 1. Chairman Coiner himself promised to post a notice of the postponement on the door of the convention hall. A little after 10 o'clock the Roosevelt delegates, assembled in caucus, were informed that in violation of this agreement the Taft delegates had gone into the hall, had organized themselves, and were acting as a convention. Thereupon the Roosevelt delegates immediately went to the convention hall. None of them had tickets of admission; only a few knew that tickets were required, and it was not possible for any of them to ascertain where tickets could be obtained. When they reached the convention hall they found that the main door was guarded by police; that all the other doors were locked, the fire-escapes had been removed, and the windows barred. Many uncontested Roosevelt delegates offered their credentials and asked to be admitted, but were refused admission because they had no tickets. On inquiry they were unable to learn where they could get tickets, and when they persisted in the attempt to go into the hall they were forcibly prevented and driven back to the street. The Roosevelt delegates then met in another hall, organized themselves as a convention, and elected delegates to the national convention.

In the Taft convention there were present 401 men, of whom only 97 were uncontested delegates and 304 contested. In the total number present there were included 69 delegates from Pierce and Clallam Counties, who the Taft State committee itself had decided were not entitled to credentials, and also 121 delegates from King County, who, upon the undisputed facts, had no legal claim whatever to seats in the convention.

The roll of the Taft convention recited the presence of 6 delegates from Ferry County, although Richard Pierce, of Ferry County, with the proxies from his county, went immediately to the Roosevelt convention on reaching Aberdeen, and took no part in the Taft convention. The roll of the latter convention also purported to include 6 delegates from Franklin County, although this delegation announced to the Taft convention that it had come to the conclusion that the Taft convention was not a representative Republican convention, and that the Franklin County delegation would withdraw, which it did. Thus, deducting the 69 delegates from Pierce and Clallam Counties, which the Taft committee had held to be without legal standing as delegates, and the 12 delegates from Ferry and Franklin Counties, it would reduce the number of delegates, waiving all questions of contest, in attendance at the Taft convention to 320.

In the Roosevelt convention there were 561 men in attendance, of whom 263 were uncontested delegates. In addition to the latter there were 69 delegates from Pierce and Clallam Counties who had been seated by the Taft State committee the day previous, and declared to be the legally elected delegates from those counties, thus making 332 delegates whose rights had been recognized by the Taft State committee. In addition there were 121 delegates bearing the mandate of the voters of King County and the 12 delegates from Franklin and Ferry Counties.

It will thus be seen that the uncontested delegates at the Roosevelt convention were a clear majority of the total number constituting the membership of the State convention and clearly outnumbered the delegates in attendance at the Taft convention for whom any pretense of legality could be urged. There were only 401 men in attendance all told at the Taft convention, and to establish the above assertion it is only necessary to deduct from that number the 69 delegates from Pierce and Clallam Counties, whom the State committee itself had held to be without legal claim to sit as delegates, and the 12 delegates from Ferry and Franklin Counties, who were untruthfully recited as participating in the Taft convention.

As a further side light upon the so-called Taft convention, it only remains to refer to the statement of James A. Ford, special staff representative of the Spokesman-Review, of Spokane, who attended the convention at Aberdeen, and publishes in his paper under his signature an account of the following conversation:

> Last Monday afternoon, the day before the meeting of the Republican State central committee, while on the train for Aberdeen, four of us were discussing the coming meeting of the committee and what it would probably do.
>
> The other three members of the party were Senator W. H. Paulhamus, of Sumner; J. E. Lease, a member of the State committee from Centralia; and Judge George Dysart, of Lewis County, who, it subsequently developed, was to vote two proxies in the committee, of which he was not a member.
> Senator Paulhamus expressed the belief that the committee would be fair and that the machine politicians would not be able to line up a majority for their candidate. Lease said nothing. Dysart offered no comment until I answered Paulhamus with the words, "I doubt it, Senator."
>
> Dysart immediately agreed to this statement. "You are right," said Dysart. "They are going to seat the Taft delegates. I was just talking over the telephone to Sam Perkins, and he told me the Taft delegation from Pierce County was to be seated."

The Spokesman-Review, in its issue of May 18, remarks editorially:

> It is evident from the tenor of the feeling prevalent over the high-handedness of the Washington Republican committee that the mass of Republicans are not going to sit supinely and allow the practical burglary of its delegation to be consummated before the Republican national committee.

It appears, however, that they reckoned with undue confidence upon the national committee righting the wrongs of the Washington State convention. A few days after the Republican national committee had brushed aside the abundant and overwhelming proofs of the facts above stated and had seated the fraudulent delegation from Washington, the Spokesman-Review ceased its advocacy of Mr. Taft's reelection, repudiated the nominees of the Chicago convention, and announced on its editorial page, in its issue of June 23, that henceforth it was "enlisted under the Roosevelt banner."

The following press dispatch, appearing in a New York paper, is a significant postscript to the Washington contest:

> WASHINGTON, July 24.
>
> Senator POINDEXTER to-day announced he would oppose confirmation of Beverley W. Coiner, of Tacoma, nominated yesterday by President Taft to be United States attorney for the western district of Washington.

THE ARIZONA CONTEST.

The call by the State committee for a State convention to be held at Tucson, on June 3, 1912, to select six delegates to the Chicago convention, prescribed three methods of choosing county delegates to the State convention:

1. The selection by the county committee.

2. That the county committee might provide for a primary at which delegates were to be selected to a county convention, which in turn should select the delegates to the State convention.

3. The selection by direct primaries of the delegates to the State convention.

The choice of methods was left with each county for itself.

The State call provided that the county committees should meet on the 15th day of May, severally to determine what method they would adopt; if by appointment by the committee, appointment would be made at a meeting of the committee to be held on May 25; if the selection was to be by primaries, the primaries would be held on the 25th.

For a quarter of a century it had been the custom and rule of the Republicans of Maricopa County to select their delegates by primaries. On the 15th of May, the county committee of Maricopa County met, and the credentials committee duly appointed, threw out all proxies offered by both sides, for the reason that some were disputed, others conflicting, and at least one had got into hands to which it was not directed.

The committee meeting was therefore confined to those committeemen actually present, who by a vote of 22 to 19, ordered primaries to be held, appointed a committee to arrange therefor, and then adjourned. The votes were all by roll call, and all of the minority voted, including the vote on the motion to adjourn. So just was this action of the committee in calling primaries, that two members of the committee favorable to Taft, joined with the Roosevelt forces in voting for the primaries.

Even if the proxies above referred to had been allowed, the Roosevelt forces would still have controlled sufficient votes to have obtained primaries. If it be claimed that the credentials committee should have allowed proxies, the only result of their action, even if a technical error, was to order public primaries, and thereby give the people an opportunity to express their presidential preference. No one was injured by this action, and no person was deprived of any right. The Roosevelt men fought for popular primaries, and the Taft men fought to prevent them.

The primary elections thus ordered were conducted with the greatest care and regularity by election officers of the highest standing in the community, and resulted in a vote of 951 for Roosevelt to 11 for Taft. Despite the efforts of the Taft people to prevent voters from attending the primaries, the total vote was 80 per cent of the maximum vote ever cast in the county at a Republican primary election. This primary resulted in the election of 20 delegates to the State convention called to meet at Tucson on June 3, instructed for Theodore Roosevelt.

The alleged Taft delegates from Maricopa County were picked in a closed room, at a meeting of a minority of the county committee. That this so-called committee meeting, which hand picked the Taft delegates, had not a quorum, was conclusively proved before the national committee to whom there was presented a signed statement of 30 members of the county committee, a decisive majority, that they did not attend the so-called committee meeting that selected the Taft delegates, either in person or by proxy.

In Cochise County the facts are:

The county committee met on the 15th day of May, with 69 members out of a total membership of 80, present either in person or by proxy, making a quorum, of which 33 Roosevelt members were present in person and 13 Roosevelt members were present by proxy, an absolute and legal majority of the committee, and also 9 Taft members in person, holding 14 Taft proxies. The chairman and secretary, Taft men, after the meeting had been legally opened, bolted, taking with them 7 Taft committeemen and 14 proxies. The remaining committeemen then went on with the meeting in regular order, electing a chairman and secretary, having a clear majority present in person or by proxy, and resolved that delegates be selected to the State convention at a meeting to be held on the 25th of May, as they were authorized to do by the call for the State convention. At the meeting held on the 25th of May, 47 members of the committee were present in person or by proxy, being more than a majority of the membership of the committee, who unanimously elected 16 Roosevelt delegates to the State convention. The Taft minority committeemen who bolted the first meeting did not attend the second meeting of the committee, and whatever they did in the way of selecting delegates was clearly illegal.

The executive committee of the State central committee was completely dominated by Taft officeholders. Shortly before the State convention met, this executive committee gave notice that it would meet on the 1st of June (the convention to meet on the 3d of June); that credentials should be filed with it, and that it would determine contests for the purpose of preparing a roll call for use in effecting the temporary organization of the State convention. This was unprecedented, and wholly beyond the authority and powers of the committee. The Roosevelt delegates, of course, refused to submit the question of the regularity and fact of their selection to a tribunal which tried to usurp the power to pass upon that question, and which unquestionably was pledged in advance to Taft.

The State committee never before had assumed this power. At the only other time within 20 years that the question arose the committee expressly refused to hear or determine contests for any purpose, and by resolution readmitted the question of the right to seats in the convention for the purpose of temporary organization, or otherwise, to the convention itself. This was in 1896, and a convention then composed of both contested and uncontested delegates unanimously ratified the action of the State committee. When the chairman of the State committee called the convention to order on June 3 he proceeded to read a roll of those whom the committee had determined should take part in the temporary organization, disqualifying the 20 Roosevelt elected delegates from Maricopa County and seating the Taft delegates appointed by a minority of the Maricopa County convention, and giving a half a vote each to the Roosevelt and Taft delegates from Cochise County, and thus attempted to secure control of the State convention. The Roosevelt delegates naturally refused to submit to this action, and the State convention split into two factions, each faction holding conventions simultaneously in the same hall, with their presiding officers on the same platform, and electing their own national delegates. The total membership in the State convention was 96, of which 49 was a majority. There were present 54 delegates favoring Roosevelt who were regularly and legally elected, it having been conclusively proven that the Taft delegations from Maricopa and Cochise Counties were illegal.

In view of the foregoing facts no fair-minded man can question the absolute justice and legal regularity of the six Roosevelt delegates to the national convention who were elected by the legal majority of the Arizona State convention.

FIFTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF LOUISIANA.

He who runs may read the story of fraud and dishonesty in the disposition of this contest. There is no mist of controverted fact about it, no indirection, no plausible assignment of grounds for the contest.

A delegate duly elected at a regular district convention subsequently refused to pledge himself to vote for Mr. Taft in the national convention. Thereupon the Taft managers held another so-called convention, admittedly without notice, without pretense of observing due form or legality, and elected a delegate who would vote for Mr. Taft. At the regular convention two delegates had been elected, but only the delegate who had refused to sign a written pledge to vote for Mr. Taft was assailed by the subsequent hocus-pocus called a convention, and he alone of the two elected at the regular convention was replaced by a delegate who would "vote right."

The regular convention for the election of two delegates and their alternates from the fifth congressional district of Louisiana was called to meet at Vidalia on April 29, 1912. At this convention Mr. W. T. Insley and Mr. S. W. Green were elected delegates to the national convention. It was conceded that the convention was held upon due and published notice; that credentials in due form certifying their election were issued to these men, signed by the chairman and secretary of the convention. It was also admitted that the election of these delegates was conceded to be regular, and their standing as delegates was recognized by C. S. Hebert, the collector of customs of Louisiana, and the Taft campaign manager for that State. On May 6, a week after the regular convention, Mr. Hebert forwarded letters to be signed by Delegate Green and his alternate, Mr. J. W. Cooke, and then returned to him. The letters were in the following form:

Mr. C. S. HEBERT,
Taft Campaign Manager of Louisiana, New Orleans, La.

DEAR SIR: As one of the delegates from the fifth congressional district of Louisiana to the Republican national convention at Chicago, I beg to say that I will vote for the nomination of President Taft and with the entire Louisiana delegation as a unit.

Delegate Green refused to make this pledge, and then for the first time it was "discovered" that there had been a state of inundation prevailing in the region of Vidalia at the time of the convention, and although the convention had been generally attended by the delegates elected thereto and entitled to participate in it, it was decided that another convention should be called, not, however, for the purpose of electing a set of delegates in place of those elected at the regular convention, but only a delegate in place of Mr. Green, who had refused to pledge himself to Mr. Taft. Accordingly a convention was called, so it was alleged, to meet at Monroe on May 15. The prime mover in this second convention was the aforesaid Mr. Hebert, Mr. Taft's campaign manager, and collector of customs at New Orleans. No notice of the second convention was published. Mr. Green, the contesting delegate, offered to withdraw his contest if any proof whatever was submitted to the national committee that any notice whatever had been published of the second convention held at Monroe.

It was further proved that Mr. Hebert, although recognizing the result of the regular convention to the extent of asking pledges in favor of Mr. Taft from the two delegates there elected, and although he had written the credentials for the regular convention, was the instigator and controlling hand in the second convention.

It does not appear that anybody attended the second convention; in fact, its origin, proceedings, and attendance are all rather mythical. The only thing that is quite specific about it is that it certified that the election of Mr. F. H. Cooke as a delegate in place of Mr. Green, who refused the Taft pledge, but it also appears uncontroverted that Mr. Cooke had attended the first and regular convention, and had participated in that convention.

Hon. Frank B. Kellogg, in questioning Mr. Cooke before the national committee, said: "How many were there in your convention?" Mr. Cooke replied, "I don't know." Mr. Kellogg then said, "You don't know? It is perfectly evident the other convention was the regular convention."

This was apparent to everyone who heard the evidence. It was time to shut off discussion and get the voting done with. National Committeeman Kellogg asked for a roll call. The request was not sustained by 20 members of the committee. Mr. Chubb then moved that Mr. F. H. Cooke be seated in place of Delegate Green, who refused to pledge to Mr. Taft. The ayes had it. It was so ordered.

The farcical court then called the next case.

NINTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

The Roosevelt delegates were undoubtedly regularly elected. On this contest Hon. Frank B. Kellogg, of Minnesota, a member of the national committee, said, at the announcement of the vote to seat the Taft delegates:

The ninth district of Alabama was a legitimate contest. The presentation almost showed plain stealing on the part of the committee.

This severe characterization of the committee's action by Mr. Kellogg is abundantly justified by the facts in this case.

The Roosevelt delegates and alternates were elected by a convention held on a call made by the regular Republican district committee of the ninth congressional district of Alabama, the regularity of which committee has not been questioned since its election by the Republican district convention on July 11, 1910. The district committee held a regular session in the city of Birmingham on February 15, 1912, in which two Taft delegates awarded seats in the national convention were present in person and participated. The total membership of the district committee was 29, not including the chairman and secretary. There were present, answering to the roll call, 26 members of the committee in person, and 2 by proxy, making 28 members in all, not including the chairman and secretary.

Hardly had the proceedings of the committee been opened when former United States Judge Oscar R. Hundley, who had obtained the floor by recognition of the chairman, was interrupted by John McEniry, a member of the committee, who, being reminded that Judge Hundley had the floor and that the Chair would not recognize another speaker until Judge Hundley had relinquished the floor, abruptly announced: "Then we will leave you." Thereupon 12 members of the committee, including Mr. McEniry, left the committee and held a separate session in the rear of the same hall.

The 18 members of the committee who remained were a majority of the whole committee, and a quorum thereof. They proceeded in an orderly manner to transact the business before the committee, which included the permanent organization of the committee and the issuance of a call for the district convention for the purpose of electing delegates and alternates to the Republican national convention. After the proceedings, which were stenographically taken, were transcribed they were signed in due and proper form by the chairman and secretary. A majority of the committee then elected delegates and alternates in due and proper form, and prepared a temporary roll for said district convention, and on such roll call there were resignations and appointments made to fill vacancies. The resignations were all made in due form, and the appointments were all made by the chairman, under authority conferred upon him by the Republican district committee of the ninth congressional district of Alabama, on July 11, 1910, and also by the Republican district executive committee on June 22, 1911.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried, the convention thus called duly elected Oscar R. Hundley and George

R. Lewis as delegates to the Republican national convention from the ninth congressional district of Alabama. These delegates were unseated by the national committee in favor of Taft delegates, who were elected at an irregular convention called by the minority of the Republican district committee, which bolted from the meeting of the full district committee held at Birmingham as above described. These Taft delegates came to Chicago clothed with typewritten certificates, testimonials, credentials, attestations, etc., but not enough to conceal the fact that they derived their election from a convention called by a bolting minority of the district committee, and had not a color of right to recognition as delegates by the national committee.

The vote of the national committee was 38 for seating the Taft delegates and 15 for seating the Roosevelt delegates. Mr. Frank Lowden, of Illinois, and Mr. Victor Rosewater, the chairman of the national committee, broke away from their Taft associates in the national committee and in this case voted with the Roosevelt men.

There is no occasion to add to the characterization of this case by Hon. Frank B. Kellogg as "plain stealing."

FIRST CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF ARKANSAS.

The first congressional district of Arkansas comprises the counties of Clay, Greene, Craighead, Mississippi, Crittenden, Cross, Poinsett, St. Francis, Lee, Phillips, and Woodruff. These counties lie in the eastern part of Arkansas, extending along the Mississippi River almost two-thirds of the distance from the extreme northern boundary of the State to its southern boundary. Owing to the large number of negroes residing in this district, it is commonly referred to as the "black belt" of Arkansas. At least 75 per cent of the Republicans residing in this district are negroes.

Nowhere is the variety of expedients resorted to by the Taft machine men to frustrate a true expression of the voters, and by hook or crook obtain a choice of delegates favorable to his candidacy. more simply and at the same time more strikingly shown than in this district.

The congressional committee of the district, composed almost wholly of postmasters and Federal officeholders, and in charge of the Republican machinery, called a convention to meet at the town of Paragould. This town is in the extreme northern part of the district, near the Missouri line, and is notorious in the South for a bloody intimidation practiced upon the negro which has continued for many years. No negro is allowed within the town limits. Signs are posted in conspicuous places warning them not to tarry under penalty of violence. It is as much as a negro's life is worth to venture within the town of Paragould, and of course the delegates to the congressional convention, consisting, owing to the nature of the population of the district, of a large percentage of negroes, were by the simple process of appointing the convention to be held in such a town as Paragould excluded from attendance at the convention and participation in its action.

The barefaced character of this disfranchisement of Republican electors is made more manifest by a glance at the map of the district, which shows that there are far more important towns in the district, centrally located, such as the city of Helena, easily accessible by rail, and where the negro delegate might come without danger to his life.

The illegal delegates elected in the Taft interest from the first Arkansas district were seated, notwithstanding these glaring and admitted facts.

THE THIRTEENTH INDIANA CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

The district convention met at Warsaw, Ind., on April 2, 1912. The membership of the convention consisted of 142 delegates, which was the number in attendance. A. G. Graham, of South Bend, a Taft man, and Aaron Jones, a Roosevelt man, were nominated for permanent chairman of the convention. Graham was elected by a vote of 71¼. Jones received 70¾ votes. This vote, however, did not represent the relative strength of the Taft and Roosevelt forces in the convention, as was soon apparent when the chairman called for nominations by counties of members of the various convention committees. The votes were announced as they had been announced on the election of chairman, and immediately great confusion resulted, the chairmen of the various county delegations demanding that their delegations be polled and the chairman of the convention, Mr. Graham, steadfastly refusing these demands.

In this state of confusion the chairman, with the aid of a few men who stood close to him, proceeded to railroad through the election of delegates to the national convention. Without any audible nominations or roll call, and without any intimation to the general body of the convention as to what was taking place, suddenly Mr. Graham, the chairman, and his secretary abandoned the stage and, announcing that the proceedings were concluded, left the convention hall. A quorum of the delegates remained on the floor of the convention hall and then proceeded in an orderly manner to nominate and elect delegates to the national convention. The delegates thus elected were F. W. Kellar and P. R. Judkins.

There were offered to the national committee, in support of their claims as delegates, affidavits made by a majority of the entire body of delegates constituting the district convention, to the effect that they were present at the convention and voted for Mr. Kellar and Mr. Judkins as delegates to the national convention. Three additional affidavits were offered on the part of other delegates to the district convention, who swore that they had not voted for Mr. Fox and Mr. Studebaker, who were certified by the officers of the district convention to have been elected.

The affidavits further stated that the chairman of the district convention, without a call of the roll and in the midst of confusion, declared that Mr. Fox and Mr. Studebaker had been elected, although they had not been either nominated or voted upon.

The affidavits thus offered were conclusive proof that the results certified to the national committee could not have been duly reached. The affidavits were incapable of being controverted, being made by a majority of the whole number of delegates constituting the membership of the district convention. The possibility of answer was excluded. When the affidavits were offered to the national committee a spirited debate ensued as to their admissibility, which is illuminating as to the attitude of the national committee. Mr. Francis B. Kellogg, in the course of the debate, said:

Mr. Chairman, I hope this committee will receive these affidavits. I have never served on this committee but twice. I hope I won't serve again in the contests that come before the committee. I have no recollection of this committee ever enforcing that rule before. We certainly, since we have been sitting here last week, have received affidavits. We have received ex parte statements. We have received newspaper clippings, and we have received statements from outside parties here, no notice of which was given to the other side, nor copies, nor any information given to the other side, over and over again.

Later Mr. Kellogg said, in the course of the debate:

It does seem as though this committee ought to arrive at these facts and give the other side time to rebut them if they can, but don't shut out those affidavits because they were not given to the other side, when we have not required it in any other case.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH read from the affidavits under discussion as follows:

Chairman Graham remained on the platform for a short time thereafter, and while he so remained no audible report was made by any counties of rulings on credentials, no nominations for delegates or alternates to the Republican convention from said district were made that were in any way audible to the delegates on the floor of the convention, and none such were voted upon by any at the said convention.

Senator BORAH then said:

Now, Mr. President, I have very great respect for the veteran member from Arkansas, and I do not wish to say what I say in invidious criticism of what he has just said; but, Mr. President, I am one of those who believe that we ought to look beyond the convenience of the men who sit at these tables and to make, as nearly as we can, a record which no one will have a right to challenge in the convention, and certainly which can not be carried into the open arena between now and the 9th of November to work to the detriment of whoever that nominee may be.

Talking plainly to the majority of this committee, I have no doubt that the majority of this committee are in favor of the nomination of Mr. Taft for President, and if that be true, they are far more concerned in having the world know that he was nominated by men who had not been fraudulently elected to this convention than the men who will be defeated in the coming convention.

There is no one so thoroughly concerned in the success of this committee and in its ability to make its report stand criticism as those who are in the majority of this committee and who claim to be in the majority of the coming convention. Everyone here knows what my alliances are, so far as the conditions before this convention are concerned, but I believe that you feel, if you will stop to think, just as I feel, that these questions rise above the rights of any individual and are higher than the call of any man for the honor which is to be conferred by that convention.

The question which we will have to meet from the time the convention closes until the day in November rolls around is whether or not the nominee of this convention received it at the hands of honestly elected delegates or of delegates who had been seated in contravention to the instruction of the masses of the people who sent them there. We may hark back to precedents and call attention to things which have happened in the days which have gone by in a justification of what is to transpire here in this committee, but we must bear in mind that we are meeting in the convention of 1912 under conditions that we have never met before in any convention, and surrounded by environments which have never surrounded any other political convention; it is in the air that the contest from the time the convention closes until the votes are counted in November will be the most severe and the most difficult to take care of by reason of the conditions in the country at this time of any contest which has happened since Lincoln was elected the second time as President of the United States.

What is the use to go into the country and to the country with a questionable convention? Time? We had better sit here until the dawn to-morrow morning and the next morning, and the next, in order that we may present a credentials committee's report which will not be subject to attack, than that we cut out proof here which is conclusive as it is now, that the certificate which has been issued was issued to the wrong party. We can afford to inconvenience ourselves, and we should inconvenience ourselves rather than to permit ourselves, out of the mere question of time, to do that which will be criticized. If the men who meet in the convention next week are supposed to be the representatives of the masses of the people, that convention will start out on the campaign with the battle very fairly won from the beginning. If they are believed to be not the representatives of the masses of the people, you will find that the fight will never calm. Look at the returns from the States where you have had primaries the last few months. You know as well as I know that we have not had anything like it in our political history. The common people of this country have come to the conclusion that they have been indifferent as to their rights. They have come to the conclusion that it devolves upon them to be active and to take care of those things, and they are going to do so; and we are here to see, above all things, that those whom the people elected are placed in the convention, so that the people will believe, although the majority is against, perhaps, their candidate, that nevertheless a fair fight was had and that the majority should rule.

Let us accept these affidavits and give these men opportunity to defend them. What could be fairer? What could be more just or reasonable? Will you go to your constituents, or what reason will you give to your constituents why you could not sit a few hours to know the truth where fraud was charged in the convention? When you are on the rostrum and hundreds of people are listening to the reason why you voted for your candidate, what will you say to them when they say to you that he was nominated by fraudulent effort to defeat the majority We have got to answer these things. When we get away from here, when we leave the committee room, when we leave the convention hall, we will go to another forum. There there will be no discussion of the question of time. There there will be no discussion of the question of convenience. Those matters will not enter into it. They will simply say to you that in our opinion the majority of the voters were for the nomination of a certain man, and the national committee interfered and defeated the will of the people. And if you do not make your record so clear and so strong that that charge will fail, you will have to meet it from the beginning to the close of the campaign. Therefore, if you expect to win here and expect to win there, make your record so that it can not be attacked. I appeal to you, not as the representative of Col. Roosevelt, though I am for his nomination, I appeal to you as the representatives of millions of American voters who constitute the rank and file of the party and in whom you have got to rely in the coming fight in order to sustain you upon the day of election.

Mr. Kellogg made the point the affidavits such as were sought to be excluded had been received in a prior Arkansas case, which was admitted.

Col. H. S. New, of Indiana, and Mr. Archie Stevenson, of Colorado, led the debate in opposition to the admission of the affidavits.

Notwithstanding the high value of the proof contained in the affidavits and the conclusive bearing of such evidence upon the pending contests, on a motion duly made and carried by the unvarying Taft majority of the national committee, the affidavits were excluded.

Mr. Horace Stilwell, of Indiana, who presented the contests, thereupon said:

Gentlemen and chairman of this committee, I have no better case. I can conceive of no better case in the face of a convention dominated absolutely by the chairman of that convention with such confusion that it was absolutely impossible for anyone in the convention 10 feet from the chair to recognize what he was doing. We seek to bring you a clear statement from affidavits of a majority of the delegates in the convention who swear that they voted for our candidates for delegates to this convention. You exclude that evidence; you take us out of court. We have no other evidence except that. We relied on that; it is a conclusive test. And I want to say now I am going to leave this committee room, I had hoped I would be able at this time to apologize for my opening remarks—that this was not a steam roller. I want to say that I have nothing to apologize for.

After some further discussion there were some conferences between the members of the majority faction of the committee, and it was then moved that, notwithstanding the action of the committee already taken on the admission of the affidavits, they should be received, although with the qualification that their reception should not constitute a binding precedent upon the committee. Thereupon the committee rescinded its prior action excluding the affidavits and ordered that they be received, and the contest coming to a vote, the steam roller mustered its usual strength of 36 votes, against 16 votes cast in behalf of the contesting delegation from the thirteenth Indiana district.

The significance of the committee's action in reversing itself on the admission of the affidavits was simply that they decided, after a little reflection, that it would look better to admit the affidavits and then ignore their contents. As a matter of fact, with the affidavits a part of the record, the committee decided in favor of delegates whose election was conclusively shown to have been an impossibility by the records before the committee.

INDIANA DELEGATES AT LARGE.

The Indiana State committee called a State convention to meet in Indianapolis on March 26, 1912, for the election of delegates at large. Thereafter the several counties proceeded to elect delegates to the State convention upon the basis of representation fixed by the State committee. Thereafter the State committee called the delegates of the various districts to meet in district conventions for the purpose of electing a member for each district on the various convention committees, including a credentials committee. These meetings of the delegates by districts were called for March 25, at 7.30 o'clock p. m., the night prior to the assembling of the delegates in State convention. At 9.30 p. m. certain men who had been elected by some but not all of the district conventions as members of the credentials committee got together and proceeded to organize the credentials committee. At this meeting only 8 persons elected to the credentials committee were present. The full membership of the credentials committee was 13. The reason for the 5 absentees was that the district conventions had not completed their work, and in five of the districts elections had not yet been reached of the members of the credentials committee.

At this point it should be observed that the credentials committee clearly had no right to meet and pretend to organize until the various district meetings had completed the membership of the credentials committee by electing from each district a member as contemplated in the State committee's call. Furthermore, the meeting of the credentials committee at that hour was contrary to the expressed terms of the State committee's call, viz:

The committee on credentials will meet in the palm room, ninth floor, Claypool Hotel, immediately after the adjournment of the district meeting.

Of the 8 credentials committee members present at 9.30, 5 happened to be favorable to Mr. Taft, 3 to Mr. Roosevelt. This momentary majority of 5 proceeded to organize by the election of a chairman and a secretary, and then announced that there being contests with regard to credential members from the third, sixth, and eleventh districts, members elected from those districts would not be permitted to pass upon the contests, but the latter would be decided by the remaining members of the committee whose seats were not challenged. Up to this point there had been no suggestion made to the credentials committee that there would be any contests against the members of the credentials committee as such. All that had happened was that in three of the district meetings results had not been reached. The announcement by the credentials committee served to disclose the predetermined plan for the control of the committee in the Taft interest. It was known to the Taft men that there were divisions within the district meetings of the third, sixth, and eleventh districts between Taft adherents and Roosevelt supporters, but as to how the vote was coming out nothing definite was known, nor was there anything to indicate that the defeated party in either the third, sixth, or eleventh districts would not acquiesce in the action of the majority. In other words, the Taft fragment of the credentials committee proceeded on the assumption that they would have contests to dispose of before contests had been begun or announced, thus revealing that they were acting obediently to the settled program of the Taft men to seize and maintain control, regardless of numerical strength, of the convention in all its stages, beginning with the organization of the credentials committee.

At the time the credentials committee began to organize the district meetings in the third, sixth, eleventh, and thirteenth districts were still in progress.

At 10 o'clock the 8 members of the credentials committee proceeded to consider the memberships from the third, sixth, and eleventh districts. Dr. Hause, a Roosevelt man, who had been elected credentials member from the third district, was refused a seat upon the committee on the announcement that the committee expected a claimant to come along for his seat a little later representing the Taft delegates in the district meeting. At that time no one had been designated by the Taft fragment of the district meeting.

In the sixth they refused to seat Mr. Warfel, a Roosevelt man, who had been elected a member of the committee in the sixth district meeting by a distinct majority over his opponent, claiming that the district meeting had been irregularly called to order, notwithstanding the fact that all the delegates thereto had fully participated in the meeting and the Taft men had been clearly and admittedly outvoted. They then proceeded to admit the Taft committeemen to membership in the committee from the third and sixth; and having got a majority by this means of one member of the full strength of the credentials committee, they seated the Roosevelt committeeman from the eleventh district.

There had thus been engineered a fraudulent organization of the credentials committee showing Taft men in a majority over the Roosevelt members of 7 to 6. At about 11 o'clock p. m. on March 25 the committee proceeded to dispose of contests affecting seats of members in the convention.

It is only necessary to discuss the contests coming to the convention from Marion County, the seventh congressional district, involving the seats of 106 delegates in the State convention. The facts in the contests in the first district, Warwick County; the second district, Monroe County; and the fifth district, involving all told some 26 delegates, are practically identical with the facts affecting the Marion County contest; but the control of the State convention turned upon the disposition of the Marion County contests.

The committee on credentials shortly before midnight announced that it would now consider the Marion County contest. Representatives of contestants from Marion County appeared before the committee prepared to establish, by sworn statements and by oral testimony of actual witnesses, gross frauds, open violence, and the systematic use of repeaters, and widespread intimidation in the election of the Marion County delegates to the State convention. The credentials committee, however, abruptly announced that it would seat the Taft delegates from Marion County certified by the Republican central committee of that district, the seventh. Before the announcement of the credentials committee, notwithstanding this proffer of proof and request for an opportunity to exhibit to the credentials committee the grounds of the contest, a motion was made by Henry Marshall, of the credentials committee, that the credentials committee recommend the seating of the delegates to the State convention whose credentials had been certified by the chairman of the Marion County Republican committee. Despite protests, despite renewed requests for an examination and discussion of the grounds of the contests, the committee, indifferent to its duties, proceeded to entertain the motion, and it was carried by a vote of 7 to 5. Similar action was immediately taken with reference to the contested seats of delegates from the first, second, and fifth districts; and the credentials committee summarily drafted a meager majority report for delivery to the State convention on the following morning, reciting its action as above stated, and falsely inserting a recital that it was taken "after full consideration."

There was no consideration of evidence, nor any pretense of it, nor any inquiry whatever into the merits of the contest. Not a witness was examined, not an affidavit was read, not a statement was heard on behalf of anyone appearing and proffering proof in support of the contesting delegates.

The minority of the committee thereupon considered the evidence offered on behalf of the contestants and drew up a minority report recommending that the contesting delegates be seated in the convention.

The following day the State convention met and put upon its temporary roll the names of the delegates whose seats were contested, and whose places in the convention were thus certified by the credentials committee.

The majority and minority reports of the credentials committee were submitted to the convention, and a motion was promptly made to lay the minority report on the table. The chairman of the convention announced that a vote on this motion would be taken by roll call. A demand was made on behalf of the minority report of the credentials committee that only the holders of the uncontested seats in the convention should be permitted to vote on this motion. This motion was not put. The speakers were ignored. The roll call was proceeded with and every delegate from the first, second, fifth, and seventh districts (the latter including 106 delegates from Marion County) voted in favor of the retention of their own seats.

On a count of the uncontested delegates the Roosevelt delegates outnumbered the Taft delegates by 667 to 648. That was the legitimate vote on the adoption of the minority report. With the seating of the 124 contesting delegates, whose claims were ignored, the convention would have stood 791 votes for Roosevelt and 648 votes for Taft.

After the roll call on the adoption of the so-called "majority" report of the credentials committee no further roll call was had, although strongly demanded. Motions were put and declared carried amid great confusion. No Roosevelt man could get recognition on the floor. Repeated efforts were made to secure recognition for the purpose of placing in nomination for delegates at large Hon. Albert J. Beveridge, Edwin M. Lee, Frederick K. Landis, and Charles H. Campbell. The chairman of the convention, by refusing to recognize Roosevelt men, absolutely prevented these names from being put before the convention.

After the program of the convention had been jammed through, the chairman abandoned the chair amid great confusion, and at a signal from him the Taft delegates in attendance withdrew from the hall. The delegates favorable to Roosevelt remained in the hall and thereupon elected A. O. Reeser as chairman in place of Mr. Wood, who had left the chair. Thereupon Messrs. Beveridge, Lee, Landis, and Campbell were nominated for delegates at large, and Messrs. Joseph H. Campbell, George E. Jeffrey, Morton H. Hawkins, and Charles J. Adams were nominated for alternate delegates at large. Both the delegates at large and alternates were unanimously elected by the delegates who had remained in the convention hall, and who constituted a clear majority of 143 of all the delegates in attendance at the convention.

It will be observed that Roosevelt delegates were in a majority in the State convention. Nevertheless the will of the majority in the credentials committee and in the State convention was defeated through the fraudulent steps outlined.

The election of the Taft delegates at large by the State convention was made possible only by permitting delegates whose seats were challenged and whose right in the convention was a subject of contest, to vote upon the contests. This is contrary to the most elementary principles of justice and fairness. It is also contrary to the rule in this respect adopted by the credentials committee, which in effecting its organization applied the rule that a member whose right to sit in the committee was contested, should not pass judicially upon his right to membership in the committee.

The Indiana convention thus not only adopted a rule which is repugnant to every instinct of fair procedure, in permitting the holders of contested seats to vote in their own favor on these contests, but violated the rule which the credentials committee of the convention had itself adopted, and by which expedient only it effected an organization favorable to Taft. So that whichever view is taken as to the right of a contested delegate or member to vote judicially upon his own status, the election of the Taft delegates at large from Indiana is invalid.

If it is thought that the holder of a contested seat may vote on his own title, the organization of the credentials committee which prepared the roll and seized control of the State convention was irregular.

If the organization of the credentials committee shall be held to be regular, in that contested members were not suffered to vote on their own credentials, then the subsequent action of the convention is irregular because that rule was not observed in the convention.

The fraudulent primary by which the 106 delegates were chosen in Marion County was allowed to stand by reason of the refusal of the credentials committee to consider the overwhelming evidence presented to it of frauds, intimidation, and repeating. This evidence was swept aside without pretense of examination, and a report which assured the 106 fraudulent delegates of seats in the convention and a controlling voice in its organization was hurriedly prepared, signed, and transmitted to the State convention. All that the report said about the 106 delegates from Marion County was the following:

> After the committee was organized the contests from the seventh congressional district were first taken up, and after full consideration a motion was carried that the delegates certified by the Republican central committee of the seventh district be seated.

The facts which the contesting delegates from Marion County vainly endeavored to submit to the judicial consideration of the credentials committee are contained in numerous affidavits, nearly 300 in number, which were submitted to the Republican national committee, but not examined, and again submitted to the credentials committee of the national convention.

Ample proof of fraud was offered, and an earnest appeal to recognize the facts thus shown was made to the credentials committee on behalf of the contesting delegates at large by ex-United States Senator Albert J. Beveridge. It has seemed advisable in this connection to append the following rather copious extracts from the forceful but ineffectual plea made by Senator Beveridge to the credentials committee in this case, as follows:

"Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not appear before you as an attorney merely to plead a professional cause, but as a Republican profoundly concerned for the welfare of the party. My Republicanism was born in me, for I was born when the Civil War was reaching its red climax and my father and my brothers were fighting for its principles upon the battle field, as many of you men personally know. I have given the utmost that was in me ever since I reached manhood laboring in its behalf, not in my State alone, but in every State north of the Mason and Dixon line; in every campaign, and in most of the States I have either opened or closed it. And so I appear here not as an attorney or the advocate of a faction, but as a Republican profoundly convinced of the justice of a cause which I wish to state to you as clearly as I can.

"It is not a pleasant thing to do. It is not in my nature to attack anybody or say any unpleasant thing. When, as a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the Senate, I felt it my duty under my oath and my conscience to stand alone against the members of my committee, and filed the minority report against Mr. Lorimer because I regarded it as a matter of righteousness, that afforded me no pleasure at all, but quite the reverse; and it is from this point of view that I come before you.

"The first case involves delegates at large from Indiana. There were in the convention 1,439 votes, of which 719½ were a majority. There were of uncontested votes for Roosevelt 667, and of uncontested votes for Mr. Taft 648, giving a majority to Mr. Roosevelt of 19 uncontested votes.

"There were in the convention 124 contested votes. These were made up of 106 votes from Marion County, Indianapolis, which were contested upon the ground of fraud, and which is the main point, but not the only one in the case. Thirteen were from Monroe County and 5 were from Vanderberg County.

"If you add to the uncontested votes—admittedly uncontested for Col. Roosevelt—the 124 of the contested votes, there is a total of 791, or 71½ over all, or a majority over the uncontested votes of Mr. Taft of 143. These figures, of course, I believe are matters of mathematics, and any statement I have thus far made may be controverted by my friend, Mr. Moores, upon the other side. So that in order to get at the meat of this case we must take up the contested votes and see why they are contested and see whether the contests were just.

"In the first place, take the 5 votes from Vanderberg County. Here are the affidavits of 26 Republicans of this ward in the city of Evansville, Vanderberg County. It states in substance that the chairman of the ward was a Taft man, and arbitrarily refused to allow a vote for the election of a permanent chairman, or count the Roosevelt and Taft men, but finally let the meeting divide in the middle of the street. When the Roosevelt and Taft men divided, the Roosevelt men outnumbered the Taft men three to one. At this state of said meeting a count was made; that said chairman held a whispered conversation with one Harry Stalheifer, a Taft man, and then stepped down from the chair and walked away. Thereupon the Roosevelt men took charge of the meeting and elected a permanent chairman; that a large majority of Roosevelt men elected Roosevelt delegates to said first district convention; that it was afterwards learned that said temporary chairman claimed to have appointed said delegates to said first district convention.

"He appointed them; that is all the claim he made.

"Now, as to the 13 votes from Monroe. It appears that the credentials committee, to the formation of which I will come to in a moment, at the State convention unseated the Roosevelt delegates elected by an overwhelming and almost unanimous vote at the county convention of Monroe County, where our State committee is located, upon the ground that to select them by a convention—county convention—was not in accordance with the State committee's call for election, and that that should have been by townships, and therefore it was illegal and utterly void; and in view of the fact that Taft delegates had been elected in township convention, the nature of which I will not go into, they said the illegality and the utter voidness of the delegates selected by county convention to the State convention would not allow them to be seated, and so seated the others. At the same time the credentials committee seated the Taft delegates elected by county convention in Warwick County. That is in one case. They unseated the Roosevelt delegates because they were elected by a county convention instead of by townships, and at the very same time ruling that the delegates selected for Mr. Taft in Warwick County by the same system should be seated.

"That brings us down to the 106 from Marion County, which is the city, practically, of Indianapolis. In this case it is our contention, gentlemen, and we shall prove it, that there was a deliberate conspiracy on the part of the city organization—the county organization, I should say, headed by its chairman, who was city comptroller, and it is now under Mayor Shank and in control of large numbers of city employees—to conduct this election so that no matter what was done by the Roosevelt followers, no matter how many votes were cast, that nevertheless the result should show a Taft majority. In support of this, here is the affidavit of Harry O. Chamberlain, a lawyer of Indianapolis—a lawyer of high standing in his profession, whose word I have never heard anybody doubt, and who I think no person will say would make a false affidavit. I have his affidavit to the effect that when the primary was approaching he went to Mr. Wallace, the county chairman, and asked of him fair treatment, watchers at the polls, inspectors on behalf of Col. Roosevelt, as well as Mr. Taft, inside of the polling places, and that Mr. Wallace, who is a very emphatic gentleman, replied:

"You are not going to win this fight for the Roosevelt delegates. I am not going to let you win. You sha'n't have a single delegate in this convention. I don't care how much Roosevelt sentiment there is here, or how many votes you have got, you are not going to have a look-in. I propose to see to it that you don't have a chance in the world. I don't care how many votes you have. I will appoint a contest board that will throw out every one of you who come to this convention. I don't care what the law is, I am not going to let you in. You might just as well take that from me and understand it. You have no more show to beat us than you have to buck down this wall. You might as well realize that you are not going to win, for I am not going to let you. You can go ahead and make a fight if you want to, but it won't do any good; and let me tell you something further—if I am to be licked in this fight or next November, I shall be licked next November.

"And here is an affidavit by Harry M. Smith, who was present when this conversation was had, and who says in his affidavit that it repeats the substance of what the Roosevelt men in Indianapolis asked—that in the polling places there should be inspectors for Roosevelt as well as inspectors for Taft, and it was denied them. And as a matter of fact they were not admitted, I believe, except in one or two cases. It must be remembered that in Indiana we have no law governing such a primary contest as this. Nothing is required. We don't have to use the Australian ballot; we don't have to use the voting machine. There is no criminal provision applying to such a primary as this in the election of delegates to district and State conventions. And, as a matter of fact, when the polling day came no Australian ballot was used; no voting machines were used; the polling places in some instances were placed in the most inconvenient portions of wards; sometimes, as the affidavits which I later on shall read to you show, as far as 4 miles from one side to the other. In a great majority of the polling places in the ward the voter was not permitted to see what became of his vote; it was handed in through a little hole in the window. In one case the person who took the ballot had his back to the voter. The voter in no instance could see what became of his ballot, and in no instance except two or three where no contests occurred, according to these affidavits, were the Roosevelt men allowed to have either a watcher at the polls or an inspector upon the inside. So, gentlemen, not only that, but the notice of where these polling places were to be fixed in these inconvenient places was not given until the evening before the day of the primary, and then in only one case. So the voting came on.

"Just before this there had been a straw ballot by the chief paper, the Indianapolis Star, whose very earnest efforts against the Roosevelt men and for the Taft men for the 10 days before the primary throughout the State was the greatest difficulty we had to go up against—this paper had a straw ballot. It was a Taft newspaper, and after counting the vote it showed that Mr. Roosevelt got more than three to one for Mr. Taft.

"But the election came on. It was common talk in Indianapolis—I was there as it approached—that there wouldn't be an opportunity for the Roosevelt men to have their votes counted. The testimony shows that in ward after ward the grossest and most outrageous repeating was done. I remember very well that when, as a young man, I was on the stump I used to go very carefully into those cases about election frauds in the South. I did it with indignation, but in none of them have I read anything that exceeded what I shall read to you from one of these affidavits. There were cases where a truck load of negroes were followed by three men, who make affidavit to it, from ward to ward, and then back to the first place, and voted. There are large numbers of affidavits, but I have only brought a few because I don't want to detain you; but these will suffice, and everybody will take my word that they are fair samples, and not the worst of them, either, where repeating occurred of the worst kind. And it is the testimony of men of reputation, of high standing and integrity. And if I am not right Mr. Moores, who leads the other party in this controversy, will correct me when he comes to reply, when I make the statement that they are of the highest character and standing.

"In one instance, I believe it was in the ninth ward, Mr. William L. Taylor, a manufacturer and one of the most eminent young business men in our State, a man of integrity and high standing, whose slightest word, outside of an affidavit, is taken by business men throughout the United States—a man who is not connected with politics, a man who doesn't belong to any political faction, a man who is one of our school board there, highly respected in the community and the State—makes affidavit to the fact that when he went to the polling place he voted, and he noted the unusual conditions there, and he became suspicious and waited around, and when the polling was done the doors were all closed and locked, of course, and he got on a stepladder and looked into the window and saw what was going on; they were in there for 5 or 10 minutes until the so-called voting was said to be over, and that the election officers did not even touch the ballot boxes, but came out at the expiration of that period, and gave the report of the ballot without even touching the ballot boxes or looking at a ballot.

"Again, a Mr. Griffiths, one of the election officers, makes an affidavit here that he was an inspector or something. He is a city employee. He made a statement to Mr. Gordon Hubbard, of Indianapolis, whose cousin he is, that what they did in his ward was just to reverse the Taft and Roosevelt vote. That gave Taft 480 and Roosevelt 80, whereas the real vote was precisely the reverse. In other cases instances of fraud are even more clear and glaring than that.

"In the Lorimer case I had occasion to examine exhaustively every case of fraud in elections that has occurred and has been reported in the English language. And one of the lightest of these things which I shall read to you in England would put a man in the penitentiary under their corrupt-practices act.

"Not only was repeating done, but in instance after instance men voted who were recognized by the men making those affidavits as not living in the ward.

"For example, Mr. J. P. O'Mear, who is the editor of the Indiana Catholic—the Catholic paper of our State—and whose word and standing, I imagine, will not be challenged, swears that he saw droves of people—I will read his affidavit in a minute—and among them a negro boy not 15 years of age, who went up and voted—voted! You must remember that the challenges that were made to all these illegal votes were not paid attention to. They were voted without attention being paid to the challenges, although challenges were made.

"Another instance: Men like Mr. Lewis—Mr. Edwin M. Lewis, of Bicker & Daniel's law office—whom Mr. Moores knows very well, one of the young men of the highest character in our entire State, make affidavit that they made actual count of the votes polled, how many Roosevelt had; and the discrepancy between that and the return is glaring.

"These, gentlemen, are some of the examples, some of the kind I know of the frauds practiced in that election, and I do not doubt that but that there are some members of the delegates at large, if they were informed, as I have been, by reading these affidavits myself for the first time, would refuse to sit on that delegation.

"This fraud in all the wards where the contested delegates came from was universally and well known. The strictest proof, as every lawyer knows, of fraud in election cases is this: That you count up the illegal votes, and if there is not enough to vitiate the majority, then, no matter. That is a ruling that has long since passed away. The courts do not adhere to that terribly dangerous practice any more. But, conceding that, the corollary to that rule will not be denied as a legal proposition by anybody, because the books are full of it; that where fraud is universal, notorious, and prevailing, it vitiates the whole election; and that is the kind of fraud that is established in these cases.

"Now, with this outline of the nature of the fraud, let us come to this State convention, and then I shall ask to interrupt the logical course of my remarks to come back, after I relate what occurred at the State convention, and read the specific examples of the testimony I have referred to and describe the character of the men who make the affidavits.

"With the election thus held, and, if this is denied, it can not be denied that it was universal comment in the Columbia Club every day, by both Taft men and Roosevelt men—we are all friends down there personally, and we meet at the club like everybody else, and eat lunch—that these frauds were unprecedented in the history of our town. And I personally have not met a man who, at luncheon when these things are talked over in a friendly way, has denied it. Not one! It is universally in the air.

"With these elections thus held, and these 106 men thus elected, they were given certificates by Harry Wallace, the county chairman. Harry Wallace is the city comptroller. The mayor of the city of Indianapolis, who appointed Mr. Wallace, is Mr. Shank, and Mr. Shank's most intimate associate is Mr. Kealing, who is said to be one of the managers of the Taft campaign here and who has been well known to be actively associated with him.

"Mr. Wallace made the declaration to which I have referred, and he issued certificates to these 106, notwithstanding the protests of their election.

"Then a credentials committee, or a contest committee, which is a thing which exists by custom in Marion County for the last 20 years, was appointed, and on that contest committee was the partner of Mr. Joseph P. Kealing, a city employee—I have forgotten who the other man was—and a young man by the name of Bamberger, who declared that he would not vote for Roosevelt even if he was nominated; but Mr. Bamberger did not serve upon the board, but was out of town. Those gentlemen assumed to pass upon these cases.

"Then came the State convention. A credentials committee was appointed. The Taft men got control of the committee by a trick which aroused my anger, although I never pay very much attention to those things. We controlled the committee, the Roosevelt men, by 7 to 6. There are 13 districts in the State; the Taft men had 6 uncontested places on the credentials committee, for our men made no contests where there were no contests to be made. But 3 contests at the last moment were trumped against the Roosevelt members of the credentials committee.

"For example, the sixth district—Richmond, Ind.—which has 2 Roosevelt delegates here and a great majority of Roosevelt delegates to the State convention, nevertheless had a Taft member of the credentials committee. How the credentials committee was composed, I waive. I don't want to confuse your mind by any technicalities. I want to come directly to what it did. It finally was organized with 7 to 6—7 Taft men to 6 Roosevelt—and they proceeded to decide these contests. They decided the cases of Monroe and Warwick in the way I have told you, reversing themselves in the 2 contests, and when it came to the examination of the 106 contests from Indianapolis, Charles Remmler and Linton A. Cox—Charles Remmler, a lawyer of the highest standing at the bar of our city, and Linton Cox, our former candidate for Congress, and a man than whom no man at the Indianapolis bar, of which I am a member, stands higher, and he makes affidavit here as to the frauds in his ward—appeared for these contestants before this credentials committee and set forth the frauds that had occurred, and offered to prove—and the offers are in the brief—offered to prove, as a lawyer in court offers to prove the testimony he is presenting, the frauds that vitiated the election of these men; and the credentials committee absolutely refused to hear a word of testimony, and decided in favor of the Taft delegates thus elected without a word of testimony being presented.

"In that way it went before the State convention, which convened the next day, the 106 Roosevelt delegates who were legally elected from Indianapolis all the time protesting and offering to prove their cases, their offers being refused and the testimony being refused to be considered by the contest committee, although it was universally said on the streets—it was in the air, it was full of charges that the frauds had occurred; and I have never yet, as I said to you gentlemen, heard any person I have heard talk about the case, no matter whether for Taft or for Roosevelt, deny the existence of these frauds.

"So the State convention convened.

"Now, when the convention met, a majority and minority report of the credentials committee was first presented in the usual course. Mr. Stillwell, who sits there, was the chairman of the minority committee—the Roosevelt men—and I have forgotten who was the chairman of the majority, or Taft men. The minority report challenged all these votes and recommended that they should be unseated and the Roosevelt men seated in their place; and, of course, the majority recommended that the 106 from Indianapolis and the 5 from Vanderberg, etc., should be seated. Mr. Stillwell moved that the minority report be made a substitute. On that there was a roll call, and the 124 contested votes were permitted to vote upon their own case. Mr. Stillwell arose and, with all his might, tried to get the recognition of the chair to appeal from the decision. It was denied him. He was not recognized. He then attempted to get recognition to challenge the vote, but that was refused him, and that appears from the affidavit which Mr. Stillwell himself makes.

"Thereupon, to pass to the next step in the convention which is vital, the chairman of the State convention, Mr. Will Wood, of Lafayette, Ind., called for nominations, and some of you gentlemen, I believe Mr. Watson—is doesn't make any difference—nominated the seating of the delegates at large. Thereupon Mr. Stillwell, who is very well known in Indianapolis, whose voice has exceeding power and penetration, arose instantly and with all his might tried to get the recognition of the chair for the purpose of putting in nomination the Roosevent delegates at large. Mr. Wood would not recognize him, and the fact is that Republican State convention had no opportunity to vote for anything at all except the delegates at large in our city. Immediately thereafter a motion was made to adjourn, and Mr. Wood declared the convention adjourned. The Roosevelt men met, to the number of 750 to 800, in the same hall, and this is supported by testimony which I will read you in a moment, because the convention elected a chairman and a secretary in the regular form, in the same hall, at the same time, and immediately after the breaking up of this arbitrary proceeding, and elected the contesting delegates at large. Now, that is the history of the convention.

"Now, gentlemen, I return to the question of fraud in Marion County. Let us get down to specifications. I call your attention to a statement made in the brief of the city delegates. In each one of these wards appears the sworn statement of the election officers, most of whom are city employees, that everything was regular and that there was no repeating and no fraud.

"It is sufficient to say in answer to all these statements, without imputing anything or questioning the veracity of these gentlemen who make the affidavits, that the affidavits show—the ones I am going to present to you—that there was no opportunity for them to see if there was repeating or not; that they didn't want to; that the repeating was done outside. The inspector, if he recognized them, let them in. It was in a closed room. But let us take this up ward by ward and see what occurs. Now, here is a similar affidavit from these so-called election officers in every ward that everything was regular; that there was no repeating; that there was no fraud, although if they were attending to their business perhaps they would not have as much opportunity.

"Let us take the first one. Here is Mr. Theodore Hewes. Mr. Morris knows Mr. Hewes very well. He is the editor of a big poultry journal, one of the largest in the United States, and one of the very largest and best-known men in that line all over this country. I dare say as to Theodore Hewes that some of you men know him. He is a man of wide acquaintance; a man of the very highest business standing; a man whose integrity has never been questioned. Now, let's see what he says about this: 'Affiant further says that there were a great many repeaters voted at this primary over his protest.' Theodore Hewes is a man who has lived in that ward; he is active in politics—I mean a regular Republican worker, who has never asked for office and never held any office, I believe. That there were a great many repeaters voted at this primary over his protest and that the inspector and police refused absolutely to pay any attention to his challenges. And I say I shall show you by affidavits which I shall read, if I get the time, that the police force interfered in this election to the detriment of the Roosevelt forces; and I shall, in a moment, read the testimony of Judge Henry Clay Allen, for whom all of us in Indianapolis have a respect that is almost reverence—Henry Clay Allen, whom this gentleman sitting here, Mr. English, knows and who has a name that stands for honor in every home in Indianapolis; a man who would not tell an untruth, much less make an affidavit to an untruth, not even for the Presidency. That is the kind of man he is. Let's see what Mr. Hewes further says: 'Affiant further says that the members of the election board are all employees of the city of Indianapolis.' Although we asked for a representation on the board—wasn't that fair? Wasn't it fair to give us a representative on the board, too?—they were all city employees. Samuel Lewis Shank, the mayor of said city, was a candidate for delegate on the Taft slate at this primary. 'Affiant further says that after the closing of the polls he made a request to John Carter, the inspector in charge, that he be allowed as a watcher to witness the counting of the ballots.' And remember that this man is not a ward heeler. That he be allowed as a watcher to witness the counting of the ballots, and that the inspector told him he would have to see Wallace; that affiant then called Wallace over the telephone, told him the conditions, and requested, for the sake of party harmony and having at heart the success of the Republican Party in November, that he be allowed to witness the counting of the ballots; that this request was refused; that affiant then asked as a personal favor that he be allowed in the room, and that said Wallace, who, as before alleged, is chairman of the Republican county central committee, replied as follows: 'I would do it for you if for anybody, but I don't propose that you fellows shall have a damn vote in Marion County.'

"When Mr. Moores comes to reply he can tell you who Theodore Hewes is from his personal knowledge and information. And here is one from David D. Nagley. He owns a farm out there at the east end of the town. He testifies that he went to the polls, and that during his stay at the polls there were several wagonloads and automobile loads and squads of voters who came to vote for the Taft delegates; 'that to affiant's best information and belief these voters were not residents of his ward.' He is a man who has lived there all his life, too. 'Affiant further says that the voting place was in the southeast corner, about 2 miles from affiant's home,' and so forth. There are other things, but I will not take your time.

"And here is the testimony of Squire Kelly. All this is in the ward where these gentlemen who were city employees trying to elect Mayor Shank and Mr. English, who sits there to vote on this case, at the primary just preceding this case. He says that he voted on the day and date above at the voting place of the first ward, and that he went to the polls carrying in his hands a Roosevelt ballot, which said ballot was marked for men who were in favor of men for Theodore Roosevelt; that when he approached the polls with the Roosevelt ballot in his hands several city employees surrounded him and urged him to vote the Taft ticket; and that the Roosevelt ticket was torn from his hands by the Taft supporters and that he was brutally assaulted by the Taft adherents.

"Affiant avers that he finally made his way to the window and cast the Roosevelt ballot, but that he could not see what disposition was made of his ballot; that the city employees in and around the polls told him he would lose his position in the city of Indianapolis. I understand he was fired from his position because he dared to vote for Roosevelt, and I will show you, gentlemen, if we have time, that a policeman's name—one man, the only man we could find who dared to vote for Roosevelt—had his name taken down with the remark, 'I saw you do that'; but I will only give you some samples. It will take too long to do it in full. I can see that.

"Let's take up this second ward—and I am going to take up some little time there, because of the character of these men. Here is the second ward, gentlemen. Here is an affidavit by Joseph P. O'Mahony. Mr. O'Mahony, I want to impress upon you, is the editor of the Indiana Catholic, a Catholic paper of Indianapolis, and I don't suppose, whatever our heat may be in politics, that anybody will question the honor of Mr. O'Mahony. He testifies that he went to the polls and stayed there where the voting place was located; and he tells how inconvenient it was, and he had to put his ballot in through a hole, and he could not see what became of it; and he says, 'Under these conditions the Roosevelt supporters on the sidewalk asked several times for watchers or one watcher to be allowed inside the polls, but this was flatly refused.'

"I want to stop and impress upon you gentlemen clearly that all these affidavits establish the fact that while we were denied watchers in the voting place, or any access to it so we could see what became of our tickets, the Taft men, on the other side, were allowed free access to the polling places; and there are the affidavits. 'Across the street in a vacant house were assembled a crowd of colored men, many of whom, to the knowledge of this affiant, were absolutely strangers in the ward. From this building, guided by city employees, groups of men were about to cross the street from time to time to vote, all being supplied with Taft tickets in advance. Affiant saw a colored fellow who was not more than 15 years of age going to vote with a group of colored men and, approaching him, asked him his age. When questioned he said his father told him he was old enough to vote. As affiant was questioning the boy a city policeman who was on duty at the place caught him by the arm and said, "Don't interfere with that voter." The policeman then led the colored boy into the line of voters, and he voted without further question.

"'Affiant witnessed several other such instances of fraudulent voting, and when the voting place was about to be closed a half a dozen vehicles loaded with strange men, black and white, were rushed to the polling place, and several hundred votes cast which, in the knowledge of the affiant, who lived in that ward, had no right to be cast in the ward. The conditions in the primary to elect delegates for the State convention were, in the opinion of affiant, far worse than at the primaries for the election of the district delegates held on March 15. The illegal voting was more open; and affiant solemnly declares, after an experience of 21 years, in which he has witnessed all kinds of primaries in Pennsylvania and Maryland and elsewhere, that he never saw such open and flagrant fraud as at this election held in Indianapolis.' That is the editor of a Catholic paper, and I will read you also the testimony of an eyewitness who is a Baptist preacher.

"Here is the testimony, gentlemen, showing the general conditions, the affidavit of Judge Henry Clay Allen. I am going to take the time to read you this, with your permission, because of the character of Judge Henry Clay Allen. He was for 12 years the judge of our circuit court, and I think that Mr. Moores—and this is a subject that does not concern anybody but Mr. Moores and myself, and we will agree that if there is one thing that will describe the character of Judge Henry Clay Allen it is the word 'honor.' His word in Indianapolis stands absolutely. He is one of the most sacrificing men in our State or in any other State, and it is he who, when on the bench, said that while there might be a different course with us and that a man that was honest for any reason deserved praise, still that a man who was born honest had a better start.

"'Judge Henry Clay Allen, being first duly sworn, said on his oath that he had resided in this city since 1876 and most of the time near the place where he now resides.

"'That prior to the recent primaries held to select delegates for the Republican national convention residents of said wards supporting ex-President Roosevelt requested him to act as the inspector or judge on the election board at such primary, which he consented to do, and his appointment was requested and refused by those in charge, and those opposed to President Taft's nomination were refused any representation on the board.' About time for the polls to open, before the polls were opened for the primary to elect delegates to the district convention, which was to choose delegates to the Chicago national Republican convention, quite a number of Republican voters of the ward were present at the place designated for the primary, including the ward committeemen and State committeemen for this district and Mayor Shank. The city comptroller is chairman of the Republican county central committee, and one of the board appointed was a clerk in his office. The other two members of the board were employed as city inspectors or some other subordinate position in the city government.

"One of the inspectors who makes this affidavit with reference to seating the delegates at large swears that this thing was all done correctly. In this second ward the vote was reported by the inspector as 87 for Roosevelt and 561 for Taft. Now, let us see what this inspector did. This is an affidavit made by Mr. Hawkins. He is a lawyer in Indianapolis. He testifies that this man Griffiths stated to him that when they came up to report the vote he simply reversed the vote; that is to say, he simply made it 561 for Taft and 87 for Roosevelt.

"Let me go to the third ward. I am going to pick some out for you, gentlemen. I will have to pick them out or we will never get through to-night. Gentlemen, this is an affidavit by Harvey B. Stout, and this affidavit, I repeat, is supported by Carle Mots, a newspaperman, and Mr. Hill, an engineer for Fairbanks, Morse & Co. Mr. Harvey Stout is a lawyer. He is a lecturer on law at the State University, at Butler College, and two law schools in Indianapolis. His credibility as a witness, I think, will not be questioned by anybody—

"That the affiant, together with a mechanical engineer in the employ of Fairbanks, Morse & Co.—

"He says that he is accompanied by this man—that affiant saw a truck load of men on South Meridan Street bearing about 40 voters drive first to the tenth ward, where he saw the men cast Taft ballots, then he saw the truck go to the eleventh ward, where they voted Taft ballots.

"And I want to stop right here and explain another thing which I ask everybody to take my word for. Nearly all these affidavits show that the Taft ballots in some wards were distinguished by having a red band across the back, that in others they had a checkered design on the back, so that they were all well known—that is, the Taft ballots were well known—whereas the Roosevelt ballots were the ordinary ballots. When these gentlemen testified that they knew the ballots, they knew because they saw the vote. That the truck then went to the eleventh ward, where they voted Taft ballots.

"That affiant saw a truck in the fourteenth ward, another auto truck filled with men joined the first truck. Affiant saw the voters in both trucks vote at this place; that affiant saw the trucks go to the fifteenth ward, where he saw both trucks loaded with men vote Taft ballots. That affiant then drove to the fourth ward of the city of Indianapolis and saw there several other automobiles loaded with men; that affiant saw one truck loaded with men stop at the saloon, the Fort Wayne saloon; that he saw the load in this auto go into the saloon, stay there about five minutes, climb back in the automobiles, and return to the sixth ward voting place, where they voted Taft ballots; affiant further states that he saw automobiles containing colored Taft workers go to the same saloon; that at this time the driver of the automobile saw that the affiant in his automobile was following him, and that the first automobile then at full speed drove to the northern part of the city for about 4 miles, and finally the affiant and those in his machine with him lost track of the machine containing the Taft repeaters. Whereupon affiant immediately drove his machine to the voting place in the sixth ward in time to see the first automobile load of men vote for the third time at the voting place at the sixth ward.

"Passing over the former part, affiant further states that he was present immediately after the polls were closed and was permitted to watch the counting of the ballots. In the bottom of the ballot box there were more than 250 Taft ballots folded uniformly in stacks and pads as though placed in there at one time. There is other testimony here, Mr. Chairman, that shows the same thing. When I come to Mr. Lewis's affidavit, andI want to tell you about it now, of the men that he found going to the polls with four ballots folded up in their hands; that one of Shank's appointees was permitted to watch the counting of the vote, and that in the bottom of the ballot box there were found folded, occurring in stacks or pads, ballots which looked as though they were placed there at one time. The voters could not see what became of the ballots.

"This is the affidavit of William L. Taylor, at the head of the firm of Chandler, Taylor & Co. Mr. English knows him well, and Mr. Moores knows him well. Perhaps he is one of the six leading young business men of Indiana. His word, as I said before, is taken everywhere in the business world wherever he is known. He is a man of high standing. He is a member of the school board. He has nothing to do with politics, he is not connected with any faction, has no interest in politics except to see that clean politics exist. He testified that he looked through the windows from a stepladder for from 5 to 10 minutes, and that they did not even touch the ballot boxes. It is the character of the man as well as what he swears to.

"Now, here are affidavits of Charles P. Jones and of Mr. Curtis, concerning false votes being cast—that is, where an accurate count had been kept and the vote returned by the inspector, and it being different.

"Here is one concerning the nonresident votes. Here is one concerning police interference. This runs all through these affidavits—repeating and police interference. And this is an affidavit by George Mueller. George Mueller is one of the Mueller Commission Co. Here is one by Charles E. Bacon. He is the architect of the Merchants' National Bank Building, and of that other big building there. He describes the condition of the voting places as far as he knows. Here is one by George R. Mueller concerning the police voting at the voting place.

"I will be through with this testimony in just one second. There are affidavits about the illegal voting of city employees. Here is one concerning repeating. Here is one concerning repeating. This is one by Mr. Galloway. This is by Frank Doudican. He testifies to repeating. This is as to minors. I know I must get through with this, but when I get hold of one like this I will read it: 'That a great many of these ringsters acknowledged that they lived outside of the ward.' He is testifying to repeaters that he saw and talked to. 'Acknowledged that they lived outside of the ward, and that others of them were so ignorant that they didn't know their own name.' Here is an affidavit which says that one negro repeater said: 'I am not going to vote any longer. I have voted four times. I am not going to vote any more for 50 cents.'

"Now, there is Dr. Roberts's affidavit. This man is the pastor of the Baptist Church. Here is what Dr. Roberts testifies to: That he was a candidate himself for Roosevelt delegate, and that he was at the polls all day, and that he personally saw one man vote two times and another four times, and that repeating was in force. So we have the testimony of a Catholic paper, a Baptist preacher, and then young business men, and Mr. La Cost, who is Republican candidate for Congress, and men like that.

"Now, then, gentlemen, it is plainly evident by what your chairman called my attention to that I have not got any more time, but I wish I had. But I have given you details; I have given you specifications that fraud was unprecedented and universal, excepting in two wards. It was vicious, utterly and absolutely. I venture to say that I have gone over history in my study of the Lorimer case. I have gone over the entire history of election frauds in England and this country, and I defy anybody to find any conditions that are worse than this. I closed the arguments in the Lorimer case, and the situation in that case is set forth in my speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I have never read of a case that approaches in the facts to the fraud of this one. And you must remember that we are the party of the purity of the ballot. We are the people who protested against indecent balloting, who protested against indecent outrages against the ballot in the South by which the southern Republicans and the colored men were kept out of their rights. How can we take that position if we concede and allow these conditions here?

"Very well, if these 106 votes were sustained by fraud they must be rejected, and it gives the Roosevelt delegates—of course, as a mere mathematical question—the majority of that convention. If you add the Roosevelt delegates who were popularly elected it gives us a certain majority. If you add the others that were thrown out in Monroe and other counties, it gives you the majority that I stated to you in opening my remarks.

"Immediately after the convention adjourned, and, gentlemen, I say to you that I am presenting this case with all my soul. I am presenting it to you not merely as members of the committee, as national committeemen, not merely as Republicans working shoulder to shoulder to advance the cause that our party represents, to sustain that party, but I am talking to you just as I would talk to a jury. I am earnest about it. I say frankly that I would not stand here and appeal to you, and I think every one of you will admit it, if I had any doubt that this fraud was done. I am not that much interested in politics. I was not that much interested in the results. I did not want to take the position I did in the Lorimer case, but I believed that it was right, and I believed that I had to do so, because the testimony was dead open and shut, and it became a matter of duty."

This earnest plea fell upon deaf ears. The Taft majority on the credentials committee formed its rush line and pushed over this mountain of uncontroverted proof of fraud by a vote of 34 to 11.

It is interesting to read in this connection an editorial published in the Indianapolis Star on March 27, the day after the Indiana State convention. The heading of the editorial is "The flaw in the title." The following is a quotation from it:

Much as the Star desires the renomination and reelection of President Taft, it greatly regrets that the verdict of Indiana Republicans in his favor could not have been straight and clear. As it is, there is a cloud upon the title of the four delegates at large and the two delegates from this district.

This flaw becomes the more deplorable because of the fact that the majority of 105 in yesterday's convention would have been wiped out entirely and a small majority for Mr. Roosevelt would have taken its place, if the disputed votes from this county had not been counted on the question of their own legality.

[By Theodore Roosevelt. Reprinted from the Outlook of July 13, 1912.]

No free people can afford to submit to government by theft. If the will of the people is defeated by fraud, then the people do not rule. If those who are thus foisted on them represent the special interests instead of the people, then the interests and not the people rule. When the people are denied their only thoroughly efficient weapon, the direct primary, against this usurpation, as was done by the ruling in the California case, then under the system thus established the people can not rule. The only remedy is to break from the system. It is useless to counsel patience until the next convention, because the organization is already complete to nullify the action of the people as effectively then as it was done this time. The same arbitrary powers have been conferred on the national committee that were exercised this time, and that committee, which is to act in 1916, is already elected. It is composed of men the majority of whom, under the lead of one of their number, Mr. Barnes, have already shown by their votes in the convention that they are prepared to repeat in 1916 the usurpation of 1912. Every State in the Union might pass presidential-primary laws, and all these States might vote for the same candidate, but if that candidate were not satisfactory to the national committee now in office, it could and would reverse the action of the people. On a square issue of power between the Republican national committee and the Republican voters the committee has won, and has demonstrated that it can win again. The organization has frankly abandoned the pretense of making effective the will of the voters. Its leaders from the President down take especial pride in the fact that they have outwitted the majority and have controlled the convention against the will of the rank and file of the voters—the "rabble," as Mr. Taft's chairman, Mr. McKINLEY, termed them. If the American people are really fit for self-government, they will instantly take up the challenge which a knot of political conspirators have so insolently thrown down. Nonresistance to such treason against popular government would be almost as reprehensible as active participation therein. Both a great moral issue and a fundamental principle of self-government are involved in the action of the so-called Republican convention at Chicago; and we can not submit to that action without being false both to the basic principles of American democracy and to that spirit of righteousness and honesty which must underlie every form of successful government.

REPORT OF THE MINORITY OF THE COMMITTEE ON CREDENTIALS.

The following is the report of the minority of the committee on credentials, setting forth the reason why the report of the majority seating the fraudulent delegates clearly indicated the consummation of a deliberate conspiracy to control the convention against the will of the Republican voters. Under the rulings adopted no opportunity was given to the minority of the credentials committee to bring this report before the convention:

"This convention was called to contain 1,078 delegates. Of this one-quarter were to come from States and Territories which have no part in Republican affairs, cast no Republican electoral vote, and are practically destitute of Republican voters. Such delegates are always controlled by Federal officeholders or others interested in the management of Federal office. As they live by politics, they form an efficient political machine. The combination between these and one-quarter of the delegates from the Republican States will form a majority of the convention. In other words, one-third of the representative Republican States can, by manipulation, dictate to two-thirds of the Republican representatives.

"This year such a coalition was attempted, but a majority of the convention was not obtainable until members of the national committee, who have been repudiated by their own States, seated a sufficient number of contested delegates to give a majority on the temporary roll call.

"At the organization of the convention the chairman of the national committee, contrary to good parliamentary law and good morals, insisted on counting the votes of these contested delegates on the preliminary roll call which elected the temporary chairman. Upon the motion to exclude these contested delegates from participation in the deliberations of the convention upon those contested the temporary chairman ruled that they should sit upon their own contests.

"A committee upon credentials was then appointed, upon which the contested delegates were represented and seated.

"In the committee on credentials a coalition was formed of the contested delegates and members of the national committee and a minority of the representatives of the Republican States.

"This coalition formed a substantial majority of the committee. It proposed to prevent the hearing of all of the testimony by limiting the contestants on delegates at large to 10 minutes and on district delegates to 5 minutes in which to present their cases, and did not agree to a decent amount of time for the hearing until a number of the unorganized members left the room in disgust. During the hearing the members of the national committee, who were, in fact, sitting upon their own cases, acted as attorneys for the seated delegates, interfered with an orderly procedure, and bullied the witnesses of the contestants. The hearing, if held in public, would have aroused the scorn of all spectators, and for this reason the public were excluded. The coalition in the committee is bringing in reports faster than they can be prepared, making it evident that the reports have been prepared beforehand and merely adopted as a formality. No time is furnished to the unorganized delegates to consider their cases or prepare to present them to the convention. It is therefore plain that if these contested delegates are seated they will not only create a majority, of which less than one-half represent Republican States, but that this majority will also be composed of delegates improperly seated, in violation of good parliamentary law and common morals. It is also plain that this is not accomplished by mere partisanship, but that it is the result of a comprehensive plan prepared in advance and deliberately carried out to control the Republican convention against Republican voters.

H. R. 19190. An act for the relief of John P. Risley; and

H. R. 7434. An act for the relief of Patrick Howe.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 27.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Senate document room 2,000 copies on manila paper of a wall chart on "Hookworm and soil pollution."

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Moon amendment to the instructions of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know whether we are voting on the previous question or on the substitute.

The SPEAKER. We are voting on the Moon amendment.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 144, nays 85, answering "present" 13, not voting 148, as follows:

From August 15 until August 19:

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia with Mr. CRAGO.

Until August 28:

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina with Mr. MADDEN.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. SCULLY. I voted "no." I wish to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

Mr. CAMPBELL. Did the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HARDWICK, vote?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have a pair with him. I voted "no." I desire to have my name recorded as present.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. HILL, voted?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. HILL. I voted "aye," but I desire to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois as amended by the substitute of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MANN. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays. All those in favor of taking the question by yeas and nays will rise. [After counting.] Thirty-nine gentleman have risen—not a sufficient number.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the other side.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, we have just had a vote which discloses the number present, and I make the point that the claim of the gentleman from Illinois is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is dilatory.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is not dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take the other side; it will save time. Those opposed to taking the question by yeas and nays will rise. [After counting.] One hundred and nineteen gentlemen have risen. Thirty-nine is a sufficient number and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of adopting the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois as amended by the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee will answer "aye," and those opposed will answer "no."

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 220, nays 0, answering "present" 16, not voting 154, as follows:

So the motion of Mr. MANN as amended was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. PARRAN.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee with Mr. KAHN.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE with Mr. HOWELL.

Mr. GRAY with Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington.

Mr. KORBLY with Mr. LAFEAN.

Mr. ROTHERMEL with Mr. MCCALL.

Mr. SMALL with Mr. STEPHENS of California.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye," but I wish to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. FAISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have my vote recorded.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. FAISON. I got in, Mr. Speaker, just after my name was called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I report back to the House bill H. R. 21279, an act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, amended as directed by the House, by striking out Senate amendment 118, and inserting the amendment passed by the House in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading, as it was read a few minutes ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to the other Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is not the first question whether the House will agree to the amendment recommended by the committee to the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not catch the remark of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. The committee has reported back the amendment of the House to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly the question that the Chair started to put. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment with the amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on disagreeing to all the Senate amendments except Senate amendment 118.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me clear that if this bill was taken by the House and sent back to the committee and then returned to the House and acted on, that the rule became vitiated and that the proper motion for the gentleman from Tennessee now to make, as the bill is before the House, is to disagree to all Senate amendments except Senate amendment 118 with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chair appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. MOON of Tennessee, Mr. FINLEY, and Mr. WEEKS.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendment to Senate amendment 118.

Mr. MANN. We have already agreed to that, with an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is all right; the gentleman is moving to insist on it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 28.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses be authorized to correct the enrolled bill of the House (H. R. 21969) entitled "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," by inserting in section 11, after the words "or elsewhere," where they occur the second time, the words "with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7343. An act to authorize the building of a dam across the Coosa River, in Alabama, at a place suitable to the interest of navigation, about 7½ miles above the city of Wetumpka.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment No. 2 to the bill (H. R. 17595) to amend sections 1 and 118 of act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BACON, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. ROOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SPEECHES OF GOV. WILSON.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a copy of the speech made by Gov. Wilson at Indianapolis during the month of May last, together with that magnificent effort of his yesterday at Gloucester, N. J.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to print a speech in the RECORD made by Gov. Wilson at Indianapolis last May, and one that he made yesterday at a farmers' meeting in New Jersey. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the insertion of the speech made in Indianapolis last May, but if the other request is insisted upon at this time I shall have to ask the privilege of making a few remarks at this time.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. That may be true, but that would grant the gentleman from Connecticut no right.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withdraw the last part of his request at this time, I think there will be no objection to it later.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, while I regret to do so, I wish to give notice that in the early morning and late in the evening before we adjourn I shall not object to unanimous-consent requests of this character, but in the middle of the day, when the pressure of business is such that it is important that the House transact its business, I shall have to object and demand the regular order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Alabama is correct in the attitude he takes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama objects.

PENSIONS.

Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 24322) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, with Senate amendments thereto; also the bill H. R. 24602, of similar title, with Senate amendments thereto; also the bill H. R. 24996 and the bill H. R. 25166, of similar titles, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to all of the Senate amendments to the several bills, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the several bills enumerated, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints the following conferees on all five of the bills.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL, Mr. RUCKER of Colorado, and Mr. WOOD of New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will also announce that he appoints Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL, of New York, a conferee in the place of the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. RICHARDSON, on the bills S. 6384 and 6851, omnibus pension bills.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Curtiss, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 9, 10, and 11 to the bill H. R. 18985.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF PRIOLEAU AGAINST LEGARE.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Elections No. 2, I present herewith House resolution 640, in the contested-election case of Aaron P. Prioleau against George S. Legare, which I send to the desk and ask to have read, and move the adoption of the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 670 (H. Rept. No. 1148).

Resolved, That Aaron P. Prioleau was not elected a Member of the Sixty-second Congress from the first congressional district of South Carolina and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That George S. Legare was elected a Member of the Sixty-second Congress from the first congressional district of South Carolina and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I will state that this resolution comes with a unanimous report from the committee.

The SPEAKER. As this is a unanimous report, without objection the Chair will put the motion on both resolutions at the same time. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

CORBETT TUNNEL, SHOSHONE IRRIGATION PROJECT.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 4862) for the relief of certain persons having supplied labor and materials for the prosecution of the work of constructing the Corbett Tunnel of the Shoshone irrigation project, together with the President's veto thereof, and move on reconsideration to pass the bill the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the veto of the President should be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be done.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no desire to object to the reading of the President's message, but I suggest to the gentleman that it probably will be shorter and more intelligent for him to make a statement to the House rather than to have the document read from the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the message is a very short one.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the message.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate:

For the reasons stated in the letter of July 12 of the Secretary of the Interior, which accompanies this message, I return without approval Senate bill 4862, entitled "An act for the relief of certain persons having supplied labor and materials for the prosecution of the work of constructing the Corbett Tunnel of the Shoshone irrigation project."

I do this because I think this legislation is of retroactive character and imposes on certain of the reclamation settlers an additional burden over and above the contract price of the work done, increasing that price by a double payment of part of what was due under the contract from the reclamation fund to the principal contractors. At the time when the work was begun and continued there was no law which relieved the subcontractor or the materialman from the necessity of looking after the collection of what the contractor owed him or which imposed on the Government or the reclamation authorities the duty of seeing to it that the money paid under the principal contract was used by the principal contractor to pay his subcontractors or materialmen. To require that this additional amount should now be included in the assessment upon the lands is by law to increase a contract burden by a change of the character of the liability after it has been assumed and fixed. This is retroactive and is legislation in its nature unjust to the reclamation settlers.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 18, 1912.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, in regard to this matter I would like to inquire if we can not agree upon some time for its discussion. We would like to present the matter shortly and concisely to the House before a vote is taken.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. RAKER. How much time would the gentleman from Texas suggest?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Thirty minutes on a side.

Mr. RAKER. There are several gentlemen who are in favor of passing the bill over the veto of the President, and I think we ought to have a little more time than that.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have 30 minutes upon this bill. It will take that length of time to state the case even briefly.

Mr. MANN. I should like to have a couple of hours, but I believe I will try to confine myself to two minutes, for I think I would get more effect.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I think it is due the House to make a fair statement of the matter, as the bill was not discussed before at the time it was passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] have 40 minutes and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] 40 minutes, and at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from California have 40 minutes and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] have 40 minutes, and at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from California how much time he desires to use and how much time others desire.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like about 15 minutes, if I can get it, and I will yield the balance of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills

H. R. 24119. An act to regulate the importation of nursery stock and other plants and plant products, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts for plant diseases and insect pests, to permit and regulate the movements of fruits, plants, and vegetables therefrom, and for other purposes.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate concurrent resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution 27.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Senate document room 2,000 copies, on manila paper, of a wall chart on Hookworm and Soil Pollution—to the Committee on Printing.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on the Library was discharged from the further consideration of Senate joint resolution 95, to provide for a monument to commemorate the services and sacrifices of the women of the country to the Union cause during the Civil War; and the same was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. NEELEY was granted leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of important business.

TITLE OF THE UNITED STATES TO LANDS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, before debate begins I would like to ask unanimous consent to present a report from the commission to investigate the title of the United States to grounds in the District of Columbia. There will be no debate on it. This is a report which is required to be made by law, and the same report has been made to the Senate and has been printed, and therefore I think it is unnecessary to have it printed here, and I ask leave to report the bill without having it printed. (H. Rept. 1202.)

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report of commission to investigate the title of the United States to lands in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the proper calendar.

Mr. MANN. I understand the printing is not ordered.

Mr. BURNETT. No. Now, Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by incorporating in the RECORD the statement of Mrs. Littleton which was made before that committee some days ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Colorado rise?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the Speaker's eye for a moment, with the consent of the gentleman from California, to ask to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 24602 and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Journal clerk says that the bill has just been sent to conference.

Mr. MANN. A number of those bills went to conference. What bill is it?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. A private pension bill. Mr. Speaker, there is another bill, H. R. 606, which I would like to take from the Speaker's table and concur in the Senate amendment. This is not in conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 606. An act for the relief of John Treveissen.

Mr. MANN. What is the Senate amendment?

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks to take from the Speaker's table the bill just reported and concur in the Senate amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, Senate bill 2904, reported to the House yesterday, has been agreed to by both the Senate and the House, and I would like to have it——

Mr. MANN. How could a Senate bill come up now?

Mr. LOBECK. On a conference report.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the gentleman can call up a conference report.

The SPEAKER. He can not except by unanimous agreement.

Mr. MANN. Let us finish up this other matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can get in later in the day.

CORBETT TUNNEL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, after I have used 10 minutes, I will thank the Chair to notify me. Mr. Speaker, this bill (S. 4862) as originally introduced in the Senate provided for the payment of claims for work and material furnished to the Corbett Tunnel out of the reclamation fund. It then passed the Senate and came to the Committee on Irrigation of the House, and the bill was then amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting in place thereof a bill authorizing and allowing those who had claims for labor and material against the contractor and subcontractor to sue upon his bond. It came to the House, and was unanimously passed. The bill went over to the Senate and the Senate agreed to the amendment of the House, and it was then sent to the President, who vetoed it. The bill was returned to the Senate, and after discussion by the Senate it passed the President's veto by a large number over the two-thirds necessary, and is now before the House. I want to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that on July 7, 1905, the Reclamation Service had in process and preparation a contract for the purpose of building a certain work, the Corbett Tunnel in the Shoshone project, and that on September 27, 1905, a contract and agreement was entered into and bond given. Charles Spear, of Billings, Mont., was the contractor. Thereafter the contract for this work was sublet to the Western Construction Co. Spear and his subcontractor failed, and on August 4, 1906, the contract was suspended and the Reclamation Service took over the work and completed the same. In this connection, I want to call the attention of the House particularly in regard to this matter. The full amount of cost of this project was $933,075; amount paid to the contractor was 16.2 per cent of his contract, $104,085; amount paid for completing the 83.8 per cent of the remaining work of the project by the Government was $828,990; the average cost of the 16.2 per cent contract by the Government was $160,298, while the total amount paid to contractors for the 16.2 per cent was $104,085, making a total balance in favor of the first 16.2 per cent of the work done by the contract of $56,133 less than the remaining work done by the Government.

This labor and these materials of various kinds were furnished to the subcontractors and actually went into this project. They failed and these people have been unable to obtain their money. Now, under the act of August 13, 1894, the Twenty-eighth Statutes at Large, 272, the contractor or subcontractors entered into a contract to pay for all labor and material furnished, and those furnishing the labor and material had the prior right to the Government. On February 24, 1905, Thirty-third Statutes, page 118, this act was, in substance repealed, leaving in the new act the same condition as to the point identically, with the exception as to the method of collecting on the bond with the Government and by those who furnished labor and materials, giving the Government the prior right. These people have no place or no chance to get their money and no one to get it from. The Government has commenced a suit against these bondsmen for the $180,000 that it cost them over and above what they contracted with Spear for. The bond is $75,000, so that you see, if the Government, under the new law, takes all of it, these people will get nothing. But there is a proposition on foot to compromise with the bondsmen for $42,000, while the attorney for the Reclamation Service is, with one of his bondsmen, absolutely solvent and the entire amount can be obtained from the bonds.

I refer to the testimony on the question on page 9. They now ask that they be permitted it, without any expense to the Government, under and by virtue of the provision of the act of August 13, 1894, and then instead of some promising that the Government will not get the money now claimed by them and, in addition, that the Government will have obtained its $40,000 that they have now, these people will be defeated out of their rights. And all they ask now is that they be given a right under the act of August 13, 1904, to sue at their own expense on the bond that has been given.

I want now to call your attention to this fact, that there is a precedent directly in point for this bill. The Bellefourche irrigation project was started in 1905, advertised in 1905, and let a contract with the Widell-Findley Co.; and within six months they failed and the Government took over the contract and completed the work, and the cost was more than the original contract, and they commenced suit upon those bonds. The First National Bank of Bellefourche came to Congress asking that they have relief. The facts were that the advertisement was made on February 10, 1905, and the contract was made on April 26, 1905. The contract was advertised under that act, and the contract was let under the subsequent act, the same as it was let in this case. Neither the Bellefourche people that obtained the act giving them relief, as is asked here, nor the people in this case have any knowledge of the act of February 24, 1905. They came to Congress for relief, asking permission to sue on that bond without any cost to the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania). The gentleman has spoken 10 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. I will use five minutes more of my time, and that will make this plain. Call my attention to the expiration of five minutes, please.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Is it not a fact that the contract of the Belle Fourche Co., which the gentleman states as a precedent, was not made under the act of 1905 at all?

Mr. RAKER. No; I have investigated that matter carefully, and am convinced that both contracts were made under identically the same conditions without knowledge of the actual statute. I want to say to the gentleman now that it makes absolutely no difference. I have gone to the Reclamation Office and have compared the bonds in the Belle Fourche project and in the Corbett Tunnel project, and, except as to the names of the companies, the bonds are identical.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I will ask the gentleman whether it is not a fact that the contract, in referring to the matter, stated that the contract should be determined under the act of 1894 in the Belle Fourche case, and in this case it stated it to be under the act of 1905 as amended? I will state to the gentleman that I have examined the contract and I find it to be that way.

Mr. RAKER. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that I have before me the contract and the specification of the Corbett Tunnel project. I went up to the Reclamation Office this morning and compared them, and I will say to the gentleman that the contracts entered into in the Belle Fourche project and in the Corbett proposition are, except as to the dates and names, practically the same. But what the gentleman refers to now—and I want him to listen to this—is in the advertisement of proposals and specifications. I will now read that provision, so that there can be question about it. This is the one where it is printed in the specifications and not in the contract. In this one it is 36. In the Belle Fourche I think it is 34. I read:

> Claims for work and material: The contractor shall promptly make payments to all supplying labor and materials in the prosecution of the work, and a condition to this effect shall be incorporated in the bond to be given by the contractor, in pursuance of the act of August 13, 1904, and the acts amendatory thereof.

This is identical with the Belle Fourche project, with the exception of the last four words, "and the acts amendatory thereof."

Mr. SMITH of Texas. That is what I said.

Mr. RAKER. That is not in the contract and not in the bond. The Supreme Court in two cases that I have here before me has passed directly on that question. In the first case, that of Hall against The American Security Co., the court holds that the subcontractor is responsible, the same as the original contractor, and that this act is made and intended to protect laborers and material men—those who furnish material and labor to the project. The same opinion is held under the act of 1905 in the case of Mankin against The United States for the use of the Ludwick Caledon Co., page 535. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] to the fact that the Supreme Court says that that act was intended for the benefit of the material men and the laborers, and that they should have their pay.

I have a copy of both contracts here, and I want to read from them to the House for just a minute. I read:

> According to the true intent and meaning of the said articles of agreement, the contractor shall make prompt payment to all persons supplying labor and material.

Then there is added:

> The above obligation provided for shall remain in full force and effect.

This is the Bellefourche bond, and the same identical language is used in the Corbett Tunnel project; and reading the bond and the contract, no one could ever say that there is any difference.

I want to call the attention of the House further to the fact that the reclamation officers in charge of this matter stated that these parties would be paid for their work according to the act of August 13, 1894. In 1906, a year and a half after this contract was entered into, after these people furnished their work, their labor, and material for the use of the Government and its work, the engineer in charge in writing to the parties stated that their claims would be paid under the act of 1894.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the other gentlemen use some of their time. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is fortunate, I think, that at this time we have an opportunity to enter into a discussion and explanation of this bill, for the reason that I do not believe that the bill has previously been fully discussed before the House and understood by it.

This bill was passed by unanimous consent in the absence of myself and the other gentlemen who signed a minority report against the bill. The only defense that I have for my absence at the time that the bill was called up and passed by unanimous consent is the fact that I thought that we had the right, having filed a minority report against the bill, to assume that no gentleman on this floor would ask for the passage of the bill by unanimous consent.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Will not the gentleman remember, as a matter of fact, that no man has any say as to that? This was placed upon the Calendar for Unanimous Consent by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY], and on unanimous-consent day the Speaker must call up the bills on that calendar in their order.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I am merely calling attention to that fact in explanation of the reason why this bill, when passed originally, was not discussed by the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to understand this bill it is necessary that a statement of facts be made. This bill grows out of a contract made between the Reclamation Service on September 27, 1905, with Charles Spear, for the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, in connection with the Shoshone irrigation project in the States of Montana and Wyoming. The contract price was $744,639.88. The contractor, Charles Spear, in turn let the contract to the Western Construction Co. as a subcontractor, without the agreement or consent of the Government.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Under the decisions of the Supreme Court in the two cases cited by myself it has been directly held that if a contract is let to a subcontractor, those furnishing material and labor can sue on the bond and recover just the same.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes; I admit that is the law. In the following year, 1906, after the contract was let, the contractor and the subcontractor failed, and the Government suspended the contract and completed the work itself.

When the tunnel was completed it was found that instead of costing the Government only $744,639, the contract price, the total cost was $933,075.73, an excess of $188,435. At the time of the suspension of the contract the Government had paid to the contractor substantially all that was due upon the contract.

These claims to which the bill relates are the claims of persons who charge that they furnished material to the subcontractor, the Western Construction Co., and of persons who claim to have purchased the labor checks of laborers who worked for the subcontractor.

So it will be seen that the Government has paid to the contractor all that was due; and while this labor and material may have gone into the construction of this tunnel, the Government has paid the only person to whom it was entitled to make payment, to wit, the contractor, Charles Spear.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact, which appears from the hearings, that the contractor claims to-day that the Government owes him and the subcontractor at least $200,000?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I have heard of no such contention. It is undisputed fact that in the wind-up it cost the Government over $188,000 above the contract.

Now, it is not contended in this matter that any of these persons who are setting up these claims were misled by the Government or any of its agents. They do not claim that in advancing this money for material, or furnishing material to the amount of $42,000, they were misled or deceived in any respect by the officials of the Government.

In order to understand just what the legal rights of these claimants were at the time, I want to read an extract from the act of 1905:

That hereafter any person or persons entering into a formal contract with the United States for the construction of any public building, or the prosecution and completion of any public work, or for repairs upon any public building or public work, shall be required, before commencing such work, to execute the usual penal bond, with good and sufficient sureties, with the additional obligation that such contractor or contractors shall promptly make payments to all persons supplying him or them with labor and materials in the prosecution of the work provided for in such contract; and any person, company, or corporation who has furnished labor or materials used in the construction or repair of any public building or public work, and payment for which has not been made, shall have the right to intervene and be made a party to any action instituted by the United States on the bond of the contractor, and to have their rights and claims adjudicated in such action and judgment rendered thereon, subject, however, to the priority of the claim and judgment of the United States.

This usual penal bond was given in the sum of $75,000; and to show gentlemen the policy of the Government with reference to this matter, as to whether or not the Government insured this security to material men and laborers, the act further provides that—

If the full amount of the liability of the surety on said bond is insufficient to pay the full amount of said claims and demands, then, after paying the full amount due the United States, the remainder shall be distributed pro rata among said interveners.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman submit to a question there?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The court in the two cases I have called attention to directly and distinctly held that there is no difference in the two acts, the act of August 13, 1894, and the act of February 24, 1905, as to the conditions of the contracts and as to the conditions of the act so far as material men and labor are concerned.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The difference in the two acts was that in the act of 1894 the material and labor men were given a preference over the Government. In the act of 1905, under which this labor was done and this material was furnished, the Government was given the priority.

Mr. RAKER. That is it. Now, will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that the Government has commenced a suit and that it can proceed to obtain a judgment for $75,000 and then compromise and take only $40,000 from the bondsmen, and is not that what they have practically agreed to? All we ask in this suit is that these pople be put ahead, so that they may get their $35,000 and then let the Government take its $42,000, so that nobody will be injured, not even the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I think the gentleman is indulging in quite an assumption when he says that the Government may recover $75,000 on this bond and then compromise for a smaller amount. It is true the Government has brought suit upon this bond, and I am informed that it is also true that these claimants have intervened in that suit and are now setting up their rights, and I contend that the respective parties, the Government, the bondsmen, and the claimants, in that suit can have all of their rights determined and adjudicated, and that this proposition to come in now and change the relative rights of the parties without setting up any equitable reason for doing so is absolutely indefensible.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. But the gentleman will admit that they could not recover in both cases. If they intervened and got their rights there, this act that we are undertaking to pass here would be inoperative. They could not recover twice.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. There could be no double recovery, but I say that the rights of the parties can be determined in that suit, and until their legal rights are determined I contend that they have no right to come to Congress and ask for any gratuities.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not true that the bond of the contractor is $75,000?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. It is.

Mr. MONDELL. Therefore all the Government could collect would be $75,000; but, on the other hand, the Government has a claim against the contractor for about $188,000, so that without this legislation there is no hope that at the end of the lawsuit or at any time or under any circumstances these people can be paid.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I do not know. There is a contention here by these claimants that the Government officers in making the specifications for this work deceived the contractor, and that the contractor does not owe the Government any such amount. That is a question that can be determined in the suit.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I will.

Mr. RAKER. In all the presentation of this matter before the committee and before Congress it has been solely a question of equity and justice to these people who have furnished material and labor; not that the Government ought to step in and give them a right to sue and have a prior right as against the Government. Is not that the position they have always taken?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. That is true; but you took the position also that this work was more difficult than the plans and specifications called for.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that the work was done by the subcontractor and the contractor $46,000 cheaper than the Government did the same quantity of work?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. There is nothing in the record to show that.

Mr. RAKER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the testimony.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Oh, I know what the gentleman refers to, but he does not take into consideration the conditions when the contract was suspended. I understand the figures and the contention of the gentleman thoroughly. Now, I must hasten on or I will not have time to explain this bill. I believe that when it is explained to the House the House will refuse to pass the bill over the President's veto.

I want to come to the point made by the gentleman from California, that there is a precedent for the passage of this bill. I must differ with the gentleman from California. I am perfectly familiar with the Belle Fourche case. I was on the committee that reported it to the House and I assisted in its passage. The Belle Fourche was this sort of a case: The advertisement for the contract was made while the law of 1894 was in existence. Before the law of 1905 was passed you will remember that the law of 1894 gave the labor and material men preference over the Government. I say the advertisement was made under that law, but the contract was completed after the law of 1905 went into effect, but by mutual mistake on the part of the Government officers and the contractor, the law of 1905 was absolutely ignored and the contract was made wholly under the act of 1894. In other words, the contractor and the Government both agreed in that contract that the labor and material men should have the preference, and after they had executed the contract, and after the work was done, they were in law estopped from coming into court and denying the rights of these men under the contract.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that the bonds are identical except the names and dates?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I have not examined that, but I do know that the specifications provided that the contract should be made under the law of 1894, and I know that in this case they specified that the contract should be made under the act of 1905 and amendments thereto, which was the law of 1905.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I state to the gentleman now that the conditions of these two bonds are identical.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. That may be true, but the contracts are different and the rights of the parties were different.

Mr. RAKER. No; the contract was not different; the specifications as to advertisements were different.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The gentleman has stated in his remarks that it specified the act of 1894 and acts amendatory thereto; that is the difference between the gentleman and myself. Now, then, in the Belle Fourche case the claimant went so far before the extension of the credit as to consult an attorney as to its security. The claimant in the case was the First National Bank, of Belle Fourche. They consulted an attorney and they were advised that the contract and bond in that case thoroughly secured it.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. In this case these people consulted the Reclamation Service, and I read from a letter dated November 7, 1906, which closes as follows:

> This matter is covered by the act of Congress approved August 13, 1894.
> H. V. N. SAVAGE, Supervising Engineer.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. That was after the contract was made and the transaction was over. In the Belle Fourche case it was the opinion of the members of the committee that the passage of the bill giving the bank preference rights over the Government did not change the rights of the parties as they existed under the contract. Now, I want to read briefly some extracts from the report on that bill to show that in the opinion of the committee it would not set a precedent for other cases that might follow:

> It appears to the committee that these facts make a very strong equitable case. There may be other persons similarly situated toward the work done under this contract. Apparently all persons proceeded in ignorance of the changed condition of the law, and this case affords a striking illustration of the strong equity that always arises where the parties to a contract act under a mutual mistake of the law. It would be manifestly unjust for the irrigation project to accept the full benefit of the work performed by the laborers, and the materials furnished under the contract, and not allow to the parties interested the protection of the bond and its sureties as recited both in the advertisement and in the contract itself.
> This case affords no precedent whatever for legislation that would afford relief to laborers or material men under other contracts for work under the national irrigation act, since the law of February 24, 1905. It is possible that no other contract was made for which the advertisement for bids and proposals was being published at the time that the modified law was passed. Evidently, after obtaining knowledge of the law of February 24, 1905, the department prepared its specifications to conform to the modified law, and that all subsequent contracts were made in compliance therewith. It also appears from the evidence submitted that the United States withheld from the contractors, at the time the work was stopped by the contractors upon the construction, about $23,000 at that time due the contractors, which amount the United States has applied toward the completion of the work covered by the contract.

Now, then, after thoroughly considering the matter at that time, and after agreeing to the report on that particular bill, because the contract itself had given to the parties the right that they contended for, the committee considered the question as to whether or not it would set a precedent for subsequent cases, and the committee was of the opinion that it would not. And yet gentlemen come into this House with this sort of a case that is entirely different and contend that the Belle Fourche was a precedent for this case.

Now, I want to say to the gentleman that I will predict, if this bill is passed, it will set a precedent that will flood this Congress with bills that will be absolutely upon all fours with it, and if this Congress is going to do justice to all its citizens it will have to pass all such bills if it passes this one.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that from the hearings it is shown that all of these parties in the Corbett Tunnel matter dealt with the idea that they had a first lien?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Oh, no.

Mr. RAKER. And were ignorant of the subsequent lien?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. No. There was not a particle of evidence that anybody did anything to mislead these claimants, and if they had any such supposition as that, it was without any reason whatever.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The contractor in this case failed to perform his contract.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He had bondsmen who were responsible in the event of his failure?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. He had.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The creditors had a right of action against the bondsmen if they would not recover against the contractor?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The Government had a right of action on the bond, and the other creditors had a right to intervene.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I mean the labor and material men had a right of action against the bondsmen.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes; subject to the claim of the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose this had been a case of the construction of a dry dock the contractor for which had failed, leaving a number of claims by material men and laborers. Would those men have had a right to come direct to Congress on the failure of the contractor, without recourse to the Court of Claims?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I suppose citizens have a right to come into Congress and petition for anything they want to petition for, but I think in all of these matters the rights of the parties ought to be settled by the courts before they come into Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to know if there is a precedent for the payment of claims in a case of this kind by an act of Congress except through the Court of Claims?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I do not know of any.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LAFFERTY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is under a misapprehension. This is a bill to give these labor and material men the right to sue on the bond, a right which they do not now have except in a subordinate capacity to the Government, the Government having a prior right, which excludes them from any recovery.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The gentleman is partially right, but I do not think he states the matter fairly. The parties have a right to sue on the bond anyway, as the law now stands, and they are in court, as I understand it, suing on the bond; but this bill is to give these creditors a preference over the Government which they do not now have.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. While the case is pending?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not that a most unusual proceeding?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I think it is.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Is it not true that at the present time the Government has a preference over these labor and material men?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. It is.

Mr. LAFFERTY. They can not recover unless this bill passes. Has not the Government got the irrigation work, and has not the Government got that work for no more than what it has cost, and the Government is, therefore, not damaged at all?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. That is not the fact in the case. The Government has the work, but the Government has paid every dollar for it that it is liable for or that it is worth.

Mr. LAFFERTY. That is what I said.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. And whenever the Government pays an extra claim it pays that much more and above what it is worth.

Mr. LAFFERTY. That is just what I said.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. And I want to state another thing in this connection, that this law covering this matter is a general law applying not only to reclamation work, but to all Government contracts, and I can not understand why it is that gentlemen come in here with a bill singling out certain particular creditors instead of having a general bill that would relieve everybody under all sorts of contracts with the Government in similar cases.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It seems to me this is a short cut for the few, which is not accorded to the many.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. That is the case exactly.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Is not this the only one?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. We do not know. This law relates to all Government contracts.

This case, boiled down, is this: This work has been done and the Government has paid for it. This is not a proposition to vote money out of the Treasury to these people direct, but it is a proposition to take it from the water users, and there is another discrimination. It is not a burden that they propose to put upon all the people of this country, but it is a burden they propose to put upon the water users under this project.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I think if the gentleman will hear me a little further, perhaps I will answer the question that he seems anxious to ask.

Mr. RAKER. Very well.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Under this project a part of the land has been taken up; a larger part of it is yet to be taken up. The charge against all of this land is something like $53 an acre already, to be paid back to the Government by the people who shall take it up and improve it. The Army engineers who were sent out a year or two ago by the Government to examine into these irrigation projects report that about $50 an acre was all that this project could stand. It cost something over $7,000,000, and the Secretary of the Interior reports to the President that an additional burden will imperil the project.

Mr. FOSTER. How large is the additional burden?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. It is estimated all the way from 33 cents to 91 cents an acre.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought 33 cents was about the limit of the burden that would be placed on the land.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The way it is figured, it is given all the way from 33 to 91 cents an acre. It depends on how it is figured.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman has examined the Secretary's figures, he will discover that the Secretary evidently was in error when he placed the higher figures. The fact is it will amount to from 33 to 36 cents an acre.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The farm unit is now 60 acres under that project, and it will amount all the way, according to the Secretary, from $19.80 to $54.60 as an additional burden upon each farmer.

Mr. MONDELL. The Secretary is clearly in error in his larger figure, as the gentleman can determine by a very simple mathematical calculation.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. That is immaterial. I do not care what it is, it is a burden that is placed, or will be placed, upon these people in settling there. It is over and above what it cost to construct it, and I say it is unjust to put that burden unnecessarily upon the pioneers who go out there and improve these farms, instead of putting it on all the people of the country, if you are going to put it on anybody. I say this Congress ought to come up and do the manly thing, if it wants to single out these creditors and pay them, and have all the people pay it out of the Public Treasury of this country rather than put it upon the shoulders of these pioneer settlers under this project. And not only that, but it will imperil the success of this great project that is to cost between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000. It is a question now whether or not they can get settlers to go there and take up these lands, and I am sure when it goes abroad that some of this burden or this charge that ought not to be put in there as a charge upon this project is placed on it, when it goes out to the world, the settlers will be pretty slow to go there and take up and improve this land.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I will not have time to yield further.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Texas is now speaking entirely from hearsay and not from personal knowledge of the conditions, of course.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I have discussed it with the reclamation people who appeared before the committee, and I suppose I know as much about it as the gentleman from Wyoming unless he has been there and learned some facts which the Reclamation Service have not.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman thinks he knows as much about it as the gentleman from Wyoming, he is very much mistaken.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I will state to the House that this matter was very thoroughly gone into before the committee, and the gentleman from Wyoming, if I am not mistaken, was present at some of the hearings, and if he has any information that the committee has not, he ought to have disclosed it; but, regardless of these differences of opinion and differences as to the purchase of material, the facts are as I have stated them, and I do not believe, gentlemen, that this bill ought to pass.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I do not believe I have time. How much time have I used, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I will yield for just one brief question.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact if this land and project has not gotten the benefit of all this money that is in controversy?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. It did; and the Government has paid every dollar due for it.

Mr. FOSTER. They got the whole benefit of all of it.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The Government has paid for it to the only man it was authorized under the law to pay it to.

Mr. FOSTER. In justice, these people did not get anything. They furnished the money and material and did not get any benefit of it, but the project got the benefit of it.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The project got the benefit of it; but I want to impress upon the House that the Government has paid for it—every dollar of it.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman allow one question right in connection with that?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I do not believe I have time. I have promised all of my time. I have only about six minutes, and I have promised seven minutes already.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Has there been any protest on the part of the people who were below and used this land and got this water?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The gentleman will have to ask the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. They are his constituents.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. There have been no protests against the 30 or 38 cents an acre.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The gentleman certainly does not think they would be glad to pay that or would think it just.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Would be too glad to pay that and have their water delivered to them.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. They are already paying about $53 an acre. I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LEE].

Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Will the gentleman use some of his time?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, our Constitution provides that the President may exercise a limited veto, a very wise provision, and I think that we should always proceed to the question of passing a bill over the President's veto with a full realization of the fact that the President has probably gone into the matter in issue with care and has not exercised the veto power without most excellent reasons for doing so. Therefore we should only vote to override the presidential veto for particularly good reasons. I think that we have especially good reasons for passing this bill, the President's veto to the contrary notwithstanding. I have some embarrassment in connection with this bill, because, while it happens that most of the people who will be benefited by the legislation are not residents of my State and are not constituents of mine, the people who will bear the burden and must eventually pay it if the bill passes in its present form are people who, if I continue to represent the State of Wyoming in this body, will be constituents of mine and will undoubtedly hold me responsible for what I do in this regard. I happen to be very well informed in regard to this reclamation project. I knew something about the letting of the contract; I knew about the conditions existing in and about this great 3-mile tunnel, 12 feet in diameter, piercing the great mesa of the Shoshone to let the waters of that beautiful mountain stream out upon the bench lands.

I have no disposition to criticize, and I shall not, in urging the passage of this bill, criticize any official of the Government in connection with the letting of the contract or in connection with what happened thereafter, further than to say what is a fact, that the contract was let at a low price—the fact that the price was very low.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I am sorry that I can not yield at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I just wanted to ask the gentleman how he had more information about it than the engineers, from an engineering standpoint?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the engineers knew that the price was very low as compared with other contracts for the same kind of work. The contract was let to people who had absolutely no experience in the building of tunnels and who thought that they had discovered a sort of gigantic gimlet with which they could bore through the mountain side and excavate a tunnel at about half the cost at which experienced men had been able to do similar work at other times and places. The contract was let under those conditions, and then, unfortunately, instead of exacting a surety bond, the Reclamation Service accepted a small bond as compared with the magnitude of the contract—a personal bond of $75,000—the first estimate of the cost being a little over half a million dollars.

The contract was let in 1905. It was soon apparent that the contractors would be unable to carry out the work. The great mass of steel that they shipped to the work, with which they expected to bore out the tunnel, was never even placed in the tunnel, and the last time I visited the project it still lay there, a gigantic monument of folly. The service endeavored to get the people to continue in the work, using such appliances as they could command, but finally it became necessary for the Reclamation Service to take the work over.

It so happened that I was in the locality at the time the contractors failed. I talked with some of the men employed in regard to the sums due them, and after reading the law and after talking with the officers of the Reclamation Service, I felt that some plan could be devised whereby these men could be paid. I do not say that any officer of the Government promised me that that would be done. It is possible that I had no good ground for my belief that that would be done. But it occurred to me that the Government of the United States would not accept the work of men engaged on that tunnel and refuse to pay for it.

In addition to the labor there was material, such as hay and grain and groceries and iron and steel, all of which was used in the construction of the tunnel, and a very considerable portion of this material was on the ground when the Government took over the work. For instance, I think there was a carload or two of oats and a few carloads of hay, some iron, and some groceries and supplies of one kind and another, all of which the Government took over, and all of which the Government itself used in the prosecution of the work.

What we expected was that the Government on completing the work would immediately begin suit on the bond. In the meantime these small creditors were hoping and expecting that some means would be devised whereby they could receive pay for their work and for the hay, grain, and other material that they had furnished.

The Government finally began suit. I have no criticism of the way that suit was prosecuted, or, rather, of the way it was not prosecuted. It lagged along. In the meantime, however, before the suit was instituted by the Government, the creditors attempted to secure copies of the bond and contract, and were unable to secure them. I do not criticize anybody for not giving out copies of the contract and bond, for I think the officers of the Government felt that they were not justified in doing so. Those people could not sue on the bond, because, under the law, they could not begin a suit until six months after a settlement and a failure on the part of the Government to institute a suit.

After the lapse of a very considerable time the Government began its suit. Even then I do not understand that any notice was given to the creditors of the institution of the suit or any invitation extended to them, which I think ought to have been done, or information given them that they could intervene or ought to intervene in the suit.

There was no effort to press the suit. On the contrary, everything that was done seems to have been done with a view of compromising the matter. I do not criticize that, because one of the parties to the bond was found to be insolvent, I believe, very soon after the proceedings were instituted, and the entire burden would fall on the other man, and I understand that he did not have property enough to meet the entire obligation of $75,000, the amount of the bond.

After the Government had completed the work it developed it had cost nearly a million dollars. It cost $188,000 more than the Government estimated it would cost under the contract. Curiously enough, that is about the sum that experienced tunnel builders estimated that the tunnel would cost in the first instance, over and above the estimates of the Reclamation Service, so that as a matter of fact the tunnel did not cost greatly in excess of the amount it probably would have cost had the contract been let to an experienced tunnel builder in the first instance. There was some additional cost, due to the fact that, the work not having been prosecuted continuously, a considerable amount of material disintegrated, and it was very much more difficult than it would have been in the first place to place the timber and cement. With that exception, the work was prosecuted as cheaply as it could have been done under any circumstances, and finally completed, as I say, at a cost of nearly a million dollars.

Now, the question is, What shall we do about it? These people contributed their labor. Some contributed their hay and their grain. The storekeepers contributed their provisions, and others furnished board for the men. Are these people to remain unpaid? Is this great and good Government of ours so hard up that it can not meet an obligation which went into a public work?

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] is much exercised about my constituents to be. Possibly they may not be my constituents. I may not be here. But if those who come are of the sort that are there now, I will never hear a whisper of criticism.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Not now. I will never hear a word of criticism from any of them because I have believed it right that men shall be paid for labor they performed and material they contributed to the works of the Government. The valley of the Shoshone may not be the most fertile on earth, but its fertile acres can bear the slight additional cost that this will put upon them. Of course I would prefer, and I think it would be a matter of absolute justice, if this additional charge were laid upon the reclamation fund and not upon that project. As a matter of fact, I think I could give the House very excellent reasons why that should be done if I had the time, but we must pass upon the legislation as it is here before us.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Very briefly.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not his understanding that the labor has already been paid for this work, and that the firms furnishing the materials have been paid?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not understand anything of the sort. If that were true, we would not be here urging this legislation. As a matter of fact there are some people who have assumed a part at least of the labor obligation; but because those people have in the course of business assumed some of these labor obligations is no reason on the face of the green earth why they should be compelled to lose by reason of that fact.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I am in entire accord with the gentleman, and my only object in asking the question was to clear up the situation as to who was paid and who was not.

Mr. MONDELL. The labor has not all been paid. There are individuals who have not been paid.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I have been interrupted quite a good deal.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is very kind. I ask unanimous consent that I may have two minutes, not to be taken out of the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no control over that.

Mr. RAKER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Some of the laborers themselves have not been paid. Some of them have been paid by people who have assumed the obligations, but I think comparatively few of those who furnished material——

Mr. LAFFERTY. Just there will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman let me finish just one sentence? Very few of those who furnished material have been paid. I know personally of a gentleman now living in Omaha who was very seriously crippled in his business affairs because he, as a small dealer in grain, furnished about $2,000 worth of grain. I know he has never been paid.

Mr. LAFFERTY. The time checks of many of these laborers were cashed before the crash came.

Mr. MONDELL. They cashed them to pay for their board. Now, let me make this further suggestion, and I can not yield for interruptions. This law, whether you read the law of 1894 or the law of 1905, lays an obligation on the Government that the officials never met or accepted. It provides specifically that the bond shall be for the protection of labor and material, and it was the duty of the Government to see that these contractors paid their labor and their material men.

For many years I had something to do with great construction work carried on under contract, and I know we never thought of paying a man until he brought us his receipted pay roll; and the Government of the United States certainly ought to do as much for the protection of labor in a matter of this kind as an ordinary contractor does.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MONDELL. May I have one minute more?

Mr. RAKER. I yield one minute further to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. If there is anyone in the world who would be embarrassed by his vote on this question, I am the man, for the people who must bear this burden are now or, if I continue to represent my State, will in the future come to be my constituents. They do not expect to settle upon land under reclamation projects that have been built by men who have not been paid for the labor or the material that has gone into the construction of the work. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Texas. It has been paid for by the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. Therefore I am willing to go before my constituents on the proposition that this burden shall be distributed upon all of those settlers who may hereafter come on the lands benefited rather than laid upon those who can not afford to bear it, those who have furnished labor and material.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] use the balance of his time now?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas has 6 minutes more.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have voted against every veto message that has arrived in this House to date, and have done so with great pleasure. It was this President who kept Arizona out of the Union almost a year by a veto message. I wish I could conscientiously vote against this one, but I can not do it under the facts in this case. I am not here to object to the payment of this claim if the money with which it is paid comes out of the Treasury of the United States, but that question is not now before this House.

As we said in our minority report, "boiled down, the real question here presented is, Who shall suffer? The users of the water, who are entirely innocent of any wrongdoing in the premises; or these claimants, who neglected to take security or to protect themselves when they had the opportunity to do so?"

Mr. RAKER. Can the gentleman conceive of any time or place where these men who furnished the labor and material could have protected themselves? If so, how could they have done it? They never saw the bond and could not get it under the law.

Mr. HAYDEN. They could have taken their own security.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. They are in court now.

Mr. HAYDEN. On account of inexperience in work of this character two mistakes were made by the Reclamation Service in connection with the Corbett Tunnel contract. First, the bond of the contractor was insufficient in amount and the financial standing of the persons who signed it was not properly investigated. If a good bond, sufficient in amount, had been obtained, both the United States and those who furnished labor and material to the contractor would have been amply protected. The second mistake was that the contract was awarded to one who was unfamiliar with tunnel construction and who did not have the standard equipment required to do the work. The Reclamation Service is not making mistakes of this kind now. They have profited by this experience.

I am not worrying about the constituents of the gentleman from Wyoming. They may be well able to pay the additional cost that will be charged against their lands. But I do object to the establishment of a precedent in this House which may hereafter be used to place additional burdens upon my constituents. My people believe that the Government should pay for the mistakes and incompetence of its own officials. They want value received for the money that they pay to the United States for the construction of any reclamation work.

The gentleman from Wyoming insists that the settlers under the Shoshone project have received full value for the labor and material furnished by those who are now asking that they be paid and the cost charged to the lands under the project. On that point I want to read from the testimony of the Director of the Reclamation Service.

Mr. Newell says:

> Had the contract been entered upon immediately with the customary machinery and methods it would have been possible to have pushed the tunnel through and lined it and completed it within the bid. But owing to the long delay and exposure of the rock to the air and the water the rock crumbled rapidly—disintegrated rapidly—as it frequently does in tunnels of that character, and it added very greatly to the cost and to the delay of completing. In other words, a tunnel through relatively soft rock of this character must be handled in a certain well-known way in order to have the work performed within a reasonable cost.
> The contractor did not have adequate machinery to work, and the work was not prosecuted in a proper manner, and that is the reason for the excess cost.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; I can not yield. I have only five minutes. The character of the equipment used by the contractor is described by the Director of the Reclamation Service in this manner:

> In this case the contractor started in with an entirely novel scheme. He devised, or his agents devised, a kind of machine with great steel claws which would go into the tunnel like a woodchuck and dig this stuff out and throw it behind. It was all right digging it out and throwing it behind, but they could not get it away from the machine.

When the Reclamation Service was compelled to take over the work they could not use the contractor's machinery; new equipment had to be purchased; the working force had to be reassembled and organized; the rock in the exposed parts of the tunnel had disintegrated. These are the reasons for the excessive cost of the Government construction. Therefore it is not true that the water users under this project have received full value fom those who furnished labor and material to the contractor. Neither the settlers who are now living under the project nor those who may hereafter come should be required to pay this charge.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I will.

Mr. RAKER. How did it happen that the Government, with its experience, in completing the rest of the contract at the proportionate rate at a cost of $55,000 for each 16.2 per cent of the work more than these men did it under the contract?

Mr. HAYDEN. I have just read to you the testimony of the Director of the Reclamation Service, who says that if they had begun the work themselves they could have carried it out within the limit of the contract price.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I will for a question.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. As a matter of fact, is not the proper recourse for these contractors to have their claims settled in the Court of Claims instead of taking up the time of the House when matters of greater importance are pending?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is my judgment exactly. This case is now in court, and I do not think that it ought to be considered by this House at this time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD].

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, my notion of the pending bill was expressed very clearly by the gentleman from Arizona. If there is any man on this side of the House who knows the situation in regard to the Reclamation Service, it is the gentleman who has just taken his seat.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I am glad to have the concurrence of the gentleman from Colorado. Mr. Speaker, if this is a contested claim it may be left to the Court of Claims to do full justice.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I can not, for I have only a minute. The Court of Claims will have an opportunity to review both sides of this question, and we are doing no injustice whatever to the claimants if we allow the Court of Claims to pass upon this matter. Whereas if we were to take it up here and dispose of it now there is grave danger that injustice may be done to the Government of the United States. We know that many Members on both sides of the Chamber are anxious at all times to help one of their colleagues in a matter of this kind, and with that idea in view, after reviewing all of the evidence that has been submitted, I say that we can best leave this matter to the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired. The gentleman from California has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I recognize that some explanation of the parcel-post proposition offered by the gentleman from Tennessee this morning and approved by the House ought to be made. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves a call of the House.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and twenty-one Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I examined this bill very carefully before it passed the House and thought that it ought to pass the House. Since the veto of the President I have gone over the papers again very carefully, including the report of the Secretary of the Interior, and, much as I desire to sustain a veto of the President, and as highly as I regard his opinion, I am constrained, in view of the facts in the case, to vote to override the veto of the President.

In this case the Government let a contract for the construction of a tunnel as a part of an irrigation system. The contract was let for less than the work could be done for, as it subsequently developed. The contract was forfeited, the contractor became bankrupt, and was unable to carry on the work. The Government finished the work. While the contractor was carrying on the work he bought supplies and issued pay checks to the laborers. The work and supplies went into the construction of the tunnel. The pay checks have not been paid. The supplies are not paid for. The Government has received the benefit of the work and the benefit of the supplies. If the contractor had failed a month or two before he did fail and the Government had proceeded to finish the work, as it did proceed afterwards to do, the Government would have been required to pay that much more money for the construction of the work than it did pay, namely, the amount represented by the pay checks and the amounts paid, due for supplies. I am not in favor of the Government taking the supplies or taking the labor of the laboring men and giving no chance for the payment of those bills. I believe the Government ought to secure the laborer his hire, because the laborer is worthy of his hire. I believe when the Government makes use of the supplies it ought to see that the bills are paid. In this case, as this work has all been done, for the purpose of carrying out the irrigation project and because the people who will occupy the land on the irrigation project will receive the benefit of the labor which is unpaid and of the supplies which yet remain unpaid for, I think they are the ones who ought to pay, and the pending bill only permits these people to intervene in the suit on the bonds which the Government took, and permits them to recover from the bondsmen. I am not willing to give my sanction to a proposition that the Government in constructing work can make use of labor which is unpaid for or make use of supplies which are not paid for. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY].

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, the bill now before the House, upon which Members are now about to vote, originated in the other body of Congress, and, therefore, was returned with the veto message to that body. It was considered in the Senate for two days, it was elaborately argued, and only 17 Members of that body voted to sustain the veto message of the President. The simple object of the bill is to give to those who put labor and materials into the construction of the Corbett Tunnel on the Shoshone irrigation project the right to sue upon the bond of the contractor or the subcontractor as they would have had the right to do under the law as it existed up to a few months prior to the letting of this contract. When this labor and material was furnished these people believed, and they had a right to believe, that they would be protected under the general law that obtains in every civilized country, that those who furnish labor and material in the construction of public works have a lien upon those works for what they have furnished. I am very sorry that I have not time to go into the merits of the bill. I will simply state that when it came before the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands of the House of Representatives only three members of that body were opposed to its favorable consideration. It was reported favorably and passed through the House. I believe that it ought now to be passed again, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is, On reconsideration, will the House agree to pass the bill the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 138, nays 77, answering "present" 12, not voting 163, as follows:

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 138, the nays 77, and present 12, and on reconsideration the House refuses to pass the bill over the President's veto. The Chair will recognize gentlemen from the Committee on Elections who have some privileged matters.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—MURPHY AGAINST HAUGEN.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I submit a report from the Committee on Elections No. 3, in the case of Murphy against Haugen, from the fourth congressional district of Iowa. This is a unanimous report and I ask the adoption of the resolution recommended by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 697 (H. Rept. 1203).

Resolved, That Gilbert N. Haugen was elected a Representative in the Sixty-second Congress from the fourth congressional district in the State of Iowa and is entitled to a seat therein.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

PARCEL POST.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in the way of a comparison of the so-called Bourne parcel-post proposition with the Moon parcel-post proposition agreed to in the House this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY, Mr. SULZER, Mr. ADAMSON, and Mr. RUSSELL rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentlemen now who want to get bills into conference. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Army appropriation bill, to disagree with the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

An act (H. R. 25531) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Army appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will announce the conferees on the part of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HAY, Mr. SLAYDEN, and Mr. KAHN.

CIVIL WAR PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 24626) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

An act (H. R. 24626) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the Senate amendments were agreed to.

MINORITY REPORT—CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF M'LAIN AGAINST BOWMAN.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Elections No. 1, I desire to submit the views of the minority on the contested-election case of McLain against Bowman, and ask to have the same printed. (H. Rept. 1182, pt. 2.)

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 14770. An act for the relief of Martin A. L. Olsen.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 18985. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14770. An act for the relief of Martin A. L. Olsen.

HOUR OF MEETING ON SATURDAY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at half past 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at half past 10 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to fix the time for debate on the naval appropriation bill. I understand that the naval bill will be taken up as soon as possible in the morning, and the proposition has been agreed to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] and the minority leader [Mr. MANN] and by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] in charge of the bill, that there shall be an hour and a half of debate on the amendment relating to battleships; one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] and one-half hour on that amendment to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] states that the agreement all around is that the conference report on the naval appropriation bill shall be taken up as soon as may be after half past 10 to-morrow morning, and that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] have 30 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] an hour.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that that arrangement be agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is that on?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On amendment regarding battleships.

Mr. FOSS. That arrangement is in regard to the battleship amendment.

The SPEAKER. Yes; that agreement is in regard to the battleship amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state for the information of Members that his understanding is that as soon as the naval appropriation bill is out of the way the contested-election case of McLain against Bowman, from Pennsylvania, will be called up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think, Mr. Speaker, that that is not the understanding. The House must pass the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill before to-morrow expires unless we are to stay here another week. I do not believe that this election case should be allowed to interfere with that.

FUR-SEAL CONVENTION.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the North Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington, July 7, 1911, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] asks to take the bill (H. R. 16571) from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Chair announces the following conferees on the part of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SULZER, Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, and Mr. MCKINLEY.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, from the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 26321) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report (No. 1201), ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves all points or order.

OPERATION OF VEHICLES OF METROPOLITAN COACH CO.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2904) to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia authority to regulate the operation and equipment of the Metropolitan Coach Co., and agree to the conference report, the Senate having receded from its amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 2904) to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia authority to regulate the operation and equipment of the vehicles of the Metropolitan Coach Co.

Mr. LOBECK. I ask that the conference report be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1193).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2904) to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia authority to regulate the operation and equipment of the vehicles of the Metropolitan Coach Co., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same.

JOHN H. ROTHERMEL,
C. O. LOBECK,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. L. JONES,
WM. S. KENYON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The House amended the bill in the following particulars: The provisions of the Senate bill giving the District Commissioners the right to select the route over which the company should operate and to fix rates and charges for the service rendered were stricken out by the House. It also fixed the period when the bill should go into effect at six months from the date of its passage. The District Commissioners were authorized to make reasonable time schedules for the operation of the coaches owned by the company, and the following new paragraphs were added to the bill:

SEC. 5. The vehicles of the Metropolitan Coach Co. shall follow its present route to Fifteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, and shall go thence west to Madison Place, north to H Street, east to Fifteenth Street, and thence to Sixteenth and U Streets, by the route followed coming south; and said company, if it so elects, shall be permitted, in lieu of sending its vehicles west on Pennsylvania Avenue, as above provided, to send them south on Fifteenth Street and east on Pennsylvania Avenue to Eighth Street west, and thence reverse to Sixteenth and U Streets.

SEC. 6. That said company shall issue to all passengers received by it north of H Street NW., and desiring same, a transfer ticket to the cars of the Capital Traction Co. at the intersection of Fifteenth Street and New York Avenue and Pennsylvania Avenue NW., said transfer ticket to be good for passage on the cars of the Capital Traction Co. going south or west, and the said Capital Traction Co. shall receive and transport on its said cars said passengers on said transfer tickets without the payment of additional fare; and the said Capital Traction Co. shall issue to all its passengers desiring same, on cars going east on Pennsylvania Avenue and north on Fifteenth Street, at said intersection, a transfer ticket to the coaches of the said Metropolitan Coach Co., and the said Metropolitan Coach Co. shall receive and transport on its coaches said passengers on said transfer tickets without the payment of additional fare.

SEC. 7. That said Metropolitan Coach Co. shall issue to all its passengers desiring same a transfer ticket to the cars of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. at the said intersection of Fifteenth Street, New York Avenue, and Pennsylvania Avenue NW., said transfer ticket to be good for passage on the cars of the said Washington Railway & Electric Co., and the said Washington Railway & Electric Co. shall receive and transport on its said cars said passengers on said transfer tickets without the payment of additional fare; and the said Washington Railway & Electric Co. shall issue to all its passengers desiring same at said intersection a transfer ticket to the coaches of the said Metropolitan Coach Co., and the said Metropolitan Coach Co. shall receive and transport on its coaches said passengers on said transfer ticket without the payment of additional fare.

SEC. 8. That any company named herein that fails to comply with the requirements of sections 6 and 7 of this act shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100 for each violation thereof, and prosecutions shall be made as prescribed in section 4 of this act; that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall make and enforce the regulations necessary to carry the provisions of these sections into effect.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to all the amendments of the House, and adopts the same.

JOHN H. ROTHERMEL,
C. O. LOBECK,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House, I want to submit some figures and make a few brief observations upon the subject of expenditures and collections for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, in connection with the Five Civilized Tribes of Indans in Oklahoma:

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Expenditures and collections during fiscal year ending June 30, 1911.

DISBURSEMENTS.

For administration, by Commissioner Five Civilized Tribes, for allotments and office work incident thereto, and payment to 58,000 Indians to equalize allotments	$85,510.87
Administration of affairs of 36,961 restricted Indians by superintendent Union Agency, including district agents, industrial work, pay of police, rent of buildings, etc., costing $7.29 per capita	269,292.00
Total administration, congressional appropriations		$354,802.87
For equalization Chickasaw Freedmen allotments, congressional appropriation		12,543.26
From tribal funds:
For salaries and expenses, Government employees, in collecting $2,053,796.96 tribal revenues, at a cost of 4½ per cent	$55,803.15
For tribal officers, coal trustees, tribal attorneys, council members, salaries, and expenses	95,874.75
For payment to Indians, equalization of allotments	217,140.60
For payment to Indians, per capita payments	$12,260.40
Reestimating timberlands, thereby adding over $1,000,000 to value	29,824.28
Refunds and miscellaneous special expenditures	22,454.39
		$433,357.57
Expenses of furnishing public certified copies of allotment records (paid from fees collected, not congressional or tribal funds)		17,985.40
For support of schools, paid from congressional appropriation, tribal funds, and surplus United States court fees		371,509.79
Total expenditures		1,190,198.89

COLLECTIONS.

Total tribal collections, including rent unallotted lands and tribal property, coal royalties, sale unallotted tribal lands, etc	2,053,796.96
Collected for individual Indians and placed to their credit in banks or paid them—oil and gas royalties, sale restricted Indian allotted lands, etc	2,040,556.23
Actual additional savings to Indians through district agents by requiring deductions in expense reports of guardians and claims affecting minors' estates, additional amounts for leases, etc	549,498.91
Total collections	4,643,853.10

Much has been said about the expenses of the Five Civilized Tribes for 1911, amounting to $1,190,198.89, which is a misleading statement. The statement I have submitted clearly shows that the actual expense of administration was only $354,802.89, and that of this amount $85,510.87 was expended by the commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes in administration of tribal matters, completing allotments and work incident thereto, and equalizing same by payments, and that $269,292 was expended through the Union Agency that supervised the individual restricted Indian, and under whom there is employed what is known as district agents. No part of this amount expended by the commissioner and the Union Agency and for district agents is tribal money, but is appropriated out of the Federal Treasury. Considering the number of restricted Indians and the large amount collected, namely, $4,643,853.10, which enormous amount has to be cared for and then distributed and disbursed, over $2,000,000 being paid to restricted Indians or placed to their credit, I submit that the expenses of administration are not excessive, and as compared with what is expended for the same purpose at other agencies in Oklahoma is a very low charge. I have a statement showing the number of restricted Indians at other agencies in Oklahoma, which is taken from Table No. 37, page 214, of the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, showing the per capita cost of administration at each agency, and I submit the statement, which is as follows:

Cost of administration of Indians under departmental supervision, year ending June 30, 1911, from funds authorized by Congress.

Tribe.	Number of Indians.		Total cost.	Per capita cost.
Cheyenne and Arapaho	2,733	Administration ($35,000 congressional appropriation)	$33,297.40
		Industrial, police, pay of superintendents, etc	30,201.36
			63,498.76	$23.23
Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, Wichita, and Caddo.	3,978	Administration ($30,000 congressional appropriation)	26,716.20
		Industrial, police, pay of superintendents, etc	20,561.64
			47,277.84	11.86
Osage	2,072	Administration ($30,000 congressional appropriation)	27,179.73	13.11
		Increased to $40,000 for 1912, making per capita cost		19.31
Ponca	639	Administration ($8,000 congressional appropriation)	7,920.96
		Industrial, police, superintendent, interpreter	6,944.88
			14,865.84	23.20
		Increased to $9,000 in 1912, making per capita cost		24.83
Kaw	160	Administration	1,500.00
		Industrial, police, etc	3,194.77
			4,694.77	29.34
Otoe	413	(No specific appropriation)	6,999.75	16.95
Pawnee	651	Administration ($7,100 congressional appropriation)	5,333.41
		Industrial, police, etc	7,013.86
			12,347.27	18.95
Sac and Fox	623	General and trust funds (no specific appropriation)	14,084.71	22.61
Total	11,269	Total expenditures	201,950.12	17.92

It will be observed by the statement just presented that the average per capita cost of administration at the agencies named is $17.92, while the cost of administration of the Five Civilized Tribes is only $7.29 per capita. There were 36,961 restricted Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes, as shown by the commissioner's report to which I have referred, and the amount expended for the administration of the individual affairs of the Indians is, as I have already stated, only $269.292; and for this expenditure, in addition to supervising the affairs of the Indians, protecting them in their property rights, looking after the removal of restrictions and other matters affecting them, there was actually received and paid to individual Indians the following amounts:

For oil and gas royalties	$1,365,826
For individual Indian land sales	674,730
Additional amounts recovered by district agents in probate cases	549,498
Total	2,590,054

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. SABATH was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

JOHN P. RISLEY.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 19190, for the relief of John P. Risley, and to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 19190 and concur in the Senate amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

CITIZENSHIP OF DESERTERS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 17483) amending section 1998 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and to authorize the President, in certain cases, to mitigate or remit the loss of rights of citizenship imposed by law upon deserters from the military or naval service, and to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 17483 and concur in the Senate amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Panama Canal bill, H. R. 21969.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia calls up the conference report on the Panama Canal bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire to reserve points of order on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves points of order.

Mr. ADAMSON. I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report, and I call the attention of the Clerk to the fact that there is a transposition at the beginning of the report, and that amendment numbered 23 should be read before amendment numbered 10.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read the statement in lieu of the report.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. What point of order does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to make?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire to make a point of order against the report itself.

The SPEAKER. On what ground?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On the ground that the conferees have exceeded their authority, and on the further ground that they have submitted in the report an amendment which is in contravention of section 7 of the Constitution of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement in lieu of the report.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1197).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 13, 15, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 48, 50, 51, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 14, 28, 47, 49, 63.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 9 of the amendment, after the word "and," insert the words "govern the"; in lines 23 and 24 of the amendment, strike out the colon after the word "qualified" and strike out the words "Provided, That he be subject to removal at the will of the President"; in line 27 of the amendment strike out the word "and" and after the word "operation" insert a comma and the words "and protection"; in the first line of the last paragraph of the amendment strike out the words "The President,"; capitalize the letter "b" in the word "before"; in the same line and line 2 of the paragraph strike out the words "shall cause the Commission of Arts to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the Commission of Arts may"; and in the same line, after the word "report," insert the words "to the President"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 11 and 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 11 and 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the two said Senate amendments and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That section 4132 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4132. Vessels built within the United States and belonging wholly to citizens thereof; and vessels which may be captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize, or which may be adjudged to be forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States; and seagoing vessels, whether steam or sail, which have been certified by the Steamboat-Inspection Service as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo, not more than 5 years old at the time they apply for registry, wherever built, which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, being wholly owned by citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, and no others, may be registered as directed in this title. Foreign-built vessels registered pursuant to this act shall not engage in the coastwise trade: Provided, That a foreign-built yacht, pleasure boat, or vessel not used or intended to be used for trade admitted to American registry pursuant to this section shall not be exempt from the collection of ad valorem duty provided in section 37 of the act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes." That all materials of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction or repair of vessels built in the United States and all such materials necessary for the building or repair of their machinery and all articles necessary for their outfit and equipment may be imported into the United States free of duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided further, That such vessels so admitted under the provisons of this section may contract with the Postmaster General under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce," so long as such vessels shall in all respects comply with the provisions and requirement of said act.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the following part of Senate amendment 16: "nor be less than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the canal," and agree to the same with the following amendment: Insert in lieu of the words just quoted the words "nor be less than the equivalent of 75 cents per net registered tons"; and that the Senate recede from that part of its amendment numbered 16, striking out the words "The toll for each passenger shall not be more than $1.50."

Amendment numbered 17: That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in line 3 of the amendment, the word "alleged"; in lines 10, 11, and 12 of the amendment strike out the words "off without proceeding to execution. All such claims, whether by agreement or after judgment, shall be paid"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amendment the words "the allowance and prosecution of"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amendment the word "and" and insert in lieu thereof the words "or the," and, on page 12, line 11, of the bill, after the word "judge," insert the word "thereof"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amendment the words "his assistants" and insert in lieu thereof the words "may appoint one assistant when necessary"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "canal" the words "or elsewhere"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "route" the words "or elsewhere"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the amendment strike out the words "ship engaged in or" and insert in lieu thereof the word "vessel"; in lines 1 and 2 of the amendment strike out the words "by the terms of this act"; in line 2 of the amendment, after the word "coastwise," insert the words "or foreign"; add to the amendment the following: "Suit may be brought by any shipper or by the Attorney General of the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"If the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be of the opinion that any such existing specified service by water other than through the Panama Canal is being operated in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and that such extension will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on the route by water under consideration, the Interstate Commerce Commission may, by order, extend the time during which such service by water may continue to be operated beyond July 1, 1914. In every case of such extension the rates, schedules, and practices of such water carrier shall be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and shall be subject to the act to regulate commerce and all amendments thereto in the same manner and to the same extent as is the railroad or other common carrier controlling such water carrier or interested in any manner in its operation: Provided, Any application for extension under the terms of this provision filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission prior to July 1, 1914, but for any reason not heard and disposed of before said date, may be considered and granted thereafter."

Transpose the order of amendments 61 and 62 so that amendment numbered 61 follows amendment numbered 62.

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

Amendments 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 13, 15, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 48, 50, 51, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, and 58, on all of which the House recedes and concurs, generally affect the verbiage of the text. Some of them affect the punctuation, some of them the orthography, and some of them the structure of the sentence, but none of them materially affect the provisions of the House bill, except that as to amendment—

No. 10, on which the Senate recedes, it was found on further examination of the law that the word "exclusively" was not necessary, as it did not change the sense, as the law itself already confines coastwise ships to coastwise trade.

No. 14, from which the Senate recedes, was an amendment extending the exemption of tolls to ships in the foreign trade, which goes out of the bill.

No. 23, concurred in by the House, authorizes the President to negotiate with private wireless companies wherever necessary to insure freedom from interference with our own systems.

No. 28, from which the Senate recedes, provides that all the different laws in the present code of the zone imposing governmental duties upon any incumbent official shall apply to the governor of the Panama Canal. That language saves the work of looking up all those laws and amending them individually. The effect of the agreement is to restore the language stricken and make all such existing laws applicable to the governor.

No. 49, from which the Senate recedes, substitutes the word "and" for the word "or," which was incorrect, and the agreement restores the word "or."

No. 63, from which the Senate recedes, attempts to limit the discretion and lay down a rule for the commission which is unnecessary, the sense already being supplied by the context.

As to amendment No. 8, as to which the House recedes and concurs with an amendment, we inserted the words "govern the" before the words "Canal Zone," to complete the sense. The agreement strikes out the provision that the governor of the Panama Canal may be removed at will of the President, because that is already the law and unnecessary to repeat. We inserted the word "protection" among the other things which were to be done in connection with the canal, in order to perfect the provision and to provide, among other things, for the protection of the canal.

We amended the provision as to the Commission of Arts by making a report optional with the commision instead of obligatory at the command of the President.

The effect of the agreement as to amendments 11 and 12 is to put in a more accurate and systematic form the things sought to be done by the amendments of the Senate. Therefore we have looked up the statutes and regulations and redrawn both the amendments so as to give them proper force and effect, made it positive that ships built abroad shall never engage in the coastwise trade, and removed the restrictions from the use of free shipbuilding materials, whereas under the present law ships built with imported materials free of duty can only be used in the coastwise trade six months in the year. We take off all restrictions and permit the shipyards to import their materials for shipbuilding free of duty, and we make it clear that in order to enter into mail contracts ships built abroad must comply with all the requirements of existing law.

In receding from and agreeing to amendment 16 we provide a minimum toll of 75 cents per ton instead of the uncertain standard provided in the original language about proportionate part of the cost, and restore the language providing for a maximum charge of $1.50 for passengers.

Amendment No. 17 contained the House provision for the adjustment of claims arising from injuries to vessels in being carried through the locks under our control. The Senate recedes with an amendment striking out some unnecessary words thereby improving the sense we think, and left the provision substantially as passed by the House.

Amendment No. 40 is an insertion by the Senate of the words "providing for the allowance and prosecution of." The House concurred in this amendment striking out the unnecessary words "the allowance and prosecution of," so as to leave the reading very much improved, simply providing for appeals.

Amendment No. 46, from its disagreement to which the House recedes with an amendment, was an effort to define more clearly the jurisdiction in certain matters so as to give it to both the court and the judge. In concurring in the insertion of the word "court" the agreement strikes the word "and" and inserts the word "or," so as to vest the jurisdiction in either the court or the judge, and the word "thereof" is added to complete the sense.

Amendment No. 52, from its disagreement to which the House recedes, endeavored to supply the clerk of the district court with assistants without limiting the number. The House concurred with an amendment limiting it to one assistant.

Amendment No. 59 modified the House provision and limited the prohibition of railroads using common carriers to parallel themselves to only those carriers using the Panama Canal and

No. 60 extended the common carriers by water to any vessel carrying freight and passengers. The amendments with which the House concurred added the words "or elsewhere" and so practically restores the virility of the House provision extending the prohibition to railroad-owned ships on all waters.

Amendment No. 61 was designed to amend the antitrust law in its application to the canal. The amendment with which the House concurred in receding from its disagreement seeks to perfect the language about striking out and inserting words in lines 24 and 25, page 21, and also seeks to make certain the right of any shipper, as well as the Attorney General, to bring suit.

Amendment No. 62, known as the Bourne amendment, was an effort to restore what was in effect stricken out by the adoption of amendment No. 59, by making the prohibition of the use of railroad-owned ships apply to all our waters and not regarding the Bourne amendment as the most effective and constitutional way to reach the evil, the conferees decided to pursue the approved plan of dealing with carriers through the commission by first declaring what is unlawful and then authorizing the commission to act in the premises, so that added to the House provision providing for an investigation and determination of the questions of competition or possibility of competition a provision authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission, on proper showing, may extend the date when the prohibition shall take effect in case of any service that might be shown to be essential to the convenience and commerce of the public and not operate to the destruction of competition and we deemed it proper in granting such extension to provide that such railroad-owned ships operated under their control should themselves be controlled in their rates, schedules, and practices by the same authority regulating the railroads which owned them.

W. C. ADAMSON,
T. W. SIMS,
Managers on the part of the House.

An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone.

Be it enacted, etc., That the zone of land and land under water of the width of 10 miles extending to the distance of 5 miles on each side of the center line of the route of the canal now being constructed thereon, which zone begins in the Caribbean Sea 3 marine miles from mean low-water mark and extends to and across the Isthmus of Panama into the Pacific Ocean to the distance of 3 marine miles from mean low-water mark, excluding therefrom the cities of Panama and Colon and their adjacent harbors located within said zone, as excepted in the treaty with the Republic of Panama dated November 18, 1903, but including all islands within said described zone, and in addition thereto the group of islands in the Bay of Panama named Perico, Naos, Culebra, and Flamenco, and lands and waters outside of said limits above described which are necessary or convenient or from time to time may become necessary or convenient for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, or protection of the said canal or of any auxiliary canals, lakes, or other works necessary or convenient for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, or protection of said canal, the use, occupancy, or control whereof were granted to the United States by the treaty between the United States and the Republic of Panama, the ratifications of which were exchanged on the 26th day of February, 1904, shall be known and designated as the Canal Zone, and the canal now being constructed thereon shall hereafter be known and designated as the Panama Canal. The President is authorized by treaty with the Republic of Panama to acquire any additional land or land under water not already granted, or which was excepted from the grant, that he may deem necessary for the operation, maintenance, sanitation, or protection of the Panama Canal, and to exchange any land or land under water not deemed necessary for such purpose for other land or land under water which may be deemed necessary for such purposes, which additional land or land under water so acquired shall become part of the Canal Zone.

SEC. 2. That all laws, orders, regulations, and ordinances adopted and promulgated in the Canal Zone by order of the President for the government and sanitation of the Canal Zone and the construction of the Panama Canal are hereby ratified and confirmed as valid and binding until Congress shall otherwise provide. The existing courts established in the Canal Zone by Executive order are recognized and confirmed to continue in operation until the courts provided for in this act shall be established.

SEC. 3. That the President is authorized to declare by Executive order that all land and land under water within the limits of the Canal Zone is necessary for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, or protection of the Panama Canal, and to extinguish, by agreement when advisable, all claims and titles of adverse claimants and occupants. Upon failure to secure by agreement title to any such parcel of land or land under water the adverse claim or occupancy shall be disposed of and title thereto secured in the United States and compensation therefor fixed and paid in the manner provided in the aforesaid treaty with the Republic of Panama, or such modification of such treaty as may hereafter be made.

SEC. 4. That when in the judgment of the President the construction of the Panama Canal shall be sufficiently advanced toward completion to render the further services of the Isthmian Canal Commission unnecessary the President is authorized by Executive order to discontinue the Isthmian Canal Commission, which, together with the present organization, shall then cease to exist; and the President is authorized thereafter to complete, govern, and operate the Panama Canal and govern the Canal Zone, or cause them to be completed. governed, and operated, through a governor of the Panama Canal and such other persons as he may deem competent to discharge the various duties connected with the completion, care, maintenance, sanitation, operation, government, and protection of the canal and Canal Zone. If any of the persons appointed or employed as aforesaid shall be persons in the military or naval service of the United States, the amount of the official salary paid to any such person shall be deducted from the amount of salary or compensation provided by or which shall be fixed under the terms of this act. The governor of the Panama Canal shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, commissioned for a term of four years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified. He shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year. All other persons necessary for the completion, care, management, maintenance, sanitation, government, operation, and protection of the Panama Canal and Canal Zone shall be appointed by the President or by his authority, removable at his pleasure, and the compensation of such persons shall be fixed by the President, or by his authority, until such time as Congress may by law regulate the same, but salaries or compensation fixed hereunder by the President shall in no instance exceed by more than 25 per cent the salary or compensation paid for the same or similar services to persons employed by the Government in continental United States; that upon the completion of the Panama Canal the President shall cause the same to be officially and formally opened for use and operation.

Before the completion of the canal the Commission of Arts may make report to the President of their recommendation regarding the artistic character of the structures of the canal, such report to be transmitted to Congress.

SEC. 5. That the President is hereby authorized to prescribe and from time to time change the tolls that shall be levied by the Government of the United States for the use of the Panama Canal: Provided, That no tolls, when prescribed as above, shall be changed, unless six months' notice thereof shall have been given by the President by proclamation. No tolls shall be levied upon vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States. That section 4132 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4132. Vessels built within the United States and belonging wholly to citizens thereof, and vessels which may be captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize, or which may be adjudged to be forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States, and seagoing vessels, whether steam or sail, which have been certified by the Steamboat-Inspection Service as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo, not more than five years old at the time they apply for registry, wherever built, which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, being wholly owned by citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, and no others, may be registered as directed in this title. Foreign-built vessels registered pursuant to this act shall not engage in the coastwise trade: Provided, That a foreign-built yacht, pleasure boat, or vessel, not used or intended to be used for trade, admitted to American registry pursuant to this section, shall not be exempt from the collection of ad valorem duty provided in section 37 of the act approved August 5, 1909, entitled 'An act to provide revenue. equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.'" That all materials of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction or repair of vessels built in the United States and all such materials necessary for the building or repair of their machinery, and all articles necessary for their outfit and equipment, may be imported into the United States free of duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided further, That such vessels so admitted under the provisions of this section may contract with the Postmaster General, under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce," so long as such vessels shall in all respects comply with the provisions and requirements of said act. Tolls may be based upon gross or net registered tonnage, displacement tonnage, or otherwise, and may be based on one form of tonnage for warships and another for ships of commerce. The rate of tolls may be lower upon vessels in ballast than upon vessels carrying passengers or cargo. When based upon net registered tonnage for ships of commerce, the tolls shall not exceed $1.25 per net registered ton, nor be less, other than for vessels of the United States and its citizens, than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the canal, subject, however, to the provisions of article 19 of the convention between the United States and the Republic of Panama entered into November 18, 1903. If the tolls shall not be based upon net registered tonnage, they shall not exceed the equivalent of $1.25 per net registered ton as nearly as the same may be determined, nor be less in any form of tonnage than 75 cents. The toll for each passenger shall not be more than $1.50. The President is authorized to make, and from time to time amend, regulations governing the operation of the Panama Canal and the passage and control of vessels through the same or any part thereof, including the locks and approaches thereto, and all rules and regulations affecting pilots and pilotage in the canal or the approaches thereto through the adjacent waters."

Such regulations shall provide for prompt adjustment by agreement and immediate payment of claims for damages which may arise from injury to vessels, cargo, or passengers from the passing of vessels through the locks under the control of those operating them under such rules and regulations. In case of disagreement, suit may be brought in the district court of the Canal Zone against the governor of the Panama Canal. The hearing and disposition of such cases shall be expedited, and the judgment shall be immediately paid out of any moneys appropriated or allotted for canal operation.

The President shall provide a method for the determination and adjustment of all claims arising out of personal injuries to employees thereafter occurring while directly engaged in actual work in connection with the construction, maintenance, operation, or sanitation of the canal or of the Panama Railroad, or of any auxiliary canals, locks, or other works necessary and convenient for the construction, maintenance, operation, or sanitation of the canal, whether such injuries result in death or not, and prescribe a schedule of compensation therefor, and may revise and modify such method and schedule at any time; and such claims, to the extent they shall be allowed on such adjustment, if allowed at all, shall be paid out of the moneys hereafter appropriated for that purpose or out of the funds of the Panama Railroad Co., if said company was responsible for said injury, as the case may require. And after such method and schedule shall be provided by the President, the provisions of the act entitled "An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment," approved May 30, 1908, and of the act entitled "An act relating to injured employees on the Isthmian Canal," approved February 24, 1909, shall not apply to personal injuries thereafter received and claims for which are subject to determination and adjustment as provided in this section.

SEC. 6. That the President is authorized to cause to be erected, maintained, and operated, subject to the international convention and the act of Congress to regulate radio communication, at suitable places along the Panama Canal and the coast adjacent to its two terminals, in connection with the operation of said canal, such wireless telegraphic installations as he may deem necessary for the operation, maintenance, sanitation, and protection of said canal, and for other purposes. If it is found necessary to locate such installations upon territory of the Republic of Panama, the President is authorized to make such agreement with said Government as may be necessary, and also to provide for the acceptance and transmission, by said system, of all private and commercial messages, and those of the Government of Panama, on such terms and for such tolls as the President may prescribe: Provided, That the messages of the Government of the United States and the departments thereof, and the management of the Panama Canal, shall always be given precedence over all other messages. The President is also authorized, in his discretion, to enter into such operating agreements or leases with any private wireless company or companies as may best insure freedom from interference with the wireless telegraphic installations established by the United States. The President is also authorized to establish, maintain, and operate, through the Panama Railroad Co. or otherwise, dry docks, repair shops, yards, docks, wharves, warehouses, storehouses, and other necessary facilities and appurtenances for the purpose of providing coal and other materials, labor, repairs, and supplies for vessels of the Government of the United States and, incidentally, for supplying such at reasonable prices to passing vessels, in accordance with appropriations hereby authorized to be made from time to time by Congress as a part of the maintenance and operation of the said canal. Moneys received from the conduct of said business may be expended and reinvested for such purposes without being covered into the Treasury of the United States; and such moneys are hereby appropriated for such purposes, but all deposits of such funds shall be subject to the provisions of existing law relating to the deposit of other public funds of the United States, and any net profits accruing from such business shall annually be covered into the Treasury of the United States. Monthly reports of such receipts and expenditures shall be made to the President by the persons in charge, and annual reports shall be made to the Congress.

SEC. 7. That the governor of the Panama Canal shall, in connection with the operation of such canal, have official control and jurisdiction over the Canal Zone, and shall perform all duties in connection with the civil government of the Canal Zone, which is to be held, treated, and governed as an adjunct of such Panama Canal. Unless in this act otherwise provided, all existing laws of the Canal Zone referring to the civil governor or the civil administration of the Canal Zone shall be applicable to the governor of the Panama Canal, who shall perform all such executive and administrative duties required by existing law. The President is authorized to determine or cause to be determined what towns shall exist in the Canal Zone and subdivide and from time to time resubdivide said Canal Zone into subdivisions, to be designated by name or number, so that there shall be situated one town in each subdivision, and the boundaries of each subdivision shall be clearly defined. In each town there shall be a magistrate's court, with exclusive original jurisdiction coextensive with the subdivision in which it is situated of all civil cases in which the principal sum claimed does not exceed $300, and all criminal cases wherein the punishment that may be imposed shall not exceed a fine of $100 or imprisonment not exceeding 30 days, or both, and all violations of police regulations and ordinances and all actions involving possession or title to personal property or the forcible entry and detainer of real estate. Such magistrates shall also hold preliminary investigations in charges of felony and offenses under section 10 of this act, and commit or bail in bailable cases to the district court. A sufficient number of magistrates and constables, who must be citizens of the United States, to conduct the business of such courts shall be appointed by the governor of the Panama Canal for terms of four years and until their successors are appointed and qualified, and the compensation of such persons shall be fixed by the President, or by his authority, until such time as Congress may by law regulate the same. The rules governing said courts and prescribing the duties of said magistrates and constables, oaths, and bonds, the times and places of holding such courts, the disposition of fines, costs, forfeitures, enforcements of judgments, providing for appeals therefrom to the district court, and the disposition, treatment, and pardon of convicts shall be established by order of the President. The governor of the Panama Canal shall appoint all notaries public, prescribe their powers and duties, their official seal, and the fees to be charged and collected by them.

SEC. 8. That there shall be in the Canal Zone one district court with two divisions, one including Balboa and the other including Cristobal; and one district judge of the said district, who shall hold his court in both divisions at such time as he may designate by order, at least once a month in each division. The rules of practice in such district court shall be prescribed or amended by order of the President. The said district court shall have original jurisdiction of all felony cases, of offenses arising under section 10 of this act, all causes in equity, admiralty, and all cases at law involving principal sums exceeding $300, and all appeals from judgments rendered in magistrates' courts. The jurisdiction in admiralty herein conferred upon the district judge and the district court shall be the same that is exercised by the United States district judges and the United States district courts, and the procedure and practice shall also be the same. The district court or the judge thereof shall also have jurisdiction of all other matters and proceedings not herein provided for, which are now within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone, of the Circuit Court of the Canal Zone, the District Court of the Canal Zone, or the judges thereof. Said judge shall provide for the selection, summoning, serving, and compensation of jurors from among the citizens of the United States, to be subject to jury duty in either division of such district, and a jury shall be had in any criminal case or civil case at law originating in said court on the demand of either party. There shall be a district attorney and a marshal for said district. It shall be the duty of the district attorney to conduct all business, civil and criminal, for the government, and to advise the governor of the Panama Canal on all legal questions touching the operation of the canal and the administration of civil affairs. It shall be the duty of the marshal to execute all process of the court, preserve order therein, and do all things incident to the office of marshal. The district judge, the district attorney, and the marshal shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for terms of four years each, and until their successors are appointed and qualified, and during their terms of office shall reside within the Canal Zone, and shall hold no other office, nor serve on any official board or commission, nor receive any emoluments except their salaries. The district judge shall receive the same salary paid the district judges of the United States, and shall appoint the clerk of said court, and may appoint one assistant when necessary, who shall receive salaries to be fixed by the President. The district judge shall be entitled to six weeks' leave of absence each year with pay. During his absence, or during any period of disability or disqualification from sickness or otherwise to discharge his duties, the same shall be temporarily performed by any circuit or district judge of the United States who may be designated by the President, and who, during such service, shall receive the additional mileage and per diem allowed by law to district judges of the United States when holding court away from their homes. The district attorney and the marshal shall be paid each a salary of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 9. That the records of the existing courts and all causes, proceedings, and criminal prosecutions pending therein, as shown by the dockets thereof, except as herein otherwise provided, shall immediately upon the organization of the courts created by this act be transferred to such new courts having jurisdiction of like cases, be entered upon the dockets thereof, and proceed as if they had originally been brought therein, whereupon all the existing courts, except the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone, shall cease to exist. The President may continue the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone and retain the judges thereof in office for such time as to him may seem necessary to determine finally any causes and proceedings which may be pending therein. All laws of the Canal Zone imposing duties upon the clerks or ministerial officers of existing courts shall apply and impose such duties upon the clerks and ministerial officers of the new courts created by this act having jurisdiction of like cases, matters, and duties.

All existing laws in the Canal Zone governing practice and procedure in existing courts shall be applicable and adapted to the practice and procedure in the new courts.

The Circuit Court of Appeals of the Fifth Circuit of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review, revise, modify, reverse, or affirm the final judgments and decrees of the District Court of the Canal Zone and to render such judgments as in the opinion of the said appellate court should have been rendered by the trial court in all actions and proceedings in which the Constitution, or any statute, treaty, title, right, or privilege of the United States is involved and a right thereunder denied, and in cases in which the value in controversy exceeds $1,000, to be ascertained by the oath of either party, or by other competent evidence, and also in criminal causes wherein the offense charged is punishable as a felony. And such appellate jurisdiction, subject to the right of review by or appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States as in other cases authorized by law, may be exercised by said circuit court of appeals in the same manner, under the same regulations, and by the same procedure as nearly as practicable as is done in reviewing the final judgments and decrees of the district courts of the United States.

SEC. 10. That after the Panama Canal shall have been completed and opened for operation the governor of the Panama Canal shall have the right to make such rules and regulations, subject to the approval of the President, touching the right of any person to remain upon or pass over any part of the Canal Zone as may be necessary. Any person violating any of such rules or regulations shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction in the District Court of the Canal Zone shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding a year, or both, in the discretion of the court. It shall be unlawful for any person, by any means or in any way to injure or obstruct, or attempt to injure or obstruct, any part of the Panama Canal or the locks thereof or the approaches thereto. Any person violating this provision shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction in the District Court of the Canal Zone shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 20 years, or both, in the discretion of the court. If the act shall cause the death of any person within a year and a day thereafter, the person so convicted shall be guilty of murder and shall be punished accordingly.

SEC. 11. That section 5 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, is hereby amended by adding thereto a new paragraph at the end thereof, as follows:

"From and after the 1st day of July, 1914, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever (by stock ownership or otherwise, either directly, indirectly, through any holding company, or by stockholders or directors in common, or in any other manner) in any common carrier by water operated through the Panama Canal or elsewhere with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic, or any vessel carrying freight or passengers upon said water route or elsewhere; and in case of the violation of this provision each day in which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense."

Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine questions of fact as to the competition or possibility of competition, after full hearing, on the application of any railroad company or other carrier. Such application may be filed for the purpose of determining whether any existing service is in violation of this section and pray for an order permitting the continuance of any vessel or vessels already in operation, or for the purpose of asking an order to install new service not in conflict with the provisions of this paragraph. The commission may on its own motion or the application of any shipper institute proceedings to inquire into the operation of any vessel in use by any railroad or other carrier which has not applied to the commission and had the question of competition or the possibility of competition determined as herein provided. In all such cases the order of said commission shall be final. If the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be of the opinion that any such existing specified service by water other than through the Panama Canal is being operated in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people and that such extension will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on the route by water under consideration, the Interstate Commerce Commission may, by order, extend the time during which such service by water may continue to be operated beyond July 1, 1914. In every case of such extension the rates, schedules, and practices of such water carrier shall be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and shall be subject to the act to regulate commerce and all amendments thereto in the same manner and to the same extent as is the railroad or other common carrier controlling such water carrier or interested in any manner in its operation: Provided, Any application for extension under the terms of this provision filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission prior to July 1, 1914, but for any reason not heard and disposed of before said date may be considered and granted thereafter.

No vessel permitted to engage in the coastwise or foreign trade of the United States shall be permitted to enter or pass through said canal if such ship is owned, chartered, operated, or controlled by any person or company which is doing business in violation of the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," or the provisions of sections 73 to 77, both inclusive, of an act approved August 27, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," or the provisions of any other act of Congress amending or supplementing the said act of July 2, 1890, commonly known as the Sherman Antitrust Act, and amendments thereto, or said sections of the act of August 27, 1894. The question of fact may be determined by the judgment of any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in any cause pending before it to which the owners or operators of such ship are parties. Suit may be brought by any shipper or by the Attorney General of the United States.

That section 6 of said act to regulate commerce, as heretofore amended, is hereby amended by adding a new paragraph at the end thereof, as follows:

"When property may be or is transported from point to point in the United States by rail and water through the Panama Canal or otherwise, the transportation being by a common carrier or carriers, and not entirely within the limits of a single State, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have jurisdiction of such transportation and of the carriers, both by rail and by water, which may or do engage in the same, in the following particulars, in addition to the jurisdiction given by the act to regulate commerce, as amended June 18, 1910:

"(a) To establish physical connection between the lines of the rail carrier and the dock of the water carrier by directing the rail carrier to make suitable connection between its line and a track or tracks which have been constructed from the dock to the limits of its right of way, or by directing either or both the rail and water carrier, individually or in connection with one another, to construct and connect with the lines of the rail carrier a spur track or tracks to the dock. This provision shall only apply where such connection is reasonably practicable, can be made with safety to the public, and where the amount of business to be handled is sufficient to justify the outlay.

"The commission shall have full authority to determine the terms and conditions upon which these connecting tracks, when constructed, shall be operated, and it may, either in the construction or the operation of such tracks, determine what sum shall be paid to or by either carrier. The provisions of this paragraph shall extend to cases where the dock is owned by other parties than the carrier involved.

"(b) To establish through routes and maximum joint rates between and over such rail and water lines, and to determine all the terms and conditions under which such lines shall be operated in the handling of the traffic embraced.

"(c) To establish maximum proportional rates by rail to and from the ports to which the traffic is brought, or from which it is taken by the water carrier, and to determine to what traffic and in connection with what vessels and upon what terms and conditions such rates shall apply. By proportional rates are meant those which differ from the corresponding local rates to and from the port and which apply only to traffic which has been brought to the port or is carried from the port by a common carrier by water.

"(d) If any rail carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce enters into arrangements with any water carrier operating from a port in the United States to a foreign country, through the Panama Canal or otherwise, for the handling of through business between interor points of the United States and such foreign country, the Interstate Commerce Commission may require such railway to enter into similar arrangements with any or all other lines of steamships operating from said port to the same foreign country."

The orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission relating to this section shall only be made upon formal complaint or in proceedings instituted by the commission of its own motion and after full hearing. The orders provided for in the two amendments to the act to regulate commerce enacted in this section shall be served in the same manner and enforced by the same penalties and proceedings as are the orders of the commission made under the provisions of section 15 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended June 18, 1910, and they may be conditioned for the payment of any sum or the giving of security for the payment of any sum or the discharge of any obligation which may be required by the terms of said order.

SEC. 12. That all laws and treaties relating to the extradition of persons accused of crime in force in the United States, to the extent that they may not be in conflict with or superseded by any special treaty entered into between the United States and the Republic of Panama with respect to the Canal Zone, and all laws relating to the rendition of fugitives from justice as between the several States and Territories of the United States, shall exend to and be considered in force in the Canal Zone, and for such purposes and such purposes only the Canal Zone shall be considered and treated as an organized Territory of the United States.

SEC. 13. That in time of war in which the United States shall be engaged, or when, in the opinion of the President, war is imminent, such officer of the Army as the President may designate shall, upon the order of the President, assume and have exclusive authority and jurisdiction over the operation of the Panama Canal and all of its adjuncts, appendants, and appurtenances, including the entire control and government of the Canal Zone, and during a continuance of such condition the governor of the Panama Canal shall, in all respects and particulars as to the operation of such Panama Canal, and all duties, matters, and transactions affecting the Canal Zone, be subject to the order and direction of such officer of the Army.

SEC. 14. That this act shall be known as, and referred to as, the Panama Canal act, and the right to alter, amend, or repeal any or all of its provisions or to extend, modify, or annul any rule or regulation made under its authority is expressly reserved.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on his point of order?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do. Mr. Speaker, the point of order as to the conferees having exceeded their authority is based upon the phraseology of section 5 of the bill as reported. There were two Senate amendments, Nos. 11 and 12, that have been translated into section 5 of the bill. The language has been changed, and some new ideas have been introduced, all of which I assume to be in contravention of the rules of the House relating to the authority of conference committees. For instance, the Senate amendment No. 11 reads as follows:

That all legal prohibitions upon the American registration of foreign-built ships, built to engage only in foreign trade, are hereby repealed: Provided, That the ships are exclusively of American ownership.

That has been changed so that it appears as an amendment to section 4132 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the construction of vessels in the United States. As transposed by the committee it also extends jurisdiction, in relation to the registration of vessels, to the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, none of which were referred to in the Senate amendment and none of which were discussed in the proceedings in the House.

The SPEAKER. Where in the bill is that found?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In lines 12 and 13, page 6, of the print of August 15. This is the last print of the bill, as finally corrected.

More important, however, than the insertion of these Territories, is that provision which, it is believed, threatens the shipbuilding industry of the United States, permitting the introduction, free of duty, of all materials entering into the construction of ships—a clear invasion of the right of the House to originate revenue measures.

I call the attention of the Chair to that section of the reconstructed bill, as found in the final print of August 15.

Mr. OLMSTED. If my friend will permit, if the Chair is supplied with a copy of the print of August 10, he will find the Senate amendments numbered in that bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has both prints.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The print of August 10 shows the Senate amendments, and will, perhaps, be convenient for the use of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to have the gentleman use the print of August 10, if he is going to talk about that, because the Chair wishes to follow him in his references.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it would be well for the Chair to have the print of August 10 and the print of August 15 both before him, because the print of August 15 is the finally corrected copy of the bill.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's first point?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The first point is with reference to the paragraph—that American registry is to be given to vessels wherever built, etc.

I refer to line 11 now, page 6—which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries, etc.

And I particularly call the attention of the Chair to—or with the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila.

Now, in no discussion in this House nor anywhere in a Senate amendment is reference made to the Philippines, Guam, or Tutuila. Numerous precedents may be cited to show that this is new matter, the insertion of which by the conference committee is not warranted.

More important is the new matter which is not found in a Senate amendment or a House amendment, nor in the discussion of either House, which proposes to originate a revenue measure in contravention of the rights of the House.

If the Speaker will be good enough to refer to the conference report he will find a little more than halfway down on page 2 this provision:

That all materials of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction or repair of vessels built in the United States and all such materials necessary for the building or repair of their machinery and all articles necessary for their outfit and equipment may be imported into the United States free of duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided further, That such vessels so admitted under the provisions of this section may contract with the Postmaster General under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce, so long as such vessels shall in all respects comply with the provisions and requirement of said act."

This is a clause which originated not with the Senate nor with the House, which had exclusive jurisdiction to originate such matters, but in the conference committee; and whether or not it is permissible now to say that it is feared that it will seriously affect the shipbuilding industry of the United States, it at least unquestionably opens the door to the admission into this country free of duty of every article that enters into the construction or equipment of ships. Iron, steel, cutlery, carpets——

The SPEAKER. That has nothing to do with it; the only question is whether the conferees have exceeded their authority.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of course, that is my contention. The paragraph I have just read is a matter which should have originated in the House, being a revenue measure. I contend that it did not originate either in the House or through a Senate amendment, but did originate in conference, and therefore is subject to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman about his point of order with reference to the Philippine Islands and Guam. Is that mentioned at all in the House bill originally?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No, sir; in no particular.

The SPEAKER. Was it mentioned in any Senate amendment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It was not; it is entirely new matter, originating in conference.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania through?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; but I was going to yield for the present to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman can not yield to anybody.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, I wish to hold the floor for a moment or two longer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the other gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is through. The Chair did not mean to cut him off.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not quite through.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed. The Chair wanted to get at the gentleman's point with reference to the Philippines, as to whether that part was mentioned in the original bill or in a Senate amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It was not.

The SPEAKER. Then how did it get into the bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The presumption is that it got in through the conference. That is the crucial point. I will be glad now to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] recognized.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, the authorities in support of the point which I understand my colleague to make are found referred to in section 539 of the Manual, page 279, from which I read as follows:

> The managers of a conference must confine themselves to the differences committed to them, and may not include subjects not within the disagreements, even though germane to a question in issue.

This is a House bill. It went over to the other body and was there made the subject of certain amendments, among others amendments numbered 11 and 12.

Amendment No. 11 reads as follows:

> That all legal prohibitions upon the American registration of foreign-built ships, built to engage only in foreign trade, are hereby repealed: Provided, That the ships are exclusively of American ownership.

Amendment No. 12 reads as follows:

> Provided further, That foreign-built ships admitted pursuant to this section shall not be entitled to mail contracts under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce," unless such ships shall be constructed with particular reference to prompt and economical conversion into auxiliary naval cruisers, according to plans and specifications to be agreed upon by and between the owners and the Secretary of the Navy, and shall be of sufficient strength and stability to carry and sustain the working and operation of at least four effective rifled cannon of a caliber of not less than 6 inches, and shall be of the highest rating known to maritime commerce; and all such ships before being accepted shall be subjected to the same inspection as is provided in the act of March 3, 1891.

Those are amendments 11 and 12. They were disagreed to by the House and referred to the conferees.

Now, this is the disposition made of these amendments by the conferees as shown in the conference report. They recommend—

> That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 11 and 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the two said Senate amendments and insert in lieu thereof the following:
>
> "That section 4132 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:
> "'SEC. 4132. Vessels built within the United States and belonging wholly to citizens thereof; and vessels which may be captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize, or which may be adjudged to be forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States; and seagoing vessels, whether steam or sail, which have been certified by the Steamboat-Inspection Service as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo, not more than 5 years old at the time they apply for registry, wherever built, which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, being wholly owned by citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, and no others, may be registered as directed in this title. Foreign-built vessels registered pursuant to this act shall not engage in the coastwise trade: Provided, That a foreign-built yacht, pleasure boat, or vessel not used or intended to be used for trade admitted to American registry pursuant to this section shall not be exempt from the collection of ad valorem duty provided in section 37 of the act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes." That all materials of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction or repair of vessels built in the United States and all such materials necessary for the building or repair of their machinery and all articles necessary for their outfit and equipment may be imported into the United States free of duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided further, That such vessels so admitted under the provisions of this section may contract with the Postmaster General under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce," so long as such vessels shall in all respects comply with the provisions and requirement of said act.'"
> And the Senate agree to the same.

Now, in the first place, section 4132 of the Revised Statutes was not involved in the original bill nor referred to in the Senate amendments, but appears for the first time in the conference report. This amendment refers to many subjects not appearing in the bill itself nor in the Senate amendments and is not germane, either to the original bill or to the Senate amendments.

Among other things, in its first proviso it provides practically a free-trade bill for all material that enters into the construction or repair or outfit or equipment of ships, a subject that is not referred to in the House bill or the Senate amendments, but entirely new subject matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman, if it will not interfere with the thread of his argument——

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly not.

The SPEAKER. The language which is set out in the report on page 2, "that all materials of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction or repair of vessels built in the United States," and so forth—could that be held in order on amendment No. 11, the language of which is "that all legal prohibitions upon the American registration of foreign-built ships, built to engage only in foreign trade, are hereby repealed: Provided, That the ships are exclusively of American ownership"?

Mr. OLMSTED. I think not, Mr. Speaker. That relates entirely to the registration of ships, and not to their construction or repair. Furthermore Senate amendment No. 11 relates exclusively to the registration of and mail contracts with "foreign-built ships," but the amendment proposed in the conference report relates to "vessels built within the United States and belonging wholly to citizens thereof."

The SPEAKER. There is no difference between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the Chair about what the rule is, the Chair takes it.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think there can not be.

The SPEAKER. And that is, that the subject matter treated of, and this new language, at least of the conferees, shall be treated of either in the House bill or in the Senate amendment, or in an amendment to a Senate amendment, if there was such a thing, which there was not in this case. That is the limitation, is it not?

Mr. OLMSTED. Just what does the Chair mean by limitation?

The SPEAKER. The limitation is that any matter that is put into a conference report must have been in the original bill; that is, the subject must have been there.

Mr. OLMSTED. Or in a Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Or in a Senate amendment.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Or, if it comes back here and the House amends the Senate amendment and sends it back to the Senate, that would cover the case.

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes; that would be in the bill as it went to the conferees.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania through?

Mr. OLMSTED. Another ruling cited in the manual is that "the conferees may perfect amendments committed to them if they do not in so doing go beyond the differences." That is from Hinds' Precedents, Volume V, sections 6409 and 6413. But here the conferees have gone beyond the differences. These things are not in difference between the two Houses. They were never considered in either House and were not among the differences referred to the conference committee. They are entirely new subject matters. There are half a dozen of them. The matter is so plain to me that I do not care to discuss it further unless the Chair so desires.

The other point that my colleague makes is that this revenue provision of this amendment could not have originated in the Senate itself, much less could it have originated in the conference, but such matters must originate in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Georgia if he has anything to say.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON] will be heard on the point of order.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, there is not any dispute about what the rule is in regard to the extent of the power of the conferees, I take it, and both of the gentlemen from Pennsylvania, Mr. MOORE and Mr. OLMSTED, have accurately stated it. But the Panama Canal legislation, as shown by the original bill as reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce—the bill as it passed the Senate on August 10, and the final print of August 15, showing the bill as agreed on in conference—will demonstrate a situation as follows: When the bill came from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the floor of the House the section relating to tolls contained no provision whatever relating to the admission of any classes of ships into any trade of the United States, either coastwise or foreign. It left the existing navigation laws of the country as they were at the time that bill was reported to the House. There was no attempt to deal with the subject. When the bill passed the House and went to the Senate, after having been reported to the floor of the Senate there was still no provision relating to free ships in any form; but when the bill came to be debated and amended in the Senate there was adopted on the floor of the Senate, first, what came to be known as the Williams amendment, to remove all legal restrictions upon the American registration of foreign-built vessels; and then what came to be known as the Gallinger amendment, to restrict registration of foreign-built ships to exclusively American ownership and to place certain restrictions on mail contracts with such ships. Those two amendments, therefore, collectively attempted, as shown in the Senate bill of August 10, to provide for the removal of American registry and restrictions on ships built in foreign countries and to change the existing law relating to their operation in American foreign mail service. This matter is all dealt with under the title in the Revised Statutes, "Commerce and navigation," and the subtitle is "Registration of vessels."

When the bill came back to the floor of the House from the Senate it contained those provisions which I have just referred to. The chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce called up the bill and moved to disagree to all of the Senate amendments. There was a disagreement voted by the House, and the bill went to conference. It therefore went into conference with the whole subject of the admission into the foreign trade of the United States by American registry of ships built in foreign countries and the subject of restrictions upon vessels to be admitted to such trade a matter of disagreement between the House and the Senate. The only thing that was done by the conferees in regard to this particular matter was to rewrite and to recast the entire subject of the admission to American registry of ships in the foreign trade of the United States; and as section 4132 of the Revised Statutes, under the title "Commerce and navigation," dealt with the subject, the section in the bill was made an amendment to that section of existing law. As the Senate bill, to which the House disagreed, dealt with the entire subject of enlarging the scope of registry of vessels in the foreign trade, an amendment of section 4132 of the Revised Statutes along that line is certainly so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from Maryland what part of this bill treats with that subject before the Senate got hold of it?

Mr. COVINGTON. It is section 5 of the bill.

The SPEAKER. From which print is the gentleman reading?

Mr. COVINGTON. I read from the print of August 15, which best illustrates the status of the bill before the House at this time.

The SPEAKER. That is the print after the conferees got through with it.

Mr. COVINGTON. This is the print after the conferees finished with it. There is a print of August 10, which shows the bill after it passed the Senate. Has the Speaker a copy of that?

The SPEAKER. Yes. What part of this print of August 15 treats of the subject?

Mr. COVINGTON. After the tolls clause is finished on page 7, the Speaker will notice that in section 5 there begins amendment No. 11, which was referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The SPEAKER. That amendment reads:

That all legal prohibitions upon the American registration of foreign-built ships, built to engage only in foreign trade, are hereby repealed: Provided, That the ships are exclusively of American ownership.

What is the subject of that amendment?

Mr. COVINGTON. Now, that is what is known as the Williams amendment and a part of the Gallinger amendment in the Senate, and manifestly is intended to remove the present restrictions that exist by reason of section 4132 of the statutes. If the Speaker will take the print of August 15 he will discover——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did not that refer to registration only?

Mr. COVINGTON. That part of the section refers to registration only.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask another question and that is, how you got Guam, and the Philippines, and the island of Tutuila in there? How did you get the Philippines and Guam and the other island in it?

Mr. COVINGTON. I do not understand any particular necessity of getting them in unless to let vessels in the foreign trade go to them.

The SPEAKER. The question the Chair wants to find out is how they got it in.

Mr. COVINGTON. I will say to the Speaker very candidly upon that subject I am not familiar enough with the navigation laws to know the particular reason why those islands were included unless vessels trading through the Panama Canal in the foreign trade are to have the right to go to them. I believe they are subject to our coastwise laws.

The SPEAKER. The question is by what authority was it done.

Mr. COVINGTON. I am going to ask Judge ALEXANDER, of Missouri, and yield to him to make a statement with regard to that particular part of the amendment, and I am frank to state, so far as those islands are concerned, I do not know any reason except what I have stated.

The SPEAKER. The three things the Chair wants to know are on what pretext did they put the Philippines, Guam, and Tutuila Islands in? That is one. The second one is, on what part of the House bill or Senate amendments do the conferees undertake to hinge the admission of free materials out of which to build ships?

Mr. COVINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] to answer the question.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, the Philippine Islands, Tutuila, and Guam may be included in our coastwise trade, and without the amendment they might not be included within the provision which admits foreign-built ships to American registry for the foreign trade. Now, it will not be seriously contended that the conferees, in placing that limitation or enlarging or making certain the purpose for which foreign ships admitted to American registry may be used——

The SPEAKER. But what is the necessity for naming the Philippines, Guam, and so forth, any more than naming the Sandwich Islands?

Mr. ALEXANDER. For the reason if they had not been expressly included these foreign-built ships admitted to American registry might not have been permitted to trade with those islands. Now, the Senate amendment is general in its terms. It says:

That all legal prohibitions upon the American registration of foreign-built ships, built to engage only in foreign trade, are hereby repealed.

Now, the House disagreed to the amendment, with the limitation that foreign-built ships admitted to American registry should only be used in the foreign trade. It was entirely competent and within their province for the conferees to say that they might also be admitted to the coastwise trade or some part of the coastwise trade. They might have said that they could be admitted to trade with the Hawaiian Islands or to Porto Rico or these other islands, but they limited it to the foreign trade and to the Philippines and to the islands of Tutuila and Guam, and made it clear that trade to the Philippines and the islands of Tutuila and Guam should be regarded as foreign trade.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Not at present.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it be in order to ask the Speaker to ask the gentleman from Missouri who put those words in the bill?

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair does not think it would. The gentleman has the right to ask the gentleman but he has not the right to ask the Speaker.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I asked if it would be in order to ask the Speaker to ask that simple question.

The SPEAKER. No; if the gentleman desires information he must ask the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Who put the words "Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila" into the bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Why, the conferees.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is what I thought.

Mr. ALEXANDER. And they had the right to do it, under the rules. The House might have disagreed to the Senate amendment because the Senate limited foreign-built ships to the foreign trade.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think they have no right under the precedents of the House.

Mr. ALEXANDER. No precedent of the House has been cited that says they can not do it. The House may have disagreed to the Senate amendment No. 11 for that very reason, because foreign-built ships were being limited to the foreign trade, and the conferees having jurisdiction of the subject matter under the disagreement had the right in conference to provide not only that foreign-built ships might be admitted to American registry, but that they should be admitted to the coastwise trade. Can there be any doubt of the power of the conferees to agree to strike but so much of the Senate amendment No. 11 as limited foreign-built ships registering under the American flag, to the foreign trade, and would not the effect of that amendment have been to admit them to the coastwise trade; and if that is true, may they not make it clear by amendment that the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila shall not be regarded as in our coastwise trade, but included in the term "foreign trade"?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not that have been more properly done either by a Senate amendment or by the House rather than by the conferees?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It could be done either way; I am talking about what the conferees had a right to do, and there can be no question about that point.

The SPEAKER. The rule is that in a conference report its subject matter must have been treated of in the House bill or Senate amendments, or, if it had come back to the House, the House had added an amendment to the Senate amendment, and if it does not agree in any of these it goes out.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is it true the conferees must accept an amendment proposed by the other House without any modification?

The SPEAKER. Why, no; it is not; but the subject matter must have been treated of either in the House bill or the Senate amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. What is the subject matter?

The SPEAKER. Why, the subject matter is amendment 11:

That all legal prohibitions upon American registration of foreign-built ships, built to engage only in foreign trade, are hereby repealed: Provided, That the ships are exclusively of American ownership.

Now what is the subject matter treated of in that amendment?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Simply this: The subject matter is first, whether or not foreign-built ships shall be admitted to American registry. That is the first question. The Senate by its amendment No. 11 provides that they may be admitted to American registry; and second, to what trade shall they be limited? The Senate amendment limits their use to the foreign trade. Now the House conferees refused to concur in that amendment proposed by the Senate, but say their use shall be enlarged; and to put it beyond question that they may be used in this instance in the trade with the Philippine Islands, Tutuila, and the Island of Guam. They might have said that the ships shall be admitted to the coastwise trade, else we will not agree to admit foreign-built ships to American registry. The conferees are not bound to accept the Senate amendment as proposed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows that they are not bound to accept the Senate amendment as proposed, but they are bound to stick to the subject matter.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The subject matter is: How shall these foreign-built ships be admitted to American registry? And if admitted to American registry, shall they be admitted to the foreign or coastwise trade, or both.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman another question. Evidently the subject matter of amendment numbered 11 is the registration of foreign-built ships, and nothing else. Now, when you come to amendment 12—because this new language used here in the report that the two gentlemen from Pennsylvania, Mr. OLMSTED and Mr. MOORE, are objecting to hinges on amendment No. 11 and amendment No. 12—we find that amendment No. 12 is:

Provided further, That foreign-built ships admitted pursuant to this section shall not be entitled to mail contracts under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce," unless such ships shall be constructed with particular reference to prompt and economical conversion into auxiliary naval cruisers, according to plans and specifications to be agreed upon by and between the owners and the Secretary of the Navy—

And so forth. Now, the Chair will ask the gentleman if that amendment is not confined strictly to ship mail contracts?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No. The effect of the amendment agreed to by the conferees to the Senate amendment No. 12 is simply this: That foreign-built ships should not be permitted to receive mail contracts or that the Postmaster General should not be authorized to award to them mail contracts unless the ships are constructed, in all respects, according to the provisions of the ocean mail act of March 3, 1891, and in every respect comply with its provisions.

The Senate amendment provided that foreign-built ships should not be entitled to receive mail contracts under the ocean mail act of March 3, 1891, unless they are built in conformity with certain provisions of the act; the conferees agreed to the Senate amendment with the further amendment that foreign-built ships should not be entitled to mail contracts unless they comply with all the provisions of the act.

Can there be any doubt of their jurisdiction to do this?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, evidently it is going to take some time to settle this proposition. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it until I can answer the Speaker's question.

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I insist upon it now. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that there is no quorum present, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, August 17, 1912, at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

SENATE.

SATURDAY, August 17, 1912.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. GALLINGER took the chair as President pro tempore under the previous order of the Senate.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

UTILIZATION OF ATMOSPHERIC NITROGEN (H. DOC. NO. 912).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report by Commercial Agent Thomas H. Norton, containing the results of his investigations of the utilization of atmospheric nitrogen, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah makes the point that there is no quorum present, and the roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Crawford	Jones	Overman
Bacon	Culberson	Kenyon	Page
Borah	Cullom	Kern	Perkins
Bourne	Cummins	La Follette	Pomerene
Bradley	Curtis	Lodge	Smith, Ga.

Bristow	du Pont	Martin, Va.	Smoot
Bryan	Fall	Martine, N. J.	Sutherland
Burnham	Fletcher	Massey	Swanson
Chamberlain	Gallinger	Myers	Thornton
Chilton	Heyburn	Nelson	Tillman
Clapp	Johnson, Me.	Newlands	Townsend
Crane	Johnston, Ala.	Oliver	Works

Mr. JONES. My colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is absent on important business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

H. R. 606. An act for the relief of John Treffeisen;

H. R. 17483. An act amending section 1998 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to authorize the President, in certain cases, to mitigate or remit the loss of rights of citizenship imposed by law upon deserters from the military or naval service;

H. R. 19190. An act for the relief of John P. Risley;

H. R. 24646. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25531) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HAY, Mr. SLAYDEN, and Mr. KAHN, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the North Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington, July 7, 1911, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SULZER, Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, and Mr. MCKINLEY, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had appointed Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL as a conferee on the bills (S. 6384 and S. 6851) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors in the place of Mr. RICHARDSON.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2904) to confer upon the commissioners of the District of Columbia authority to regulate the operation and equipment of the vehicles of the Metropolitan Coach Co., and to provide for transfers between said company and the Capital Traction Co. and the Washington Railway & Electric Co.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

H. J. Res. 337. Joint resolution requesting the President to cause an investigation of the Patent Office and make report with recommendations to Congress.

INTERSTATE LIQUOR LAW.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine presented resolutions adopted by the Yearly Meeting of Friends for New England, in convention at Vassalboro, Me., favoring the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were ordered to lie on the table.

INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION (S. DOC. NO. 936).

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that there be published as a Senate document an article upon the subject of industrial education by Charles M. Winslow. Mr. Winslow was, in 1906, one of a commission appointed by Gov. Guild, of Massachusetts, to investigate the subject of industrial education. In furtherance of this investigation Mr. Winslow was sent abroad to study and report on the subject of vocational education in England, Ireland, Scotland, Germany, France, Belgium, Holland, and Switzerland. He was also delegated as a commissioner to visit the vocational schools throughout this country.

It is a very instructive paper and I should like to have it printed as a Senate document. It is but fair to say that Mr. Winslow is acting under the auspices of the American Federation of Labor; that that federation have taken great interest in the matter of industrial education. They are doing all they can to forward it in the United States, and they are engaged in a work which I very much approve.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if he has the article in his possession now?

Mr. PAGE. I have.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it very long?

Mr. PAGE. It is about the length of my speech on vocational education.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not object to the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent for the printing of the paper as a Senate document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 6877) to reinstate Robert N. Campbell as a first lieutenant in the Coast Artillery Corps, United States Army, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1043) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to, and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

S. 552. A bill for the relief of George Wilson, alias Jorgen Well (Rept. No. 1044); and

S. 5760. A bill to correct the military record of Wilson Rice (Rept. No. 1045).

Mr. CRAWFORD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15181) for the relief of Harry S. Wade, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1046) thereon.

Mr. BOURNE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 4495) for the relief of George W. Hoyt, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1047) thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 25713) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1048) thereon.

PUBLICITY OF CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. FLETCHER. On behalf of the Committee on Privileges and Elections I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 26278) amending paragraph 10 of section 8 of an act entitled "An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected," approved June 25, 1910, as amended by section 2 of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected' and extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States and limiting the amount of campaign expenses," approved August 19, 1911. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. It is very brief.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that paragraph 10 of section 8 of an act entitled "An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected," approved June 25, 1910, as amended by section 2 of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected' and extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States and limiting the amount of campaign expenses," approved August 19, 1911, be amended so as to read as follows:

Every statement herein required shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the candidate, taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths; and the depositing of any such statement in a regular post office, directed to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, or to the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, duly stamped and registered, within the time required herein, shall be deemed a sufficient filing of any such statement under any of the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 7427, for the relief of Edgar Allan, jr.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator please withhold his request until I can offer a resolution?

Mr. SWANSON. It will take only a few moments to dispose of the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will not object to the request of the Senator from Virginia if it does not interfere with the special order, and I can yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Virginia does not interfere with the special order in any way.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read first.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I object to its present consideration. I wish to offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order has not yet been reached. If there are no further reports of committees, the introduction of bills is in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 7479) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead"; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 7480) for the relief of the legal representatives of Thomas B. McClintic; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 7481) for the relief of Richard Caswell Hiller, known as Richard Caswell (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Maine (for Mr. GARDNER):

A bill (S. 7482) granting an increase of pension to John A. Sears; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 7483) for the relief of the firm of Herreid Bros.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GORE:

A bill (S. 7484) conferring upon the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. the privileges, rights, and conditions heretofore granted the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Co. to construct a railroad across certain lands in Comanche County, Okla. (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $500 to pay Edward T. Clark for extra services in the preparation of statistics on immigration and the sugar schedule, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 25970), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TOWNSEND submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salaries of the superintendent, the assistant superintendent, and messenger, Senate Press Gallery, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill (H. R. 26321), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

DONATION OF CANNON.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 24458) authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to deliver to certain cities and towns condemned bronze or brass cannon, with their carriages and outfit of cannon balls, etc., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—STOCKTON DIVERTING CANAL.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bills S. 6108, S. 6988, and S. 7405, for the relief of persons suffering damages by reason of the construction of the Stockton diverting canal, now pending before the Committee on Claims, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made on either of said bills.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—JOHN B. CRAIG.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill S. 6726, Sixty-second Congress, second session, granting an increase of pension to John B. Craig, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LIEUT. ROY C. SMITH.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 382), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs or a subcommittee thereof, are hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to investigate the charges preferred against Lieut. Roy C. Smith, formerly with the Asiatic Squadron, upon which his resignation was demanded after threatening trial by court-martial. The said committee or subcommittee are, for this purpose, authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress at such times and places as they may deem desirable or practicable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, to conduct hearings, and have reports of same printed for use, and to employ such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants as shall be necessary, and any expenses in connection with such inquiry shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee.

DESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that JACOB H. GALLINGER, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, be, and hereby is, elected President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President from Saturday, August 17, 1912, to and including the closing day of the second session of the Sixty-second Congress; and that AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, be, and hereby is, elected President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President from and after the closing day of the second session of the Sixty-second Congress to the 16th day of December, 1912.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 383), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected JACOB H. GALLINGER, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President from August 17, 1912, to and including the closing day of the second session of the Sixty-second Congress; and that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President from and after the closing day of the second session of the Sixty-second Congress to the 16th day of December, 1912.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 384), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the Senate has elected JACOB H. GALLINGER, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President from August 17, 1912, to and including the closing day of the second session of the Sixty-second Congress; and that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President from and after the closing day of the second session of the Sixty-second Congress to the 16th day of December, 1912.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

On August 16, 1912:

S. 4520. An act for the relief of Catherine Grimm; and

S. 6354. An act to perpetuate and preserve Fort McHenry and the grounds connected therewith as a Government reservation under the control of the Secretary of War.

On August 17, 1912:

S. J. Res. 126. Joint resolution authorizing Federal bureaus doing hygienic and demographic work to participate in the exhibition to be held in connection with the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography; and

S. 998. An act for the relief of Henry G. Roetzel and Paul Chipman.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25531) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. DU PONT. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. DU PONT, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama conferees on the part of the Senate.

FUR-SEAL CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the North Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington July 7, 1911, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. LODGE, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, and Mr. SHIVELY conferees on the part of the Senate.

REDUCTION OF EXCESSIVE TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 381), as follows:

Whereas certain of the duties heretofore levied by law on articles imported from foreign countries into the United States are so high as to encourage and facilitate the imposition of excessive prices for similar articles of domestic production; and

Whereas such excessive duties fail to produce sufficient revenue; and

Whereas both the Republican and Democratic Parties have by declarations in their respective platforms committed themselves to a revision of tariff duties, the former to a revision based on the ascertainment of the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, with a fair profit to the manufacturer, and the latter to a revision and gradual reduction of the tariff to a revenue basis; and

Whereas both parties have declared that such revision should be accomplished with a due regard to the interests of domestic workers and without destructive readjustments of domestic industries; and

Whereas neither party is in complete control of legislation and either party is able to prevent the other from carrying out completely its principles and policies, and compromise is therefore desirable and necessary in order to prevent a deadlock in legislation prejudicial to the interests of the United States; and

Whereas the President has vetoed certain bills providing for reduction in the duties on wools and cotton, on the ground that the reductions therein provided for are excessive or have been made without sufficient investigation of the facts, but has indicated his willingness to approve material reductions in the duties proposed in certain bills pending in Congress: Now therefore

Resolved, That the Senate appoint a committee of three to act in cooperation with a similar committee to be appointed by the House of Representatives, with a view to conferring with the President and harmonizing the differences now existing between Congress and the President regarding the reduction of excessive duties.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution go over.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask to have the resolution lie on the table, if the Senator will permit, and I wish to make a few remarks upon it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope the Senator from Idaho will not ask that the resolution go over. It relates to a very important subject, and I should like to hear it discussed by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. HEYBURN. To-day?

Mr. McCUMBER. To-day; right now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho asks that the resolution go over.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that it lie on the table. Before that action is taken, however, I wish to make a few remarks, with the consent of the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I withdraw my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the request of the Senator from Nevada the resolution will lie on the table.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, as stated in the resolution, we find ourselves in this anomalous situation: Both the political parties of the United States have declared for a revision and reduction of excessive duties. The House of Representatives, the Senate, and the President all favor such reduction in certain schedules, but they differ as to the principle which should control and the amount of the reduction. We have been engaged in legislation upon this subject for four years without reaching any substantial result because of differences in view as to the principle upon which the reduction should be made and the amount of the reduction. Those differences have been harmonized, so far as the Senate and the other House have been concerned, by the passage of certain bills, that harmony having been produced through conference, committees being appointed for that purpose by the Senate and the other House. The President has vetoed certain bills, but declares his willingness to join Congress in making certain material reductions in the wool and cotton schedules, which he says are justified by the investigation of the Tariff Board and which range from 20 to 50 per cent.

We are told that in this condition of things there is to be no businesslike method of adjustment; that Congress is not to approach the President; that Congress is not to confer with him; that the only method of communication which the President of the United States has with Congress is through a message, and that other communication would be entirely without the powers either of the executive or of the legislative department.

Mr. President, if that be true, then the methods which we have pursued regarding bringing the two Houses into harmony of action have been entirely unconstitutional. The Constitution nowhere points out any method of bringing the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States into agreement where disagreement regarding a measure exists, and yet ever since the organization of our Government it has been the custom of both the House and the Senate to appoint committees of conference with a view to bringing both bodies into harmony of action. If there is no constitutional authority for a conference between the two Houses and the President, there is no constitutional authority for a conference between the two Houses; and if it be true in this exigency, when the House and the Senate and the President desire to make needed reductions and differ only as to the method and the degree, that there can be no method by which they can be brought into harmony, then we must plead guilty to the indictment presented by the new third party, that representative government as at present organized is a failure.

Mr. President, the American people are a practical people. They have no regard for the finesse and the strategy that have been displayed in legislation upon this subject—the forces of reform marching up the hill and then down the hill and deploying and attacking at the sides and at the rear without result. The American people know that they want a reduction; they know that they have declared for a reduction; they know that both Houses of Congress and the President of the United States declare that they are in sympathy with that demand, and that their purpose is to respond to it; and if we adjourn, when all these parties to legislation declare that something ought to be done, without doing anything, they will hold either representative government responsible or the representatives responsible.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NEWLANDS. In one moment. Now, the method which I have suggested here may not be the best method, but surely the genius of the Congress can conceive of some method of talking with the President, if he wishes to talk, or if in this message he has made an offer of legislation to carry out specific reductions; and I ask the serious consideration of Congress regarding the measure with a view either of providing this method or some other method that will enable the President and Congress to talk together and harmonize differences for the best interests of the people of the United States.

I now yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. When I rose I thought the Senator was about to conclude. I did not want him to——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not want him to conclude without taking into account a suggestion I am about to make.

I hope that before the Senator from Nevada takes his seat he will ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the consideration of this resolution at some proper time, so that we can vote upon it; and if he can not get unanimous consent, I hope he will make a motion to have it made a special order. It is of little use to discuss it unless we have an opportunity to vote upon it, and I hope, therefore, that he will take the measures that are necessary to bring the resolution to a vote at some time that will not interfere with the special order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask the Senator from Iowa what time he would suggest?

Mr. CUMMINS. I would suggest some time Monday.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be considered on Monday next at 11 o'clock.

Mr. CLAPP. I would remind the Senator from Nevada that there are already two unanimous-consent agreements for Monday—one for the taking up of the bill relating to bills of lading; the other, when that is concluded, to take up the bill to cooperate with the States to encourage instruction in agriculture. It seems, with some unfinished business on the calendar, that Monday will be pretty thoroughly preempted.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What would the Senator think of 2 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not remember those agreements for Monday, but this is a good time to fix some hour and some day when we can reach a vote on this resolution.

Mr. ROOT. I suggest also that Monday would be rather an unfavorable day for the consideration of this resolution, because there will be many Senators absent on that day. There will not be a very full attendance, because many Senators, anticipating the close of the session with the close of this week, have left the city; and while they will return, they will be obliged to be away from the city for two or three days. I think the Senator had better put it a little later.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think every Senator understands beyond a question the purpose of the resolution, and probably it would not interfere much if we could agree to take a vote. It will take very little time to vote upon it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask the Senator from Minnesota what hour or day he would suggest.

Mr. LODGE. It ought to be made subject to conference reports and appropriation bills.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes. The Senator from Nevada suggested this afternoon. I have had pending here for a day or two the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill, which ought to be acted upon one way or the other, and I would not feel like consenting to any agreement for this afternoon.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Is that report likely to take much time?

Mr. CLAPP. It is likely to lead to debate, and I should like to take it up as soon as I can, with reference to the resolution of the Senator from Texas. It seems to me Tuesday would be a better day.

Mr. CUMMINS. How about Tuesday?

Mr. CLAPP. There is nothing now on the calendar for Tuesday.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suggest that we vote on the resolution at 5 o'clock on Tuesday.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent that we take a vote on this resolution at 5 o'clock on Tuesday.

Mr. CLAPP. Subject to pendency of conference reports.

Mr. LODGE. And appropriation bills.

Mr. CLAPP. And appropriation bills.

Mr. PAGE. As the Senator from Minnesota has remarked, we have two unanimous-consent agreements on Monday. The first is to take up the bill, Calendar No. 651, in relation to bills of lading. That will be followed by Senate bill No. 3. It seems to me it is very doubtful about our being able to conclude the consideration of those bills next Monday, and I shall ask at the close of the day Monday, if Senate bill No. 3 has not received full consideration, that it be taken up for consideration and made the unfinished business for Tuesday. I do not think I ought to be asked to give unanimous consent for the consideration of any bill that will displace Senate bill No. 3. If the Senator will except that bill as well as conference reports and appropriation bills, I would have no objection.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The unanimous consent I am now asking for is simply for a vote at a particular hour. We are all aware what this resolution means. In the meantime there will be ample opportunity for Senators to discuss it if they choose. I ask unanimous consent that a vote be had before the close of the calendar day of Tuesday.

Mr. SMOOT. If Congress is going to adjourn within any reasonable time, next week will be crowded with conference reports and appropriation bills, and that being the case, I shall have to object to the request for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I move that a vote be taken on this resolution before adjournment on the calendar day of Tuesday.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why not ask unanimous consent to vote upon it to-day, after the special order has been disposed of? Maybe that will not encounter any objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to the resolution, no further action can be taken until Monday. Objection has been made to its consideration, and it goes over under the rule.

Mr. LODGE. Before it goes over——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has gone over.

Mr. LODGE. Then I suppose I am unable to make the suggestion I have in mind. I thought the Senator from Nevada had the floor——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I still have the floor, as I understand.

Mr. LODGE. And that he was at liberty to go on and finish his remarks.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will yield to the Senator from Massachusetts, with the permission of the Chair.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wish to call attention to the fact that the last clause, which provides for the appointment of a committee of each House to settle this question with the President, is, in my opinion, an unconstitutional proposition, and I ask that a message of President Madison of July 6, 1813, may be read, so that it may go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the message will be read.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask how long it is.

Mr. LODGE. It is about a page. It is a very short message.

Mr. CUMMINS. The resolution is not under consideration, and when it is under consideration and debate is on it will be in order to introduce the views which our statesmen may have held upon the subject.

Mr. LODGE. Give me the message, and I will read it in my own time.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not intend by my objection to deny the unanimous consent asked for by the Senator from Nevada to close his remarks this morning. I supposed that, notwithstanding the objection, the Senator could proceed with his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was of the opinion that the Senator from Nevada had concluded his remarks. There was a hiatus, and the Senator from Utah made an objection. But of course the Chair has no disposition to take the Senator from Nevada off the floor if he desires to retain it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator yielded to me.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not make any suggestion in the nature of an objection. I have no objection whatever to the Secretary reading the article instead of the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. LODGE. I will read it. It is dated July 6, 1813, and is as follows:

I have received from the committee appointed by the resolution of the Senate of the 14th day of June a copy of that resolution, which authorizes the committee to confer with the President on the subject of the nomination made by him of a minister plenipotentiary to Sweden.

Conceiving it to be my duty to decline the proposed conference with the committee, and it being uncertain when it may be convenient to explain to the committee, and through them to the Senate, the grounds of my so doing, I think it proper to address the explanation directly to the Senate. Without entering into a general review of the relations in which the Constitution has placed the several departments of the Government to each other, it will suffice to remark that the Executive and Senate, in the cases of appointments to office and of treaties, are to be considered as independent of and coordinate with each other. If they agree, the appointments or treaties are made; if the Senate disagree, they fail. If the Senate wish information previous to their final decision, the practice, keeping in view the constitutional relations of the Senate and the Executive, has been either to request the Executive to furnish it or to refer the subject to a committee of their body to communicate, either formally or informally, with the head of the proper department. The appointment of a committee of the Senate to confer immediately with the Executive himself appears to lose sight of the coordinate relation between the Executive and the Senate which the Constitution has established and which ought therefore to be maintained.

The relation between the Senate and House of Representatives, in whom legislative power is concurrently vested, is sufficiently analogous to illustrate that between the Executive and Senate in making appointments and treaties. The two Houses are in like manner independent of and coordinate with each other, and the invariable practice of each in appointing committees of conference and consultation is to commission them to confer not with the coordinate body itself, but with a committee of that body; and although both branches of the Legislature may be too numerous to hold conveniently a conference with committees, were they to be appointed by either to confer with the entire body of the other, it may be fairly presumed that if the whole number of either branch were not too large for the purpose, the objection to such a conference, being against the principle as derogating from the coordinate relations of the two Houses, would retain all its force.

I add only that I am entirely persuaded of the purity of the intentions of the Senate in the course they have pursued on this occasion and with which my view of the subject makes it my duty not to accord, and that they will be cheerfully furnished with all the suitable information in possession of the Executive in any mode deemed consistent with the principles of the Constitution and the settled practice under it.

Mr. Madison, as all the world knows, was one of the principal framers of the Constitution, one of the authors of the Federalist, was a Member of Congress when the Constitution was set in motion; and if there was any man then living who was competent to speak on the intent of the framers, it was he. He takes the clear ground that the President can deal only with the Senate and the House; that it is impossible for him to consult about legislation, treaties, or appointments with a committee of either House; and I think that constitutional objection would be brought forward, and is as sound to-day as when he established the practice which I think has never been deviated from.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether it was not the custom of President Washington to come to the Senate and confer personally with the Senate regarding treaties and appointments?

Mr. LODGE. He came once, I think, on an Indian treaty.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Only once?

Mr. LODGE. I think there is no record of his having come more than once. He sat here in the Senate and heard the Indian treaty debated, and it is chronicled in the diary of John Quincy Adams, on the authority of Mr. Crawford, then Secretary of the Treasury, that he made some very emphatic remarks about being present with the Senate when they debated the treaty which he had submitted to them. He did not, I think, enjoy his experience. I think that may be safely said. The note of it in the diary of John Quincy Adams is a very interesting one, because there is there related the story as I have no doubt it occurred, and Mr. Adams intimates that President Monroe objected to attributing such language to the Father of his Country.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield.

Mr. ROOT. I do not want to interrupt the Senator further than to suggest that a number of years ago—twenty-odd, I think—there was a very careful and thorough consideration by a committee of the Senate of the subject of communication and better mutual understanding and cooperation between the legislative branch and the Executive in the framing of legislation.

I remember Mr. Pendleton was a member of that committee. A report was made; and while it is a long time since I have seen it, it was a very careful and well-considered report.

If I remember correctly, the committee was inclined toward some provision under which the heads of the executive departments should have seats in the two branches of Congress, without any right to vote, of course, but with a right to speak under certain limitations and regulations, and with an obligation to answer questions, providing a system of questions and certain question days; so that, on the one hand, the needs and exigencies of the executive department in carrying out the policy prescribed by Congress might be stated to the Senate and the House, and, on the other hand, the Members of the Senate and the House might in a simple and direct way get information by putting questions to the heads of departments.

That report, of course, has long since passed out of consideration; but I think that this subject is one which it is well worth while for us to take up and consider, and we might well go back and get that report out and brush the dust off of it, and make it the basis of consideration, for there certainly is a great and frequent embarrassment arising out of the difficulty of getting and of giving information which would be useful and often is necessary to legislation.

In the nature of things it is hardly practicable for the President to come and sit here. There is no provision under which heads of departments can come. If they do make their appearance they are liable to have somebody say they are lobbying. The result is difficulty in getting it. You can not get it by a formal resolution in a satisfactory form. You pass a resolution and get an answer, and that suggests more questions inevitably. There ought to be some way in which there shall be a simple and easy and practical and sensible way to come and to get information.

Mr. President, may I say one thing more? We are now at this moment facing the weakest situation in our system of government, a situation in which the legislation necessary to provide for the support of the Government and necessary to give effect to the legislative policy already declared in the past, and imposed upon the Executive, is framed by the opposition. Now, it is not a political question at all. It makes no difference whether a Republican President and a Democratic House or a Democratic President and a Republican House, it is a weak point in our system. Legislation ought to be framed, if possible, by minds that are solicitous for the success of the administration, giving effect to it. No Government would expect to permanently succeed if it provided that the Government should be carried on by one party and the legislation be passed by another party.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. ROOT. If the Senator will excuse me one moment, we can get on with it because it is temporary; but it is an unfortunate situation. We can reduce it by some system under which there shall be freer, more frequent, more constant personal contact and communication between those who are enacting the laws and those who are trying to approve the laws and provide for carrying them out, because whatever differences of party there may be, when honest men meet man to man to discuss a subject, the tendency is for them to get together. I think it is very desirable that we should proceed along wise and practical lines toward accomplishing what the Senator from Nevada is trying to accomplish.

I yield, if the Senator from Nevada does, to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I wish to suggest to the Senator from New York, with the permission of the Senator from Nevada, that the weak point he has put his finger upon is one which, to my mind, is absolutely incurable. It may be cured in a degree, but it is absolutely incurable in a Government framed as ours is, upon the theory of three separate departments of Government. It could only be absolutely eradicated in case we had an executive department that was responsible to the legislative department, as almost all civilized Governments of the world have, except our own. Throughout the monarchies of Europe, where they have nominally those whom they call rulers, the legislative department controls the executive department; the executive department is not only responsible to the legislative department, but is absolutely dependent upon it and subservient to it and subject to it. Whenever you have that, then you will have harmony between the executive department and the legislative department, and until you do have it there always will be in a degree the weak situation, the weak spot, the Senator puts his hand on.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield further?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would gladly yield, but I see indications of impatience regarding the matter taking up so much time. However, I will yield. I wish to say a few words more.

Mr. ROOT. I am obliged to the Senator from Nevada, because I wish to say a word in response to the Senator from Georgia. It is a matter of consequence, of serious consequence. I think it is more important that Senators should get their minds to work on this subject than on a good many of the bills that we have coming up.

It is true, as the Senator from Georgia says, that the weaknesses I have spoken about can not be cured under our system, but they can be greatly reduced. The Senator from Georgia and myself belong to different parties, but we have no trouble about bringing our minds into entire harmony in the desire to shape legislation so that it will subserve the good of the country. We are doing it all the time; and we did it when the Senator from Georgia was the ranking Democrat upon the Committee on Foreign Relations and I was in executive office. The fact that there is a political difference does not involve a personal guif. It does not involve a difference in the desires of two officers to attain the same end, and it does not preclude a reconciliation of their views as to the manner in which the end shall be attained.

So I say that we can greatly decrease the difficulty which we meet when there are two different parties, one in control of the legislation and the other executing the laws and standing by and making only formal communication with each other. I hope that we may address ourselves to attempting to decrease the difficulty.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I will take only a moment. I was mistaken when I said only one. President Washington appeared twice in the Senate Chamber; once August 21, 1789, and again on August 24, 1789. It was in connection with the same treaty. I ask that these excerpts from the Executive Journal may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, they will be printed.

The matter referred to is as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE SENATE: The President of the United States will meet the Senate, in the Senate Chamber, at half past 11 o'clock to-morrow, to advise with them on the terms of the treaty to be negotiated with the Southern Indians.

GEO. WASHINGTON.

NEW YORK, August 21, 1789.

EXCERPTS.

[Executive Journal, Aug. 22, 1789.]

The President of the United States came into the Senate Chamber, attended by Gen. Knox, and laid before the Senate the following state of facts, with the questions thereto annexed, for their advice and consent. * * *

[Executive Journal, Aug. 24, 1789.]

The President of the United States being present in the Senate Chamber, attended by Gen. Knox.

Mr. LODGE. Now, one moment further. I will just read the little matter to which I referred, because it is rather interesting in this connection. It is from the diary of John Quincy Adams, page 427, volume 6, November 10, 1824. It will not take me two minutes to read it:

Mr. Crawford told twice over the story of President Washington's having, at an early period of his administration, gone to the Senate with a project of a treaty to be negotiated, and been present at their deliberations upon it. They debated it and proposed alterations, so that when Washington left the Senate Chamber he said he would be damned if he ever went there again. And ever since that time treaties have been negotiated by the Executive before submitting them to the consideration of the Senate.

The President said he had come into the Senate about 18 months after the first organization of the present Government, and then heard that something like this had occurred.

Crawford then repeated the story, varying the words, so as to say that Washington swore he would never go to the Senate again.

I think it is rather an interesting citation. In this connection, of course, it refers to the treaty with the Southern Indians when he was President.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I know the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is impatient to proceed with another matter, and I wish to yield in a moment. I simply wish to reply briefly to the Senator from Georgia and to the Senator from New York. The Senator from New York has opened up a very interesting subject for discussion, but it covers many matters that are not covered by the precise question I am considering now.

We are here in a crisis. We want to adjourn. Both Houses of Congress want reductions in the tariff. The President wants reductions. The President can not under his pledges to his party go as far as the House of Representatives would go. Probably he is not willing to go as far as the Progressive Republicans would be willing to go, but he does say that he is for material reductions and he would gladly sign such bills. It seems to me in that condition the sensible thing to do is to organize the machinery that will bring the President and both Houses of Congress into harmony upon this important question.

The Senator from Massachusetts states that Madison declared that it was his view that he could not come into conference with a committee of the Senate, that the executive department was a coordinate branch of the Government and its only method of communication with Congress was through a message. So far as I am concerned I prefer to follow the example of Washington rather than the example of Madison. The fact must be recalled with reference to Mr. Madison's message to Congress that he was there considering purely a question of appointment, where the President acts with the advice and consent of the Senate.

It is true that the executive department is separate and distinct from the legislative department, but the President is also a part of the legislative department, and certainly if we can provide a method by which two of the three parties responsible for legislation can be brought into harmony, we can provide a method by which all will be brought into harmony.

Does the Senator from Massachusetts mean to intimate that if we should appoint a committee of this kind the President would refuse to meet such a committee? President Madison referred to the fact that the two Houses were brought into conference through committees, and intimated it might be improper for the two bodies to meet in joint conference, but that the proper method would be through committees. If the President prefers to meet us through a committee, let the President appoint a committee of three to meet the committee of conference appointed by the House and the Senate with a view to the adjustment of these differences.

Mr. President, I rarely cite precedents and am not disposed to rely upon them overmuch. I regard precedents generally as a strait-jacket, the purpose of which is to confine freedom of thought and action. I prefer to be guided by reason and principle. This is a common-sense proposition. It appeals to any man of judgment. Where there are three parties whose action is necessary to bring about a beneficial result, and where they all agree that certain legislation is desirable and differ only as to the detail, there should be some method by which they can be brought into consultation and communication with each other and compose their differences.

I hope that the Senate will listen with patience to a suggestion later on of unanimous consent for the purpose of taking a vote upon this common-sense proposition.

I wish to add that the people of the United States have, according to the statement of the President of the United States, within reach to-day a reduction of 20 per cent on wools and an average of 50 per cent on cloths, if I read his message aright. Now, are we to quibble, are we to delay, are we to refine upon matters of constitutional law and customary procedure, when this great benefit to the American people is within reach? I say that such nonaction involves a breach of responsible duty to the people of the United States.

CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed. The special order is the consideration of Senate bill 3315.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3315) to prohibit corporations from making contributions in connection with political elections and to limit the amount of such contributions by individuals or persons, which had been reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert a substitute.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the original bill and the proposed amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill as introduced by Mr. CULBERSON December 5, 1911, as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for any national bank, or any other corporation organized by authority of a law of the United States, to contribute any money or other thing of value in connection with any election to any political office. It shall also be unlawful for any corporation whatever to contribute any money or other thing of value in connection with any election at which electors for President and Vice President of the United States, or a Representative in the Congress of the United States, are to be voted for, or any election by any State legislature of a Senator of the United States. Every corporation which shall make any contribution in violation of this section shall be subject to a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and every officer, director, or agent who shall consent to any contribution by the corporation in violation of the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $250 and not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any individual or person to contribute money or other thing of value exceeding in value $5,000 in connection with any election at which electors for President and Vice President of the United States or a Representative in the Congress of the United States are to be voted for, or any election by any State legislature of a Senator of the United States: Provided, That this section shall not apply to individuals or persons who at such an election are candidates for President, Vice President, Representative, or Senator. Every individual or person who shall make any contribution in violation of the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $5,000 nor more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for a term not less than one year nor more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute reported by the committee will be read.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was going to ask that the law proposed to be amended be read into the RECORD by the Secretary, so that it will appear in connection with the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Does the Senator refer to the act of January 26, 1907?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. I have the law here, and it ought to be read in connection with this proposed measure.

Mr. CULBERSON. After the bill and the proposed amendment are read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After the proposed amendment is read.

Mr. CULBERSON. After the bill and proposed amendment are read, the law to which the Senator from Idaho refers may be read at his suggestion.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have it in mind that, for convenience of reference, they should be in the RECORD together. It is impossible to carry the comparison unless you have them conveniently adjacent in the RECORD.

Mr. CULBERSON. That will be done if the law is printed after the bill and proposed amendment are read.
